FULTON BRAND OF JUSTICE HANDED TO TWO WOMEN

Short, quick work was made by Judge H. J. Wilson yesterday in the cases of Nina Smith and Elizabeth Field who were caught in Sunday night's police raid in a house in Ontario st.

At the afternoon hearing the Judge found the evidence furnished by Chief Dyer and his assistants was so conclusion that the defendants were advised by their counsel, J. R. Somers, to plead guilty, which they did. Judge Wilson sentenced each woman to a 6 months' term in the Oswego county jail.

OLDEST MALE RESIDENT OF SODUS IS DEAD

Sodus, March 9.—George Latimer, the oldest male resident of the town of Sodus, died Sunday in the home of his daughter, Mrs. Abram Felker, oen mile north of this village. He was born here September 5, 1823. His father was one of the defenders of Sodus Point when the British raided the port, June 19, 1813. When the British boats left the Genesee river and came down the lake, headed for Sodus Point, couriers were sent out on horseback and settlers were secured for defense of the port from all points where civilzation had a grip in this section. Asel Latimer was one of the small company, less than 100 volunteers, which frightened the British away, after their hasty raid on the flour, provision and general stores.

ROADS OBEY HEALTH ORDER

Western Lines Won't Ship Cattle from Infected Districts.

Harrisburg, Pa., March 9.—The three railroads that cut across the northwest corner of Pennsylvania from Ohio to New York, which last week were threatened with criminal prosecution if they transported thru this State cattle from territory where foot and mouth disease exists, today informed the State authorities they would comply with the order.

The railroads notified the board they would not accept any more cattle from such territory for shipment through Pennsylvania so long as the board's order stands.

JUDGE ESCAPES CENSURE

Government Drops Germans' Complaint Against Killits.

Toledo, Ohio, March 9.—The complaint made by local Germans against John M. Killits, United States District Judge, has been dismissed by the government. Killits made a speech recently in which he was reported to have said he did not care how soon somebody dropped a thousand bombs on Emperor William's head.

The complaint was filed with President Wilson and asked that the jurist be disciplined.

FOUR REPUBLICANS ELECTED IN MAINE

Portland, Me., Mar. 9.—Elections were held in five cities in Maine yesterday. The only contests were in Bangor, where Frank Robinson, Democrat, was chosen mayor, and in Augusta, where B. S. Viles, heading the Republican ticket, was successful. In the remaining cities the mayors elected are Charles R. Coombs, Republican, in Belfast; Frank H. Nickerson Republican, in Brewer and James G. C. Smith, Democrat, in Biddeford.

FRED T. CAHILL HELD ON 6 BILLS

At late Hour Yesterday Grand Jury Handed Up Indictments; Clients Made Accusations

The arraignment late yesterday afternoon of Frederick T. Cahill of Oswego before Justice Emerson in Supreme Court occasioned a lot of surprise in this city where he is well known. Mr. Cahill plead not guilty to six indictments charging grand larceny and malpractice.

Bail was fixed by the court upon the recommendation of District Attorney Culkin at $1,500, which was immediately furnished Mr. Cahill. Thomas Crowley and Lawrence Clancey furnished the bail bond.

Mr. Cahill was represented by Attorney Thomas L. McKay. The latter entered a plea of not guilty in behalf of his client, and stated that the amount of the bail as fixed by Justice Emerson was satisfactory.

The indictments against Mr. Cahill were handed up by the Grand Jury which sat in connection with the March term of court last week.

The charge of grand larceny, second degree, is made against Mr. Cahill in five of the indictments, while in the sixth the charge of malpractice or professional misconduct is made. In four of the indictments in which the charge of grand larcency is made the name of Mrs. Lizzie Carlton Boudicette is mentioned. The others, charging grand larceny, contains the name of Johanna Jones.

The name of Pearl Mahar is contained in the indictment charging malpractice. In all cases the names of the persons mentioned are said to have been clients of Mr. Cahill.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, March 9.—Public attention is more or less centered at this time upon the legislature at Albany which is wrestling with the problem of alien and citizen labor upon public works. Governor Whitman has already announced his intention of sending to the law-makerrs an emergency message urging the passage of a bill to repeal the alien labor law so as to permit foreigners in New York and other cities to work side by side with naturalized aliens upon the big contracts which either are under construction or which are soon to be.

Advocates of organized labor feel that American citizens should be taken case of first in the distribution of work and they are paturally opposed to the contemplated repeal. Already a delegation composed of representatives of various labor organizations has requested the executive to rescind his declaration that the alein labor law should be repealed.

The governor has taken the position that it will be a difficult matter to construct public works if the alien is discriminated against. He points out that it has been impossible of late to secure a sufficient number of American or naturalised workmen to perform manual labor. Labor representatives maintain that if the wages of the laboring class were to be raised, it would not be a difficult matter to obtain plenty of help upon all construction work desired by the State or a municipality.

Agitation which led to the final enactment of the alien law was first inaugurated in 1894 when a bill was introduced in the legislature and passed by both houses, which discriminated against the employment of aliens upon all public work contracts. Subsequently the bill in question, which became Chapter 622 of the laws of 1894, was declared unconstitutional.

In 1897, a general revision of the Labor law which dealth with the was passed and incorporated into the Labor law which dealth with the question of the employment of alien labor by the state or a municipatity. This section stands today and is the one which it is the desire of the governor to have repealed so that all unemployed may have an equal opportunity to secure work.

The alien labor law, as included in the Labor law under the head of "Preferences in Employment of Persons Upon Public Works" follows:

"In the construction of public works, by the state or a municipality, or of any persons contracting with the state or such municipality, only citizens of the United States shall be employed; and, in all cases where laborers are employed on any such public works, perference shall be given citizens of the State of New York. In each contract for the construction of public works, a provision shall be inserted to the effect that if the provisions of this section are not complied with, the contract shall be void."

It is the general belief that Governor Whitman will adhere to his original intention of urging the repeal of the above section. Having once determined upon a course, the present executive has thus far evinced without fear of dispute, that he will carry it through to completion.

Pressure may be brought to bear upon the legislators to retain the bill providing for the repeal of the alien labor law in committee and possibly organized labor may be able to have the measure defeated when introduced.

ALIEN LABOR LAW REPEALED; VOTE 35 TO 7

Albany, March 9.—Under an emergency message from Governor Whitman, the bill intended to repeal the law prohibiting the employment of aliens on public works passed the Senate last night, 35 to 7. The Assembly did not act on the bill.

Minority Leader Wagner succeeded in putting through an amendment intended to give citizens of New York first call on public work and citizens of the United States second call. In the event that neither of these are vailable, aliens could be employed.

Power to pass on complaints that the law was being violated would remain in the same hands as at present the state labor commissioner, the city of the state comptrollerñ or the public service commission.

Clarence A. Cridle, who has represented the employers here during their efforts to pass the bill, said the amendment was unsatisfactory to him.

"With this amendment included we would be almost as helpless as we are under the present law," he said. "The same opportunity is afforded for tying up work."

Wagner's amendment was daopted after a Senate conference. Prior to that the amendment was agreed upon by Wagner, and Spring and Lawson, the former fathering the bill amended and passed tonight, and the latter having introduced another alien labor bill which was killed.

Party lines were not drawn on the bill, but the seven senators who voted against it, Boylan, Cullen, Doll, Dunnigan, Hamilton, Patten and Sullivan, are Democrats.

U. S. STEEL COMPANIES ARE MAKING BENZOL

Another important step in the direction of clearing the problems of the textile maufacturers of the United States growing out of the cutting off of imports of dyestuffs from Germany following the outbreak of the war, has been taken by several of the large steel companies of this country in establishing plants for the manufacture of benzol. Benzol is one of the most important materials needed for the manufacture of dyes, and the United States heretofore has depended largely upon Germany for its supply.

The Lackawanna Steel Company has just announced that it will open a benzol plant at Buffalo. An official statement from this company says:

"One of the articles for the supply of which this country has largely depended upon Germany is benzol. With a view to making the United States independent in this respect the Lackawanna Steel Company has undertaken the building of a benzol plant, which now is nearing completion. The company has made contracts for the sale of all its output for the entire yéar and expects to derive a handsome profit from the manufacture."

The Republic Iron and Steel Company, another of the independent manufacturers, has just closed arrangements for the construction of a plant costing $300,000, which will be part of its property.

With its usual foresight in developing new lines of business, the United States Steel Corporation also has made arrangements to take advantage of the growing commercial demand for benzol in this country. Through its subsidiary the Carnegie Steel company, it has provided for the construction of a benzol plant at Farrell, Pa. The cost of this will be $350,000 or more.

Large Field for Benzol

In the case of the Cernegie Steel Company, construction of the new plant was not undertaken solely with a view of meeting the demands of dye manufacturers, although the company will be prepared to supply their needs. An official of the company said:

"Even if there were no development of a demand from the dye industry the field for the sale of benzol would be large, as this article is better than gasolene for use in automobile and other engines. If you take into consideration the fact that the tariff has been removed on the German imports in the dye industry, it would seem there would be small chance of profit in competing with the Germans. But benzol has many other uses.

It was explained by an official of the Lackawanna Steel Company that the benzol to be manufactured by the Steel companies is the by-product of coke oven gas. As a coal tar product, the Germans have developed the manufacture of benzol to remarkable completeness. To the textile manufacturer the important consideration is that benzol is the basic material from which are derived aniline and the aniline colors.

The news that the steel companies have taken up, in a thorough way, the making of benzol is of special significance in the textile industry at this time in connection with the recent announcement of the discoveries of Dr. Walter F. Rittman, chemical engineer of the Bureau of Mines, who, in a series of experimental researches at Columbia University, developed a process for the manufacture of toluol and benzol from crude petroleum.

Mr. Redfield, the Secretary of Commerce, last week called attention to the danger of a complete cutting off of dyestuff imports from Germany through the need of benzol as a motor fuel in that country.

THOMPSON BILL PERMITS WHITMAN TO NAME SUBS

Albany, March 9.—A bill for the reorganization of the two Public Service Commissions was introduced in the Senate last night by George F. Thompson of Niagara, chairman of the committee that is investigating the Public Service boards.

Senator Thompson's bill is not a committee measure, but was given to him to introduce by Elon R. Brown, the Republican floor leader. It is presumably a Republican majority measure to be passed later under caucus rule.

The proposed reorganization of the public service commissions, both the New York city one and the up-State board, is to be effected not by the dismissal of the present commissions in their entirety, but by authorizing Governor Whitman to make two substitutions of new men on each board, in addition to filling the one vacancy in each board that now exists.

Maltbie in New York and Decker in the up-State commission are holdovers whose places the Governor would fill in any event. Besides naming successors to baltbie and Decker Governor Whitman is empowered by the Thompson bill to remove two democrats in each board and appoint their ssuccessors.

SAWDUST TRAIL HIT BY 615 PRINCETON MEN

Princeton, March 9.—When Billy Sunday called for converts at the close of two services before students of Princeton University and Princeton Theological Seminary at Princeton, N. J., Sunday, 615 college men hit the sawdust trail of repentance and shook the evangelist by the hand.

Sunday suddenly broke off in the middle of his prayer to shout to his hearers, whose heads were bowed in devotion:

"How many of you fellers'll come up to me and say, 'Bill, I'll go on the square, and here's my hand that by the grace of God, I'll live my life for God? How many'll do that for Jesus Christ? Come on boys, come on."

The college men raised their heads uncertainly, wavered, and then, under Billy's urging, surged forward to shake his hand. Sunday's accountants clocked off 615 on their markers before the last man filed past.

Sunday cornered the 615 "saved" souls, told them to write home to their mothers oftener and prayed for the salvation of Dr. John Grier Hibben, president of Princeton University, who had refused to Sunday the use of the University buildings in which to speak.

CHARLES A. BALDWIN DECLARED LEGALLY DEAD

Oswego, March 9.—Alleging that her father, Charles A. Baldwin, left his home in Volney on the afternoon of August 12, 1904, and had never since been heard from, his daughter, Rida E. Baldwin, of Volney, yesterday asked the Surrogate to make an order declaring him judicially dead and to grant her letters of administration on his estate, amounting to $130 personal property. Special Surrogate D. Page Morehouse, acting for Surrogate Miller, granted the letters.

Attorney Giles S. Piper, who appeared for the daughter, set forth in his petition that Mr. Baldwin, who left in an intoxicated condition, had never been seen since four o'clock on the afternoon of that day, when he was walking East. Della Baldwin Trimble, who was then his wife and has since remarried, made affidavit to the same facts.

Letters were asked on the estate of Charles Wrirght, Volney, who left $100 personal and $1,000 real, and on the estate of Harvey N. Herriman, Sandy Creek, who left $100 personal and $1,500 real all to his wife, Martha C. Herriman.

An affidavit of the executor, William H. Quigley, that the net value was but $2,622.53, the estate of Catherine F. Woods was exempted from payment of the transfer tax. A sistes, Margaret Quigley, received $874.21; surviving children of a sister, Bridget, $97.13 each, and surviving children of another sister, $174.83 each.

The inventory of the estate of S. M. Coon showed $5,272.44 personal property.

Letters were asked on the estate of Charles B. Woodard, who died in this city February 16. He left $3,500 personal.

IN SUPREME COURT

The Case of John LaMoya Against Henry P. Burgard on Trial

Oswego, March 9.—Supreme Court was reconvened by Justice Emerson at noon yesterday, the case of John La Moya vs. Henry P. Burgard going to trial. Plaintiff was injured on the barge canal work and asks damages in the sum of [illegible] is his attorney, while F. E. Cullen represents the defendants.

The defense does not admit that LaMoya worked for Mr. Burgard and insists that No. 335, which he claims to be on the books of the company, is another man.

The case of William A. Winder vs. Charrles Davis went off the calendar and the case of T. P. Kingsforrd vs. J. A. Culkin et al. went over the term.

Granted a New Trial

An order made by Justice Crouch, filed in the County Clerk's office today, grants a new trial in the case of the Huggins Lumber Company vs. Homer J. Phelps and Earl L. Miller, in which a jury at the January term found for the defendants.

UNDERWOOD PUBLISHES FARM BUREAU NEWS

A new form has been given by the Oswego County Farm Bureau to its usual monthly letter, in the shape of a neat folder in the form of a newspaper, named Oswego Farm Bureau News. E. Victor Underwood is editor, with offices in the Oswego Chamber of Commerce rooms; M. L. Moran of Parish is president; C. S. Lockwood of Hannibal, secretary; Russell Quome, of Sriba, treasurer.

The publication is interesting throughout is four pages and should merit the patronage of the people in whose midst it circulates.

Umpire Quigley must have thought he was having a dream of summertime the other night when he was mobbed by the students of the University of Missouri on account of alleged poor decision in a basketball contest.

STAR CATCHER OF GIANTS DOWNED

Marlin, Texas, March 9.—The cold wave that continues to distribute a lot of chill about Emerson Park made yesterday another poor practice day for the Giants. Clad in sweaters, the athletes batted a few balls and managed to get some warmth in their bodies by playing handball and football. To sessions were held, but they were short. The pitchers were given a full holiday. "Eddie" Holloway says he expects to leave soon for his home, at Corsicana. He recently was operated on for a minor trouble, but his physician advises him against playing baseball sooner than March 20. Holloway is compelled to go on crutches.

"Chief" Meyers will be kept out of practice for a few days, as he is complaining of an attack of la grippe. Meyers says he was never put to bed before by illness of any kind.

Emilio Palmero is still a missing link in the Giants' chain of athletes. McGraw has not heard from him and he is long overdue. t has developed that other Cubans have failed to report to their camps, and for what purpose they are holding out is unknown.

It is expected that the 'Bob' Bescher case will remain in statu quo until Harry Hempsted arrives. It is thought that Bescher will go with the Cardinals if given a contract to his liking as to length of term and amount of salary.

ADVERTISING SENSE

The proprietor of a large store in London says:

¶ "When war broke out our firm ceased advertising and the employes went on short time. Noting that our competitors were also not advertising, two months before Christmas our firm launched out once more. Orders rolled in, the staff were put on overtime and the last two months of 1914 were record ones for business."

About Sports Generally

By Frank G. Menke

The fight game in New York, from the promoters' viewpoint, is very much on the blink. The show Corporation, which conducts bouts in Madison Square Garden, is about the only one in Gotham that is making money, and it's profits are somewhat skinny as to size.

Outside of the Garden there is no club that can pack in more than 2,000 fans. The gross income from such a house is around $3,000. Present day fighters won't enter the ring for puffing sums and about 83 per cent. of the gross income goes to the battlers. The other 17 per cent.—and after about 10 per cent. in addition, are eaten up by lighting bills, rent, advertising and other expenses.

In the majority of the clubs in and around New York city the capacity is 1,000 admissions—and less. The clubs cannot draw a big enough house to pay for star scrappers, so they stage second and third raters. The fans won't pay big prices to see such fighters, perform. $1.00 and $2.00 is the limit. That means about $1,400 gross for a club that can accommodate about 800 persons. Most fighters these days—even to the joke "white hopes"—want about that much for their appearance.

Yes, indeed, the boxing game is another division of the professional athletics when the performer gets about 99 per cent. of the gold dust.

A St. Louis statistician has figured it out that the sole game won in 1914 by Pitcher Leverenz cost the Browns $4,200—probably the most costly victory in the history of baseball.

Leverenz was wanted by the Feds. They offered 4,000 Kopecs. Leverenz was a star performer in 1913 and the Browns didn't want to let him get away. So they raised the ante $200 and Leverenz signed upat $4,200 for the 1914 season.

Leverenz won exactly one game in attempting to earn his keep. He started the season with ten straight defeats. Then he performed in one game of a double header against the White Sox on September 16th and came home in front. He pitched in other games later in the season but was beaten every time.

Yinkling, a pitcher, went from the Brooklyn Dodgers to the Cincinnati Reds last spring in a trade. Just prior to that Owner Ebbets, of the Dodgers, had signed up Yinkling for three years at a fancy salary. The contract was an iron clad one and the Red management assumed it.

Yinkling fell down miserably in 1914 and the Reds asked for waivers on him. None of the clubs in the American or National League wanted him. Neither did any of the International League or the the American Association. None wanted to assume that war-time salary contract.

It finally was arranged for Yinkling to go to Salt Lake, that club to pay him a certain salary and the Cincinnati club to make up the difference. And then Yinkling, decided he didn't want to go to Salk Lake City.

The Red management is in a quandry. It must pay Yinkling his salary for the next two years whether he doesn't, It can't palm Yinkling off on anyone else because no one wants Yinkling at his present salary. And Yinkling won't go to clubs that are located in towns that he doesn't like.

It would be a rather odd happening if the Reds, unable to dispose of Yinkling, were forced to keep him and for Yinkling to turn right around and pitch marvelous baseball. Stranger things have happened.

Yinkling is a good pitcher. He showed up well with the Dodgers despite poor support. And that boy Yinkling is a natural hitter. He led the National League batters in 1913 with an average of .383 in 40 games.

HOT LINERS

By Frank G. Menke

Pat Moran, manager of the Phillies is somewhat embarrassed by a lack of picthers, for it retards batting practice at them training camp. Moran can't waste men like Alexander and Mayer on tossing to hitters. Pat could use two or three youthful curvers for this kind of work to good advantage. The Phils have infielders and catchers by the gross, but are shy of outfielders and pitchers.

The Boston Braves' new grounds will be without a "sun field." The grounds will be laid out facing the northeast. The playing field will be sunk fifteen below the street.

Manager John A. Zeller of the Pittsfield baseball club, has received signed contracts from Ralph W. Hyatt, outfielder; Paul Sherman and Otto J. Rettig, pitchers, and Dennis J. Sabourin, of Montreal, an outfielder. Sabourin comes from the Montreal City League, from whence came Duchenil, the speedy spit ball artist, who flashed through here last season and went to the Boston Americans.

The Western Tri-State has definitely decided not to operate this season, and the players formerly with the four clubs that composed the organization are free to land jobs where they can.

Absolutely nothing will remain in Baltimore of the International League but a memory. The park used by Jack Dunn and his Orioles is to be cut up into building lots. The ground was owned by Ned Hanlon, who bought it, with that upon which the Federal park also stands, several years ago. Jack Dunn had a lease on the plot he used, but made arrangements for surrendering it when his club was transferred to Richmond.

A new circuit, which will qualify as Class D under the protection of the National Association, has been formed in Iowa. Six cities are expected to be in the circuit, as follows: Centerville, Albia, Ottumwa, Oskoloosa, Bloomfield, in Iowa, and Unionville, in Missouri, Oskoloosa and Ottumwa have had minor league experience before but it will be new to the others. A salary limit of $900 a month is proposed and the season is to open May 15 and end September 1.

A-team mate of no less a personage than Hank Gowdy will make his break into profesional ball this season. He is Chester Blue of Maryville, Ohio, and he is a shortstop. During the winter he played basketball on Gowdy's five. Last summer he played semi-pro ball, and in fifty-eight games against teams in the Middle West accumulated a battling average of .340. He is 21 years of age.

Only six members of last years' team will be retained by Owner George M. Cameron, of the New Haven Eastern Association Club. this season. The list of lucky players contains Outfielder Barr, Third Bassman Sherwood, Catcher Angermier and Pitchers Ramsey, Jensen and Lower. Jensen is supposed to have been sold to the Philadelphia Athletics. Among the veterans likely to figure in a trade is Joe Pepe, the shortstop. In his place Clyde Robinson, last season with Waterbury, has been signed.

Married on St. Patrick's Day

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

There is no calling that would seem to cause so much suffering from sympathy as a person employed in a manufactory or on a railroad to break the news to an operative's family that he has been killed. Where there are a large number of employees there is usually such a person, for there is a certain percentage of workmen killed every year.

Kathleen O'Rourke and Patrick Cogian met at a ball on the evening of St. Patrick's day, and Pat had asked her to dance with him many times. Afterward he invited her to go to a moving picture show with him. From that time forward they were together when not at work, and it was evident they were about to make a match.

But Pat had a mother to support, and Kathleen, who was an orphan, was a mother to a little brother and a sister. So they couldn't marry until they had laid up something. They both worked in the same factory, and each lived in a house built on the premises by the company to be used for homes for its employees. So they saw a great deal of each other.

They agreed that when their wedding occurred it should take place on the anniversary of their meeting, which was the evening before St. Patrick's day. When this first anniversary came around Pat had saved $400, and Kathleen had saved $300, and they decided that if they did as well the next year they would be married the evening before St. Patrick's day.

On the first of the year they counted up their savings and interest and concluded that with their nest egg they might be married and have enough for themselves and those dependent upon them. Kathleen bought what clothes she would need to last a year after her marriage, and in due time the banns were published in church. Finding it inconvenient to be married on the very day they had planned, March 16, they set their wedding day for the 15th. This was partly because Pat was one of the committee of arrangements for the St. Patrick's day parade and was to lead his society on that occasion.

When the hour came for the wedding Pat did not appear. Kathleen, dressed in her bridal apparel, waited for him with a wildly beating heart lest something had happened to him. She went to the door a dozen times to look for him and finally stationed herself at a window where she could look up the street on which the workmen's cottages were built.

Presently she saw Owen MacTavish coming. MacTavish was known to every one connected with the plant as the company's bad news breaker, and many a woman's heart beat quick when she saw him approaching her house. Kathleen no sooner saw him coming than she fancied he would stop at her home to tell her that Pat had been killed. Before he reached the door she had fallen in a swoon.

Now, MacTavish did not stop at the O'Rourke cottage and was unconscious that he had frightened a girl there into a swoon. Kathleen was picked up by her friends, who had gathered to attend her to the church for the wedding. When she came to herself she looked about, dreading to see the bad news breaker, but he was not there.

"Is he gone?" she asked.

"Who gone?"

"MacTavish."

"He hasn't been here."

"And Pat isn't dead?"

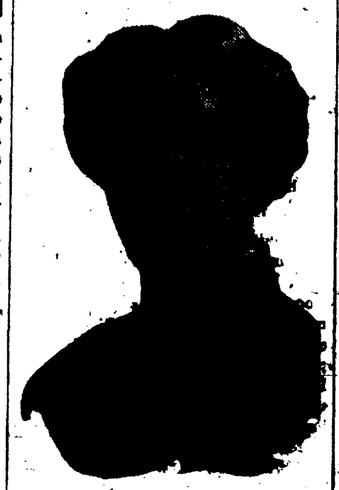
"Nobody's heard of his being dead."

"Thanks be to God."

But Pat did not appear, and no one seemed to have any news of him. Word was sent to the company's office to inquire for him, but no information was elicited.

Kathleen for awhile gave herself up to grief. She was uncertain whether Pat had met with foul play or whether he had deserted her. It would have been easier for the poor girl if she had known which of the two suppositions was correct, for it would have relieved her somewhat of suspense.

When St. Patrick's day in the morning came round Kathleen made up her mind that her lover had deserted her and with true Irish grit declared that there were as good fish in the sea as ever were caught. Then the children asked her to take them to see the parade, and she consented—not that she wished to do so, but that she did not care to disappoint them.



They were all standing on a stoop where they could see the parade over the heads of others, and the societies were moving past when who should appear marching at the head of one of them but Pat. He saw Kathleen, but she gave him a withering look and turned her back to him. Relinquishing the command to another, he left the ranks and joined her.

This was Pat's explanation of his conduct: An accident had occurred at a mine owned by the company some miles away, and a rescue party was leaving on a train. Pat was ordered aboard and, instead of being married, was engaged in digging out buried miners. He returned on the morning of St. Patrick's day only in time to take his place in the parade.

It required some time to placate the maid, for she thought Pat might have at least sent her word as to what had happened, but the fact that he had been the means of saving the lives of a number of miners finally induced her to forgive him and go with him that afternoon to the church.

Woman's World

A Practical Movement to Aid the Woman on the Farm.

MRS. BELLE VAN DORN HARBERT.

The International Congress of Farm Women is an organization of women who have caught the vision of an ideal life on the farm. They know the hardships which farm women have endured in the past, and they are anxious to brighten the lives and widen the horizon of all women similarly placed.

The American division of the farm women's movement was organized at Colorado Springs in October, 1911, coordinate with the Dry Farming congress. It is now united with many other great national congresses, making one great international union in which twenty-eight nations are represented.

The organization is interested in inviting the national and state governments to recognize the needs of farm women. The dangers of the rapid growth of cities, with the accompanying decrease of rural dwellers, is being studied. The doctrine of thrift and the nobility of labor are preached in the hope of encouraging a "back to the farm" movement. Unbiased experiments with modern inventions, calculated to save labor in farmhouses, are being carried out, and an effort is made to make it possible for farm women to discriminate between the useless and valuable ones. The congress is also interested in the development of consolidated schools and in encouraging teaching of domestic science and practical housekeeping.

The leader in this useful movement and the president of the organization is Mrs. Belle Van Dorn Harbert of Manzanola, Colo., a woman of charming personality and wide human sympathy. Mrs. Harbert has made a study of the questions affecting the welfare of women on the farm and has been wonderfully successful in interesting them in the movement.

Colored Embroideries.

There is a great deal of embroidery worn—chiffon worked with a loose, coarse floss—with the happiest results, but we have to accustom our eyes to the bright colors. Red and blue are introduced together on tan and green, and purple on yellow, while yellow and red find favor.

Cookery Points

Dainty School Sandwiches.

Following are a few delicious sandwiches that will doubtless prove a welcome addition to the school lunch box of any boy or girl:

Olive Sandwiches.—Slightly butter thin slices of whole wheat bread; moisten chopped olives with mayonnaise dressing and spread upon the buttered slices; spread other slices with cream cheese and press together in pairs.

Peanut Sandwiches.—Chop freshly roasted peanuts; pound them in a mortar until smooth and season with salt. Serve on lettuce leaf between buttered white bread.

Fruit Sandwiches.—Cut bread, white, brown and graham, as thin as possible. Use four or five pieces in each sandwich, putting them together so that the colors will contrast. Apple butter, peanut butter, honey or jam, spread thin, may be used as filling.

Fig Sandwiches.—Chop one fourth of a pound of figs fine, add one fourth of a cup of water, cook to a smooth paste. Add a few almonds, chopped fine. When cold spread the mixture upon whole wheat bread. Raisins, dates or marmalade may be used in place of the figs. The marmalade, of course, requires no cooking.

Fancy Cheese Sandwich.—Spread fresh bread with butter; over this spread a layer of Brie or other cream cheese, and over the cheese spread a layer of honey. Press two similarly shaped pieces together and serve at once.

Facts About Soup.

Soups cannot be made in a hurry.

All remnants of meat, bones, bacon rind, and left over bits of meat of every description may be used to make stock, which is the foundation of all soups.

Never allow stock or soup to cool in the saucepan. The liquid should be poured off and strained into an earthenware bowl.

The bones should be boiled for two or three hours and all the scum removed before the vegetables are added, which should be simmered until tender.

Casserole Cookery.

After buying it fill it with cold water and a little soda, put it in the oven and let it remain there till the water is nearly boiling. This will cleanse it thoroughly and make it last much longer.

If you use a gas oven put the casserole in while it is still quite cool. If you suddenly put it into a very fierce oven the casserole may crack.

Be careful where you place the casserole when taking it out of the oven. If it is stood in the cold sink or any other cold place it may crack.

If you remember these few hints your casserole will last you many years and you will find it exceedingly useful.

Baking Hints.

Do not cover rising bread in bowls and tins with a dry cloth. Instead cover with a damp cloth which has been wrung out in warm water. In cold weather the damp cloth should be placed over a dry cloth.

As a result the dough will not dry on the top, and the loaves when baked will be much more uniform. To prevent holes appearing in brown bread prick twice with a needle, once when loaves are placed in tins and once immediately before the loaves are placed in the oven.

For Bread Makers.

Bread must always be made in a warm place, and all the ingredients must be warmed before they are combined. This is particularly important when you are making yeast bread.

Yeast is a little plant which begins to grow when it finds itself in a warm, damp place, and as it grows it puffs up the flour and makes the bread light. If you let it get cold you will stop its growth.

Eggs En Cocotte.

Butter firepoof cups and put two tablespoonfuls of cream into each; then on this carefully break a newly laid egg. Sprinkle a little salt, pepper and chopped parsley on the top. Place the cups in a pan of water which comes halfway up the cups and put a piece of buttered paper over the top. Allow them to steam till the eggs are just set; then serve immediately in the cups.

Potatoes For Rheumatism.

A noted Danish food expert claims that an exclusive diet of potatoes is excellent for eliminating the uric acid responsible for the pangs of rheumatism, but he says that to be curative the potatoes must be well chewed and also well buttered to supply the fat needed by the patient.

When Cakes Stick.

When cakes stick to the pan stand for a few minutes on a damp tea towel or cloth, and the cakes will then turn out easily without breaking.

With the Latest Improvements

By NELLIE B. RANSOM.

Dorothy Allen sat on the broad, white pillared porch watching the road that wound between the trees to the village. She had watched the road a great deal during the last few days, at first with happy anticipation, but now with helpless longing.

It was bad enough in the daytime, but it was worse when it grew too dark to see who was coming along the road, for then the footsteps grew louder and louder until she was certain that they were going to turn toward the white pillared porch, only to die away again, leaving her sick with fresh disappointment.

On the previous Sunday evening the vague, beautiful something which had enveloped the whole summer, making it different from any other summer of Dorothy's life, had suddenly taken definite form. A look, a touch, a word or two, and she had found herself without a doubt that John Porter loved her and that she loved him, but he had gone away without any open declaration, and, though Dorothy had watched the road till her eyes ached, he had not returned.

"I might have known it," she said to herself disconsolately. "He is too proud and independent to ask the daughter of a rich man to marry him. Now that his work on the new electric road is finished he will go away, and I shall never see him again."

Dorothy's neighbor, twelve-year-old Gladys, came skipping across the lawn, a very perky pink bow topping her yellow tresses. She perched herself on the broad arm of Dorothy's chair.

"I've been reading such a lovely story!" she exclaimed.

"What was it about?" queried Dorothy, with languid interest.

"Oh, it was about a brave knight in shining armor," said Gladys, "and he loved a fair and noble lady, who loved him in return. But she had gold and jewels and all that sort of thing, you know, and he hadn't a thing but his charger and his good sword, and so he could never, never ask her to marry him."

"Well," asked Dorothy as Gladys paused for breath, "what happened then?"

"Oh," replied Gladys, "there was nothing for the knight to do but to ride away to the wars, and the princess just sat in her tower and pined and pined till at last she died. Oh, it was perfectly lovely—so sad and sweet!"

"It seems to me," said Dorothy almost crossly, "that it would have been much more sensible for the knight to stay and marry the lady instead of leaving her to pine and die."

"Why," cried Gladys in disgust, "that would have spoiled the whole story."

She jumped from her perch and was dancing down the steps, but turned to call back:

"Oh, say, that Mr. Porter has gone away, hasn't he? I saw him at the station Monday with a suit case in his hand. Aren't his eyes just too handsome for anything? I'm sorry he has gone, aren't you?"

Then, having unwittingly destroyed Dorothy's last vestige of hope, Gladys cheerfully departed.

A gray haired man with a keen but kindly face came and stood in the doorway behind Dorothy, noting with an anxious look her drooping figure. He moved uneasily once or twice and then came out to where she was sitting.

"You ought to be playing golf this fine weather," he suggested.

"I'm rather tired of golf, father," replied Dorothy.

Mr. Allen took a turn up and down the porch.

"I really don't know. Probably he has," replied the girl, sitting very straight and assuming an air even more carefully careless than that of her father.

Mr. Allen after a few more turns and anxious sidelong glances betook himself again to the house. Since the death of Dorothy's mother ten years before the bond of sympathy and understanding between him and his only child had grown unusually strong, but here was a situation which he felt in no wise competent to handle.

Left to herself, Dorothy's sprightly indifference suddenly vanished. Her hands fell listlessly in her lap, and she leaned her head wearily against the back of her chair. So he had gone without even coming to say goodby! Well, there was no use watching the road any longer.

"It's just like Gladys' story," she sighed. "The knight has gone to fight his battles, leaving the poor princess in the castle to pine alone, only, being a twentieth century princess instead of a medieval one, I'm afraid I can't die of love. Girls never do nowadays. I suppose that's one of the modern improvements," she continued whimsically.

An endless procession of dreary years seemed to stretch out before her. She shut her eyes, and two large tears glistened on the long dark lashes.

Some one was coming across the lawn, but the footsteps made no sound on the thick turf. When they began to ascend the steps Dorothy opened her eyes with a start, and John Porter stood before her.

There was a wonderfully tender light in his eyes and a determined expression about his mouth. How handsome he looked! How tall and strong he was! Dorothy caught her breath.

"I thought you had gone away," she managed to say.

"Only down to the junction to meet the chief engineer. He wanted to talk over my next job with me. It's a little bigger than anything I've ever undertaken before. But you didn't think I'd go without seeing you again, did you, Dorothy, after Sunday night?"

"Dorothy," he said, "I know it's the general opinion that a man has no right to ask a girl with a rich father to marry him until he can provide for her the things she has been accustomed to having, but it seems to me that if a girl really cared for a man she could be happy with him even if she had to do without some of the things she'd been used to."

"I wonder," thought Dorothy, "if it can be possible that the hero has modern improvements too."

But she kept her eyes on the big silver buckles, and John Porter continued speaking with deliberate conviction. "And that is why I dare to tell you that you can afford to give up some of the things that money can buy and come and share with me the things that can't be bought. Will you come, Dorothy?"

"Yes," said Dorothy, meeting his look squarely at last, "I will come."

Half an hour later they remembered Dorothy's father.

"He will never allow you to marry me," cried John Porter, "a common builder of roads!"

"A rising young engineer," corrected Dorothy. "Come on. I'll manage papa."

"Papa," she announced, pushing aside the portiere with one hand and drawing her lover after her with the other, "I'm going to marry Mr. Porter."

Mr. Allen roused himself from the depths of a leather chair where he had been taking an afternoon nap, started a little at the sight of the young man and looked quizzically at his daughter.

"Your prospects for doing so certainly look a little brighter than they have for the past few days," he remarked. "Where have you been keeping yourself, Mr. Porter? Dorothy and I had about concluded that you were too busy 'doing things' to give us any attention. But if Dorothy has made up her mind to marry you you may as well submit first as last. Do you think you can support her?"

"Not in the style to which she has been accustomed," said John Porter. "But she is willing to dispense with luxuries."

"When I married Dorothy's mother," said Mr. Allen, "she had a little money, which I invested, and after her death I put the investment in Dorothy's name without saying anything to her about it. It's really surprising how that little sum has grown. The income from it is now quite considerable." He named a sum more than twice John Porter's salary. "I should think this, added to your present income, might provide for love in a cottage"—

"With all the modern improvements!" said Dorothy softly, with shining eyes.

Illiteracy Among Children.

Illiteracy in the United States is doomed. Statistics compiled by the United States bureau of education show that of children from ten to fourteen years of age there were in 1910 only twenty-two out of every thousand who could neither read nor write. In 1900 there were of the same class forty-two per thousand. If reduction in illiteracy is still proceeding at even the same rate the illiterate children in this country between the ages of ten and fourteen inclusive now number not more than fifteen out of every thousand.

Car Weight and Tire Pressure.

That the pressure in an automobile tire, fully pumped up, remains practically the same whether the car is resting on the tires or is jacked up is the discovery made by one of the large rubber companies in an endeavor to solve some questions of "caring for tires while the car is laid up," says the Scientific American. It was found by means of special gauges that in an ordinary sized tires, which shows a pressure of eighty pounds while the car is jacked up, it will show 80.4 pounds with the weight of the car resting on the tires. The cubic contents are compressed by "flattening" from 900 cubic inches to 896 cubic inches.

Test the Valve Springs.

After a car has been in use a long time it may happen that the exhaust valve springs weaken to such an extent as to interfere with slow running and prevent high engine speeds. Slow running is affected by the valve lifting by suction on the induction stroke. High engine speeds are prevented by the valve failing to close quickly enough. Therefore, when endeavoring to increase the efficiency of an old car or when overhauling an engine, the testing of the valve springs should not be overlooked.

Picked Up at Sea

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

We were sailing on the Australian coast when a boat was espied by the lookout. She was an ordinary ship's lifeboat, open, and was dancing merrily on the waves in the bright sunlight. When she came nearer we counted nine men in her. She was heading for us, and the captain gave an order to slow down. As soon as she came alongside a man in the bow hailed us and asked us to take them aboard.

The captain questioned them, and they told him that they were members of the crew of a ship that had collided with another in a fog and had gone to the bottom. He asked how long ago that was and they said a week. Then he asked what had become of the officers and the rest of the crew and was told that they had gone down with the ship. There was only time to get out the one boat before she sank.

The story didn't appeal to the captain as being likely, but he could not refuse to take the men aboard and did so. As soon as they came aboard we saw that their faces were by no means attractive. They asked our captain for what port he was bound and when he said Melbourne I noticed that on the faces of some of them was a scared look, while others seemed to be saying to themselves, "Not if we can prevent it."

I made up my mind that the men were mutineers and had either been put off a ship or sunk a ship or something of the kind, but when they were put to work they showed such ignorance of everything nautical that I changed my opinion. That they were not what they purported to be was evident, but what they were we had no means of knowing.

Our ship was a small steamer, not needing a numerous crew. We usually carried eighteen men, including captain and mate, I being mate, but now we were reduced to twelve.

One evening one of our regular crew came to me and told me that the strangers had taken weapons from the ship's armory and hidden them in the hold. The captain was asleep in his cabin at the time, and I preferred to act on the information rather than wake him up. He was a headstrong man and was liable to give our enemies the advantage by some rash act.

I sent for the man who had been spokesman when we met them and asked him whether he and his men preferred to make some other port than Melbourne. He admitted that they would, but when I asked him where they would like to put in he said that they preferred not to stop at an Australian port at all. I told him to consult with his mates as to what they wanted and let me know.

I did this to put the strangers on their guard and gain time. It was evident, from their not wishing to go ashore in Australian territory, that they were criminals. After consulting with the others the leader came back and told me that they would like to be put out in a large boat we carried which was rigged with a sail and in part decked over. Of course they would need to be provisioned.

This was a dead giveaway on their part and showed that they were desperate, for they had no knowledge of navigation and would be at the mercy of the winds and waters. I pretended to accede to their request and directed that they come on deck and get the boat ready to be lowered. As soon as they went to work I sent men to collect the weapons they had stolen. When this was done I stationed men in different parts of the vessel, all armed. Then I began to send the strangers in different directions for different articles they would need on their voyage. Some were sent for provisions, some for water, some for blankets, some for fuel.

I first ordered their spokesman, who was leader as well, to take two men with him and go down to the hold for some salt pork. He obeyed and three out of the nine men went below not to reappear again, for as soon as they got into the dark hold hands were clapped on their mouths and they were removed to the brig. As soon as it was reported to me that they had been secured I sent two more men to the sail room for canvas. They, too, were secured, and within twenty minutes from the time they had started to get the boat ready I had them all under lock and key.

When the captain appeared on deck the next morning and I told him that the strangers had stolen arms he looked serious. Then when I told him that I had the men secured he was astonished, not being able to understand how he could have slept through a mutiny. Finally when I gave him my plan and the manner of its accomplishment he reprimanded me for acting without his orders.

A few days later we reached port. I went to the municipal office and stated the case, to be told that nine persons serving terms at a prison near the coast had escaped. A boat was missing, and it was supposed they had taken it and put to sea. Government officers were looking for them, but thus far had seen nothing of them.

The men were taken in charge by the police and returned to the prison. Their leader told me before leaving that they had planned to take the ship the very night I executed the plan that resulted in their capture.

TOWNS FOR WAR VICTIMS.

Belgian Refugees in Holland Are Housed in Structures of New Design.

A new Belgian town in Gelderland about five minutes' walk from the picturesque village of Nunspect, has arisen as if by magic. It has more inhabitants than any other in the Veluwe, the well wooded, hilly heathland of the province of Gelderland.

The town is one of the cities of refuge for the Belgian fugitives that are being or have been constructed in various parts of Holland, and this particular place is made ready for a population of 13,000. A large tract of heather grown soil has been fenced in with barbed wire, and within this inclosure has been built a town of wooden buildings, a town in three parts, each separated from the others by long, wide stretches of heather.

The wooden sheds have double walls to exclude cold and are covered with plates of a newly invented material that is impervious to the wet. Each building can shelter 250 persons, who sleep in little rooms designed for five persons each. The buildings are heated by huge stoves.

Meals are served in great common dining rooms for 1,000 persons each, with long tables and benches alongside. These dining sheds stand close to the kitchen, where ten big stoves are kept going all day for cooking. No separate cooking is allowed in the living and sleeping buildings and no smoking either—all for fear of a possible fire, which might have most disastrous consequences in this town of timber. The town is electrically lighted.

Another large refugee town for 10,000 people is being built at Ede, also in Gelderland, and other camps are to be made in other healthful localities, for it has been found absolutely necessary to evacuate the first fugitive camps, those in north Brabant, Zeeland and Limburg.

In a kind of way the Belgians in these refuge towns govern themselves, although the burgomaster is appointed by the Dutch government. Under him stand the several parish priests, who know their flocks, having fled with them to Holland. The priests choose trustworthy men to keep order in the various sections and to be spokesmen for the people if they have anything to request. Every day the burgomaster makes the rounds of his town himself, and any one that wishes may speak to him personally.

A Utilities Bureau.

Preliminary plans for the organization of a vast national agency through which all American cities may co-operate in exchanging information about public utilities were made recently in Philadelphia when the trustees appointed at the recent convention of American mayors in that city held their first meeting. After perfecting their own organization the trustees, who include men of national reputation, outlined the activities which will be essayed in 1915 by the new utilities bureau, an organization which, with its tremendous scope, is expected to lead to a fairer adjustment of public utility rates and service throughout the country.

In general the organization will serve as a national agency, in which American cities may co-operate in exchanging data as to rates, service standards and cost factors in municipal utilities.

Improved Gas Illumination.

Owing to the numerous improvements, the intensity of gas illumination today runs to 5,000 candle power and over in single burners.

The gas is also distributed under much higher pressure than formerly. The city of Berlin has systems in operation as high as seventeen and a half pounds per square inch. This pressure is obtained by the use of blowers.

Another practice employed abroad is to light whole sections of the city simultaneously. This is accomplished by an automatic lighter for each lamppost, which are caused to operate by slight changes in the pressure. These changes are in the mains and are controlled from a central point. The lights are extinguished simultaneously by the same method.

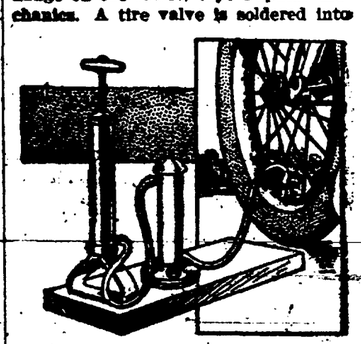
PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

High Blood Pressure.

Sufferers from high blood pressure must lead a quiet life, free from excitement and strain. The diet must be kept free from stimulating foods and drinks. One must give up eating red meats, drinking coffee and alcoholic beverages. A moderate diet of green vegetables, fruits, cereals, nuts, eggs and bacon (sparingly), bread, milk, butter and fruits will be all the food needed if the pressure is high and there is true arteriosclerosis. If the blood pressure is high from other causes the above diet is not sufficient, except as an occasional treatment, two or three times a year. Baths must be taken to make the skin act (exciting perspiration and relieving high blood pressure) every day. A hot bath at bedtime and a hot lemonade after one is in bed will excite free perspiration. Moderate daily exercise, fresh air and sunshine will relieve all cases of high blood pressure. A patient's life should be regulated by the physician having him under observation. Seemingly the favorable cases improve and live comfortably for many years under careful treatment.

POPULAR MECHANICS

Diamonds by Electricity.



Guyot de Boismenu has produced diamonds by electricity. He discovered first that fused carbide could be decomposed by current. He fed carbide fragments slowly into the furnace, gradually withdrawing the electrodes. At the end of four hours the crucible held about six pounds of melted carbide. For the next two hours an intense current was maintained. Then the current was broken and the mass allowed to cool. In the center of the mass was found a finely crystallized carbide and near the negative electrode a black friable mass. Thrown into water this last gave off carbide dust and some crystals of pure carbon dust or diamonds. Experiments have shown that the size of the carbons increases with the duration of the current. As yet Boismenu has not been able to keep this up over twelve hours.—Edison Monthly.

Bending Copper Pipe.

Before a gasoline or oil pipe is bent it should be annealed either at the part to be bent or for its whole length. To anneal or soften copper it should be heated to a dull red and then rapidly cooled by being dipped into cold water. If the bend is to be a very sharp one the tube must be filled with some solid substance which melts easily. Rosin is generally used, but lead may be employed, and even if the tube is filled tightly with sand and the ends plugged pinching and kinking of the tube will be prevented to a great extent.—Automobile Dealer.

Tire Mending Device.

The device herewith shown is designed to inject puncture sealing compounds into pneumatic tires. The body of the injector consists of a piece of two inch pipe eight inches long, with a cap screwed on the upper end and a flange on the lower, says Popular Mechanics. A tire valve is soldered into a hole drilled in the pipe near the upper end and a piece of one-eighth inch pipe screwed into a tapped hole at the bottom. The cylinder is mounted on a base of hard wood that is large enough for a foot pump also. To fill the cylinder, the upper cap is unscrewed. When the cap is replaced a pressure is put on the fluid, after attaching a hose between the small outlet pipe and the tire valve.

Pumping Tires.

If tires are old judgment must be used in maintaining the normal pressure. If two strands of the fabric are left, however, the pressure of twenty pounds per inch of diameter may be maintained. Every effort should be made to keep moisture from the fabric of the rubber. Tire cement is useful in keeping moisture out of the cracks and is not very expensive. There is little danger of having too high a pressure on a new tire, as every average sized tire is tested to 200 pounds before being sold.

Exhaust Gases Are Poisonous.

That an engine should not be run for any length of time in a small close room is indicated when an examination of the exhaust gases shows that the products of combustion and partial combustion which are thrown off through the muffler are often very poisonous when not freely diluted with air. Mixing with air in proper proportions is not possible in the small closed room, and extra precaution should be taken to have the engine room thoroughly ventilated.

Nonrusting Steel.

According to Consul John M. Savage, who is stationed at Sheffield, England, a firm in that city has introduced a stainless steel, which is claimed to be nonrusting, unstainable and untarnishable. This steel is said to be especially adaptable for table cutlery, as the original polish is maintained after use, even when brought in contact with the most acid foods, and it requires only ordinary washing to cleanse.

Extracting Tar From Gas.

Electricity is being employed with success at a Détroit coke oven for the purpose of removing tar from artificial gas in the purifying process. The gas is passed through a highly ionized field, which is produced by a high tension discharge of current ranging as high as 80,000 volts, with the result that the tar forms in large drops, which are then easily separated.

Driving Heavy Cars.

It is well to remember that a car with great weight and long wheel base requires much strength, judgment and carefulness to drive it safely. Its great momentum when in motion calls for foresight; its weight makes it needful to keep out of soft places and deep ruts.

A Painting Hint.

Never use a turpentine substitute in exterior paints, as it will cause trouble with future painting.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE CAMPAIGN

"BURY THE HATCHET—EVERYBODY'S DOING IT"

COMMUNITY SOLIDARITY

Fulton has many individual groups working for the betterment of the community. The force obtainable by these groups speaking through a strong centralized organization is incalculable.

Fulton has lacked the advantage which comes from community solidarity. We are now about to develop this force through the building up of a representative association of business men and citizens of the Chamber of Commerce.

The very beginning of such a movement creates an atmosphere of enterprise. It establishes confidence in the future of the city—and confidence is the foundation upon which all business is built. Such a movement spreads the new spirit of enterprise, energy, enthusiasm, and broad vision.

N. L. Whitaker.

Wilson Tells Us We Fail to Realize Possibilities

President Penfield of the Chamber of Commerce announced the presence of Mr. Wilson and called upon Mr. O. Henderson, Fulton's "youngest old citizen" for a speech. Mr. Henderson arose and with a most happy expression upon his countenance expressed himself thoroughly in sympathy with the occasion and, too with the movement for a better Fulton. He was applauded heartily by the assembly.

Mr. Wilson when introduced came directly to the point and spoke in even well chosen phrases of the worth that civic betterment campaigns have held for many cities.

"If these other cities have been hoodwinked into believing they have been helped and you alone are clear visioned, then we shall find the truth," said Mr. Wilson.

He also stated that in Detroit on a like occasion to this luncheon only thirty-two had responded to the call. This city had a population of 500,000. "Then," questioned Mr. Wilson, if one hundred and eighty representatives are here today, what is the population of Fulton?"

The greatest thought back of this campaign, suggested the speaker, is find what it is all about. The work must grow step by step after the vision is obtained as to the true purpose, and the vision must come first, "For", said Mr. Wilson, "where there is no vision the people perish."

In speaking further he said:

"The citizen must be able to understand the interests of the community, must be able to subordinate his own will to the general will, must feel his responsibility to the community and bep repared to serve it by voting, by working, or, if need be, by making sacrifices."

With these words Lucius E. Wilson, of the American City Bureau, closed one of the most remarkable addresses ever heard in Fulton. This was at the first noon luncheon of the Chamber of Commerce at the Hotel Clark this noon. The talk took hardly thirty minutes. But it was thirty minutes of straight-from-the-shoulder, man-to-man talk such as no speaker from another community has ever dared to utter in Fulton. It was thirty minutes of sound sense and analytic exposition of the causes and effects of one kind or another of civic spirit.

"It is generally conceded," said Mr. Wilson at one part of his talk, "that the great need in Fulton today is co-operation instead of a general tendency toward divergence. A successful Fulton business man said to me this morning:

"'I have been engaged in business in Fulton for nearly twenty years. I have yet for the first time to hear any resident of the city wish me success. Everything that I have accomplished has been accomplished by fighting, by opposing, and by closing my ears and pushing forward.'

"These words," commented Mr. Wilson, "might truthfully be reiterated by other business men in Fulton. Those who have succeeded have grimly battled against this prevailing spirit of "sink or swim, live or die, survive or perish.' Those who have failed have left the city feeling that it is a poor place in which to live. They were wrong, absolutely wrong. Fulton is a good city. But it has been lacking in that co-operation which would have made men who failed to go away with the spirit of good losers.

"All the co-operation in the world cannot make a poor business man succeed. Neither can opposition and indifference make the good business man fail. But the poor business man will fare better and the good business man will prosper on a larger scale if the spirit of co-operation predominates.

"If you are a true citizen of Fulton, you are interested in the development of Fulton. If you are interested in the development of Fulton, you are interested in what the Chamber of Commerce can do for this city. The Chamber of Commerce needs your support. Fulton needs your support. Without it the city cannot offer you all that it should in the way of protection and privileges for yourself, your family, and your property.

"It costs nothing to be for your home town. On the other hand, every time you go on record as being against your home town, you are checking out dollars from your own bank account.

"You try to have things as they should be in your home. You should be equally fastidious about the city in which you live. You are a part of your home. Why not be a part of your city?

"Fulton has natural advantages which make its possibilities practically unlimited. Through its woolen mill it is known the world over. Through its paper mills it is brought into direct touch with every part of the civilized world. Its milk supplies the tables of Syracuse and New York city. Its location is ideal. It has unsurpassed transportation facilities. It has advantages on every hand.

"The fundamental principle of progress, since time immemorial, has been to learn how to utilize the natural advantages which already exist. This is all that stands between Fulton and perpetual progress. Once its people have been awakened and converted into citizens, it will come up out of the slump state and be a factor in the world. Fulton can become a great city. It can become great through the spirit of co-operation."

A luncheon will be served at noon again tomorrow at The Clark and Manager McQuade announces still greater preparations will be made then for the late or unexpected guests.

GREATEST WAR FLEET IN HISTORY GUARDING THE SULTAN'S CAPITAL

RUSSIANS AND ALLIES CLOSING ON TURKS' CAPITAL

Russia's Black Sea fleet has bombarded Zunguldiak, a coaling station for the Turkish war ships on the south shore of the sea, 168 miles east of Constantinople, destroying the coal chutes and the docks and silencing the batteries which defended them. Eregli (or Bender Eregli), another coaling port, forty miles further west, the Heraclea of the ancients, was also bombarded by the Russian fleet, which is slowly moving along towards the Bosphorus. At the same time, while the Dardanelles are stopped by the greater part of the allied fleet, other British and French war ships are destroying the Turkish fortifications, batteries andsupply stations on the Aegean sea coast of Asia Minor as far south as Smyrna. Batteries on Besika Bay, north of Dekili, in the Gulf of Adramyti and at Availik and fort Yeni Kale, at the entrance to the Gulf of Smyrna. The East Indian squadron, under Rear Admiral Sir Richard Peirse, is shelling the Turkish batteries on the hills back of Smyrna, preparatory to occupying the city.

GERMANS AVOID BATTLE TO SAVE 120,000 MEN of the Russian war zone show the Germans and Austrians manoevring for delay. They are striving to gain time to avoid a great pitched battle which the Russians hope to force on them.

Two German armies in the north now have retreated completely across their earlier lines of advance on Kovno and Grodno. Through otu their occupation of a strip of land adjoining the left bank of the River Niemen their automobiles scoured the country for horse forage, but the Russians had removed everything, and the Germans could only burn down empty barns. Since Saturday they have been withdrawing their heviest calibre artillery from the bombardment of Ossowetz, and operations there now are dying down to an occasional shelling from the big guns.

The character of the German retirement, however, still leaves the possibility that the Russians will be able to engage them in battle under conditions somewhat similar to those at Przasnysz, in the coutnry above Lomza, and possibly along the line of Kolno-Stchuchin.

"With the Germans moving from their bases at Johannisburg and Lyck it is believed that there are about 150,000 Germans in this triangle between Lomza and the East Prussian frontier, which is about the number of their defeated army at Przasnyz. It is of the utmost importance for the Germans to get their Niemen army, which is retreating chiefly through the Suwalki region, back into permanent positions among the Masurian lakes before the Russians are able to cut through the frontier line from the south.

Stubborn, lingering efforts by a single German corps against Ossowetz doubtless is also for the purpose of enabling its northern partners to move westward toward safety. This retreating army from Grodno is estimated to number about 120,000, but the Germans still have at least 350,000 unengaged troops along their line of frontier railway far to the west of Soldau. The real danger to General von Eichorn's army would be to compel this force to accept battle from the Russians.

In separate, sharp battle on both sides of the middle Pilica, in central Poland, the Germans on Saturday, Sunday and yesterday were checked decisively. They probably engaged in this battle with an aim to making the retreat from the Niemen more honorable and also to feel out whether it would be possible to develop a new line of attack in Poland below the exhausted intrenchments on the Bzura and the Rawka.

Reducing Black Sea Forts, Russians Cut Off Turkish Coal In Dardanelles Crisis

Gathered in the waters in the vicinity of the Dardanelles and the coast of Asia Minor battering its way foot by foot to the Golden Horn is the greatest fleet joined in action in the history of the world. The number of units, including the destroyer and submarine flotillas and the supply and nother non-fighting vessels, totals more than eighty, representing Great Britain, France and Russia, with Vice Admiral Sir Sackville Hamilton Carden, of the British navy, in supreme command. It is interesting to note that two of the great ships engaged would practicall balance on the scales the entire 132 ships, with their 59,190 tons, composing the famous Spanish armada.

FLEET INCREASED; NEW GUNS GOING ABOARD SHIPS

Frederick Rennet, the Daily News' correspondent, telegraphs from Petrograd:

"The Russians appreciate the immediate connection between the successful bombardment ofthe Turkish forts on the southwest coast of the Black Sea with the operations of the Allies in the Dardanelles. The collieries of Zunguldiak, the head workings of which were destroyed by the shells of Russian war ships, furnished the Turkish fleet with the only native supply of coal. Coal at Constantinople is scarcer even than ammunition. The other coast forts destroyed were built for the defence of the collieries."

Reinforcement of the Allies' vessels now engaged in forcing a passage through the Dardanelles to Constantinople brings the fleet to remarkable proportions. The latest battle ship is described as of the Queen Elizabeth class, and it is known that more war ships are engaged than have been mentioned in the dispatches.

Fall of three forts, one on the European and two on the Asiatic side of the narrows, adds to British confidence that the straits leading to the Sea of Marmora and Constantinople will be forced, although it is conceded that some British losses will be the price of victory. Neither it is believed here in London that the passage will be cleared quickly. British guns, however, are proving adequate to silence the Turks' 14-inch armament. It is probable that all the ships will have to be fitted with new guns and the old ones overhauled more or less completely.

As a result of the heavy and continuous bombardment of the Turkish forts the ammunition problem has become serious. Vast quantities are being consumed, and the government is casting about to supply more arms and ammunition in the Turkish theatre.

Already the Greeks find themselves in the midst of a Ministerial crisis of grave character as an outcome of the operations of the allied fleet in th Dardenelles, while a similar state of affairs is reported from Bulgaria. In addition to its military and economic aspects, the threatened forcing of the straits is having a tremendous effect on the Ottoman power and also upon the neighbors of Turkey as well.

In Bulgaria it is said the Premier is demanding intervention on the side of the Allies, in opposition to the wishes of King Kerdinand, who, it is declared, desires to remain neutral for the present at least.

Mr. Gounaris has undertaken to form a Cabinet in Greece to succeed that of Mr. Venizelos and threatens to dissolve Parliament if that body does not indorse his policy of frientdly neutrality toward the Alies. It is believed in official circles here, however, that the people will force the Greek government to intervene and that Mr. Venizelos will soon be recalled to the Premiership.

One of the most important and interesting reports came from Petrograd, declaring that the bombardment by the Russians of Zunguldiak, on the south shore of the Black sea, and the destruction of the docks there, as announced by the Russian naval authorities yesterday, constitutes a serious blow to the Turkish fleet, since it is from this point that the Turks hitherto have drawn their chief supply of coal for the navy. It is reported semi-officially that in addition to silencing the batteries which defended the docks the Russian fleet also destroyed the coal chutes.

Benderegli, or Eregli, forty miles to the west, which is another coaling port, also was damaged.

The only damage to the Russian fleet during the bombardment of Zunguldiak was a slight injury to the cruiser Almaz, which was struck by a 6-inch shell. Three soldiers were wounded. The cruiser's machinery was not damaged.

With the evident intention of distracting the Russian advance into Turkish Amenia from Batoum to the valley of the Tchoruk, the Turks have started a movement in the vicinity of Hhoi, in northwestern Persia, to the west of Tabriz. The Russian authorities attach little importance to this move, believing that the melting snows and swollen rivers in his region will impede the progress of the Turks and preclude the possibility of their turning the left flank of the Russian Caucasian army.

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

BOB A SCOUT

BEFORE Bob joined the scouts, why, he was careless as could be—he seldom was on time for school and studied lazily. He used to tease the neighbor's dog and throw stones at the cat, and never could that youngster find his necktie or his hat. He used to hate to go to bed and get up in the morn; he kept his mother busy mending stockings badly torn. He used to run our errands with a sort of surly air, and had a way about him that bespoke, "Oh, I don't care!" He often caused his teacher lots of trouble at the school; nor did he try at very hard to keep the Golden Rule. His room was in disorder and he flung his things about, but things are very different since Bob became a scout. Since Bob became a scout, why, he is tidy as can be. He's always right on time for school, his room is orderly. His hat hangs always on its peg; he studies with a vim. It seems the uniform he wears caused quite a change in him. He gets up early in the morn to work around the yard. He does our errands with a will and no task is too hard. He seems to love all animals and treats them very kind—a better boy than Bob-bie would be very hard to find. He proudly throws his shoulders back and walks with manly thread; his eyes are bright and sparkling, and his cheeks are healthy red. A sudden change came over Bob—it's hard to figure out—but things are very different since Bob became a scout.

"THE LITTLE CAFE"

The biggest of all musical comedies, "The Little Cafe," which comes to The Quirk Friday, March 12, one performance only, has comedy and musical allurements that attract large audiences. The last was emphasized nightly by large audiences in New York where it ran for nearly a year. This great success has that sprightly quality in its music and joyousness of comedy spirit that appeals to all theatregoers. The original company of over 70 people that helped to make it a success on Broadway remains intact and the original production is to be seen here. The chorus is one of the most beautiful in musical comedy. During the engagement of "The Little Cafe" the curtain will rise promptly at 8 p.m.

WHAT DO YOU OWE TO FULTON?

The Evening Times Puts the Query to Many Read What They Say

"Do you believe that Fulton owes a living to you? Or do you believe that you owe something to Fulton?"

This question was asked by a representative of The Evening Times to representative men in various lines of professional and business activity in this city. In each case the man of whom the question was asked was selected as a representative of his business or profession. The answers, varied as they are, may therefore be considered presumptive evidence of the new spirit being inculcated in the citizens of Fulton through the present movement for a large, new Chamber of Commerce.

The Merchant's Answer

The question was first asked of a merchant. "As was stated in one of the newspapers the other day," replied the merchant, "there are two ways of increasing our business. One is by taking business away from our competitors; the other is by creating more business than now exists. There are two ways in which business may be created without injuring competition. First, by growth of population, and second, by increasing the purchasing power of each individual. The community worth living in will attract more population, and the population that is fundamentally prosperous will increase in purchasing power. Both of these factors depend to a large extent upon the development of the community as a whole. This, in turn, can be brought about only by a strong Chamber of Commerce or a similar body working for the common welfare. Since, in the last analysis, my prosperity as a merchant depends upon the success of the commercial organization, I distinctly owe something to Fulton far in excess of what Futon owes me. I, therefore, shall always desire to have an active interest in the Chamber of Commerce."

The Attorney

The question was next put to a practicing attorney, a man past middle age who is commonly reputed to have made a considerable success in the practice of his profession. "For some reason which I have not yet been able to discover," said the attorney, "lawyers in some communities, of which I fear that Fulton is one, have not taken the interest in the Chamber of Commerce which they should. The lawyer, no less than the retailer, is dependent upon the growth of a community for the increase which he expects in his practice. It is just as necessary for the lawyer to extend his acquaintanceship and the extent of his practice as it is for any other professional or business man. What is more, the lawyer, the architect, the physician, the dentist—all of us professional men, in fact, are dependent to a large degree upon our acquaintance with the leading men in the city. These men are members of the Chamber of Commerce. If we are successful lawyers, they have done much for us, and we owe much to the cause in which they are interested. If we are just starting out in our professional work, we need them. We need the benefits which result from their efforts. We cannot repay them in money; we can repay them through our service to the community at large. If all lawyers, old and young, would appreciate this fundamental truth, most of them I am sure would do as I have done in joining the new Chamber of Commerce."

The Physician

A physician who is widely known in this section of the State as authority in one branch of his profession, was shown the answer made by the lawyer to the question, What do you owe to Fulton? "Everything," replied the physician, "we owe everything to our city. The reputable physician could not remain in the profession if it were not for the orderly growth of the community. There must be adequate administration of the law and there must be a decrease in the social unrest which harms professional men no less than it does the business world. We physicians have an obligation to fulfill in maintaining the confidence of the people at large in the established institutions. In fulfilling our responsibilities we must acquaint ourselves with the life of the whole city, we must establish a systematic relationship with other classes. We must develop mutual esteem. The only way for us to do this is through the Chamber of Commerce, which represents the public at large and which in so doing acts as a clearing house for the public and the various interests in the city. For myself I owe much to Fulton. I should be less of a citizen than I want to acknowledge if I did not as a representative of my profession take a full interest in the work of the commercial organization."

The Minister

A minister of a downtown church was asked his answer to the question. "Briefly," he replied, "ministers are generally classed as, and they themselves like to be called part of the constructive-minded body of the city. We are constantly striving for the upbuilding of the social, moral and religious fabric. The more we accomplish, the more is expected of us. The more we achieve, the more we owe to the community. The more we set out to do, the more dependent we find ourselves upon the men of the city at large. In order to avail ourselves of the vision of these men, we owe it to ourselves to associate with them in every way possible. We therefore owe it to our city to join in the activities of the Chamber of Commerce."

The Teacher

The principal of a grammar school was asked the question. "How can we teach," he replied, "if we do not know? How can we educate a youthful citizenship if we do not participate in the social and civic activities of our city? It would be the blind leading the blind. As teachers we must know what is being thought and planned and done for the upbuilding of our city. A Chamber of Commerce properly organized is the clearing house for information of this kind. In order to be the sort of a teacher that I owe it to my employer, the city of Fulton, to be I must be an active member in the Chamber of Commerce. I can't see that this is not true of every other teacher in this city."

The Property-Owner

A large property-owner was next asked the question. He replied: "The owner of real estate owes much to the community. He may be slow in acknowledging the debt, but he knows that the value of city real estate is made by the community and not by the individual. Every enterprising man in the city helps enhance the value of his real estate. When I recently rented one of my properties as a cigar store I was able to secure what some people term an exorbitant rent because of the number of people who passed that corner. I did not bring those people to that corner. It was the growth of the city. If our people remain as enterprising during the next decade as they have been during the past years, the value of my property, without any help from myself, will greatly increase. For this I owe much to Fulton. The least that I can do is to subscribe for the number of memberships which I have taken in the new Chamber of Commerce."

The Machinist

A machinist in one of the local mills, who had joined the Chamber of Commerce, was asked whether he believes that he owes something to Fulton. "Yes," he replied, "our company has done much for us workers in improving the conditions in the mill and by what is commonly known as welfare work. But what is more to the point with me is the fact that I can own my little home and live comfortably and do this in Fulton within my income. I can even put away a little for a rainy day, and if the Chamber of Commerce in the future helps to do as much to improve the condition of the working man and to prevent causes for dispute I owe the organization my membership. And what is more, as soon as my boy becomes old enough I want him to take my place and grow up to feel as I do about this matter."

The Manufacturer

A manufacturer who was asked the question replied: "For even the skillful manufacturer the greatest problem is that of labor. Labor must be kept contented. This can be done only by providing parks, playgrounds, wholesome recreation, good living conditions at reasonable cost, and similar factors which count more with all of us than do mere dollars and cents in the form of wages. The Chamber of Commerce in the past has done much to foster the right relationship between employers and employes in Fulton. It is worth much to all manufacturers to have the community organized through the Chamber of Commerce to continue this feature of its work. Through the number of subscriptions which I have made to the organization I am able to requite in part my obligation."

The Citizen at Large

The question was last asked of a man who calls himself a citizen at large. "Yes," he said, "even I, without a dollar of investment in Fulton or in this county, nevertheless owe something to this city. For my friends it is furnishing business and employment. For me it is providing friends and entertainment, schools and churches, drives and parks, and means of contact with the world. These things come along in such a matter of fact way that many of us are almost unconscious of them. Yet each requires the co-operation of many men for its complete accomplishment, and is better done as the co-operation is centered in a strong Chamber of Commerce. It is this new spirit of co-operation which I like best about the present movement for the Chamber of Commerce. The spirit being engendered through this campaign is more valuable to Fulton than the material benefit to be derived. Every citizen who can afford to be a member should enroll."

"Free Advertising Which I Have Not Sought"—Mr. Joslyn

Editor Fulton Times:

I wish to commend the article published in last night's Times over the signature, H. L. Gilman, in so far as it relates to me. The article does me no slander. It is true that I am a Methodist from my head down and from my feet up. It is also true that I am receiving a lot of free advertising, which may not be fair to the other merchants of the city.

One week ago last Saturday, there appeared in The Evening Times an article written by me and published over my signature, asking certain questions. Since then my name has appeared frequently in print in connection with articles that in no way except in one instance, as I remember, had any bearing on the question propounded by me.

I here state that none of the articles appearing since Saturday, February 27, in The Evening Times was either written or instigated by me and the frequent use of my name in print is distasteful to me. I have said I never would consent to a publication of any writing of mine, except over my signature, but since my name has become distasteful in the public print, I hereby request the editor of The Evening Times that he reserve for me the Nom de Plume, "The Man with a Conscience."

Respectfully submitted,
EDWARD JOSLIN.

EXCISE TAX BASED ON SALES FAVORED

Albany, N. Y.—Something revolutionary, indeed, in the way of an excise tax is being discussed seriously by legislative leaders and by the Governor.

It provides for a license fee based on the amount of liquor or other intoxicants sold. The method of taxation has always been to fix a flat sum for a license, and it made no difference whether a saloon keeper or hotel keeper sold a barrel or a million barrels.

The state officials have been seeking diligently for methods to increase the revenue of the State, and in addition to revising the motor vehicle tax so as to swell the funds from that source, have concluded that there must be an increased revenue from the excise department.

It was at first proposed that the license fee be increased in all communities where there is a population of more than 3,000, but this suggestion met with opposition all around. It is asserted now that the Governor is inclined to favor a new basis of taxation which would not only increase the revenue but take the largest sums from those who make the largest profits. The effect of the proposition to tax the gross sales would hit the cities hardest. New York city, which now pays approximately 5 per cent. of all the taxes of the State, would pay an added excise tax.

No decision has been reached with regard to the excise readjustment, but it is known that the matter has been gone over thoroughly and the indications are now that within a short time a bill will be introduced taxing the output rather than the prirvilege of selling intoxicants. Its effect would be felt keenly by some of the big hotels and restaurants in New York city.

Opinions

Payrolls Shrinking

Secretary Hugo's separation from the state payroll of twenty employes in his office with the incidental saving of $30,000 is right in line with the policy enunciated by Governor Whitman in his special message to the legislature on the subject of the financial condition of the State. It is also right in line with the policy of retrenchment inaugurated by Mr. Hugo when he assumed his present office. What may happen later is indicated by the statement made by the secretary of state: "My inquiry about the office will continue and if there are others who are not needed they too are to go." The State will be a great deal better off when its payroll contains only the names of enough employes to transact the legimate business of the departments.—Republican, Lyons.

Have Had to Raise Rates

The element in Congress that is agitating for governership of the railroads will do well to study the result of Australia's experience in that direction. Government ownership was really forced there because the population was so scanty that private capital could not be induced to accept the hazards of investment in railroads. The latest reports of the railway department of the six Australian states and of New Zealand, as summarized, show that for the last two years the tendency has been "for working expenses to increase in greater proportion than gross earnings." This is precisely the situation of the railroads in the United States. But while an increase in rates in the United States was granted grudgingly and after a long delay, in the states of Autralia freight and passenger rates have both been increased promptly to augment revenues. In New South Wales alone the increases will cost the people about $2,000,000 a year. Crop failures last year caused hard times, and railroad business has been steadily falling off during the last few months. Consequently, further rate advances are staring the people in the face at a time when they will feel the burden the most.—Democrat-Chronicle, Rochester.

Higher Education in Prisons

"Remember, my poor friend," said a prison chaplain to an inmate of a cell, according to the Dallas News, "that stone walls do not a prison make, nor iron bars a cage," to which the prisoner responded, "Well, they have me hypnotized; that's all."

And yet if the efforts of those bent on ameliorating the rigors of prison life are to go on unrestricted the time may very soon come when the outlaw may look forward to a life in State's prison with the longing with which the man who overworks regards the approach of Saturday night.

Religion has been temporarily barred from the State Prison of Oregon and moving pictures substituted for the sermon. A night school has been introduced in Sing Sing Prison, and music is incuded in the curriculum.

We venture to say that soon there will be a general movement to compel the liberation of the prisoners so that others not so pleasantly situated may take their places and have the advantages of indoor life. Certainly the time is at hand when the hardships of prison life will be suffered by the keepers and not by the convicts. Philanthropy gone mad.—Herald N. Y.

MINUTES IN MANHATTAN

By Gotham Knickerbocker

International News Service Special Dispatch

It's no great trick for a man to get a lot of free meals in New York in one day, without paying a cent for them, by merely working the bread lines—if he has cast iron legs and feet.

All he's got to do to attain this gastronomical fullness is walk about 800 blocks, which means about forty miles, and be able to make long jumps of from twenty to fifty blocks in a trifle under nothing flat.

As a matter of fact, there are about ten free meals in New York—not counting the penny soup kitchens and coffee stands—that a man who is flat broke can get in one day, if he can walk like a streak of lightning and be in two places at the same time.

There are six regularly established bread lines for men where food is given out every day. They are located at various points from Bowery to East 123d street, and serve their patrons at practically the same hours. It is a physical impossibility to walk around to all of them in time to get something to eat. A reporter barely managed to do it by using the subway and the elevated, and, in fact, a few minutes late the Knickerbocker and but for the kindness of a policeman would not have got any frankfurter and coffee and bread.

If a man tried to walk around to all of the bread lines and get a meal at each one, here is about what he would have to do:

Supposing that he slept up town and wanted to get his breakfast in the bread line maintained by the East Side Neighborhood Settlement in No. 441 East 123d street. From 8 to 9 o'clock in the morning the bread liners are served there with coffee, rolls and cake; from 11 to 12 they are served with bread, soup and a meat stew, and the same is given them from 4 to 5. The seeker after a gastronomical record eats his breakfast here, say at 8 o'clock, and gets through at 8:30—and that is hardly possible, unless he is first in line.

Having had first meal, the record seeker starts for the next bread line. The nearest one where breakfast is served is in No. 229 East Broadway, operated by the Hebrew Shelter and Immigrant Society. The East Broadway bread line is open for breakfast from 7 to 9. Therefore, the man who wants another breakfast must walk from No. 441 East 123d street to No. 229 East Broadway—about 150 blocks, or, roughly, seven miles—in thirty minutes. It would be some walking!

But suppose he performs the impossible and gets to East Broadway before 9 o'clock. There he gets coffee, butter and bread, and then there's nothing for him to eat, no bread lines open, until 11 o'clock, when the one in East 123d street opens for lunch and runs until 12 o'clock. The East Broadway bread line opens at 11:30 and is in operation until 2 o'clock. If the seeker after the many meals wants to eat at both places it is obvious that he has to eat at the East 123d street line first. Therefore he must walk his 150 blocks to the bread line where he got his breakfast; get his soup and stew, and then walk back 150 blocks to the East Broadway line and be there by 2 o'clock. In three hours, then, he must walk fourteen miles, stand in line anywhere from half an hour to an hour, and eat two meals. If he does it he will have walked twenty-one miles and have eaten four meals between 7 o'clock in the morning and 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

At 2 o'clock the record seeker is at No. 229 East Broadway. Two bread lines open at 2 o'clock, one at the Knickerbocker Hotel, Broadway and Forty-first street, and one in No. 295 Bowery, operated by the New York Sun and the Hadley Rescue Mission. This latter is the largest bread line in the city, about 2,500 men being fed there each day.

A man who gets on the end of the long line at 2 or 2:30 sometimes doesn't get his food until nearly 4. Being in East Broadway, the man who is after all the free meals obviously would eat in the Bowery bread line first. He must, therefore, walk about thirty or forty blocks—a mile and a half—to the Bowery bread line. Reaching there, it will be assumed, promptly at 2 o'clock, he gets a good position in the front ranks. As a matter of fact, this could not be done, for the Bowery bread liners come early.

Yesterday morning there were 300 men in line by 11 o'clock. But the meal hunter is fortunate and gets his loaf of bread and coffee and is through eating at 2:30 o'clock. The next bread line in order then is the Knickerbocker, at Broadway and Forty-first street. He must walk about forty or fifty blocks—fully two miles—and reach there by 4 o'clock in order to get something to eat. In reality there is slight chance if a man doesn't get in line by 3 or shortly after. Several hundred men who joined the line at 3:30 and 3:45 yesterday were unable to get any food.

But if the meal hunter gets his frankfurter and coffee and bread at the Knickerbockerr the next chances he has for meals are in East 123d street and No. 229 East Broadway. He is closer to the former, so he walks about ninety blocks—four miles and a half—to get some soup and bread and stew.

But he must get there by 5 o'clock, for the bread line goes out of business then. He reaches the place, all right, and eats. Then, if he wanted to eat again he must walk to No. 229 East Broadway, where he had lunch—150 blocks, or seven miles—and must get there by 7:30 o'clock, when this bread line closes for the night.

That is the last dinner he can get, and his next chance for food comes at 10 o'clock, when the Fleischmann bread line opens at Broadway and Twelfth street. The meal hunter walks about sixty blocks, or three miles, gets his bread and coffee, and then walks back about two miles to the Bowery Mission bread line in No 227 Bowery, which runs from 11 o'clock to midnight. Having eaten there, he can go to sleep, which he probably would need more than anything else to eat.

POMONA GRANGE NEW LAWS

Movement Disapproving of Increased Compensation for Supervisors Attending Extra Sessions

Oswego County Pomona Grange held its regular meeting in Oswego yesterday. The following officers, elected last December, were installed: Master, J. H. Mace, Fulton; Overseer, L. D. Beardsley, Fulton; Lecturer, Mrs. Ida L. Edick, Parish; Steward, John Trumbull, Pulaski; Assistant Steward, John Echard, Hannibal; Chaplain Mrs. Oscar Greene, West Monroe; Treasurer, W. C. Hubbard, Fulton; Secretary, Mrs. C. B. Jones, Lacona; Gatekeeper, F. E. Rounds, Oswego, R. F. D., 7; Ceres, Flora Mrs. Eva L. Colwell, Oswego, R. F. D., 5; L. A. S., Miss Edith Gregg, Pennellville; County Deputy, E. H. Benedict, Phoenix.

In the morning session the officers were installed and general business transacted. Several bills coming up before the State Legislature and affecting the farmer were discussed. The following resolution, presented by W. W. Rounds, of Oswego Town, was adopted after some little debate.

"Whereas, A bill has been introduced into the Assembly, known as bill No. 664, to abolish the Department of Food and Markets; and

"Whereas, The same is of untold value to the farmer, it is the consensus of opinion of this Pomona Grange that this Department should be continued and an appropriation made for its maintenance."

The Grange also went on record as being against all bills favoring increased salaries for the Board of Supervisors. W. W. Rounds took the floor on this proposition and told of the fees now received by the Supervisors, and stated that the present system of fee and salary bothis an injustice to the public.

"Why don't they come out flat-footed and ask for what they want," said Mr. Rounds hotly, "instead of beating around the bush."

Other members spoke of the illegal methods now employed by Supervisors in getting extra session money.

"They are not entitled to fees when they hold special sessions and if the law is amended as proposed there will be nothing to prevent frequent special sessions."

A resolution was passed against everything in the line of special fees and extra salaries. About two hundred Pomonas were there and at noon they adjourned until two o'clock.

At the afternoon session Professor Adams, of the agricultural school of Cornell University, gave a talk on "What science and education have done for the farmer towards the advancement of his crops." Professor Adams is an authority on all matters pertaining to Agriculture and his address was listened to with interest.

F. E. Alexander, of Pulaski, of the Legislative Committee, has worked hard during the quarterly session of the Grange, in session here today, pushing forward for adoption the resolution offered for the advancement of the farmer and his interests which may be affected by the acts of the Legislature.

The Grange went on record giving a vote of thanks to those who helped make the State Grange meeting recently held here a success. They also wished to co-operate in every way with the local Farm Bureau, and E. Victor Underwood, manager of the Farm Bureau, attended the morning session and aided Pomona Grange in every way. Co-operation is the by-word of the Farm Bureau and Pomona Grange from now on.

Mr. W. W. Rounds suggested that Pomona Grange take a more active interest in politics than it has in the past.

Animals No Longer "Stuffed."

Animals in the national museum are no longer stuffed, but a careful plaster cast of the subject is made and the skin is then stretched, glued and sewed over it in a manner that almost defies detection, and results in a remarkably lifelike representation. To add further to the illusion animals are presented in their natural environment and surrounded by natural foliage. They are often arranged in family groups, so that something more than an impression of how an isolated specimen looks can be obtained. Much care and pains were expended in the arrangement of the natural backgrounds. —Popular Science.

The Wonderful Electric Stove

Within Reach of All Does Every Kind of Cooking Perfectly

First of all, it is a perfect stove. By electricity it bakes, roasts, stews, fries, boils, better than coal, wood or gas stoves.

Anybody can afford it. It is strongly built for heavy duty—blue polished steel with nickel plated corners oven finished with special aluminum rust-proof prepartion.

It completely satisfies the cooking requirements of moderate sized families. The oven has a capacity of 3 loaves of bread, 2 pies, a 10-lb. roast, or 2 layerr cakes. With the oven removed, the two open range burners make possible frying, stewing, coffee making, etc.

Cook with electricity. It is clean, absolutely safe, makes perfect delicious dishes possible, and gives you much more leisure than do other stoves.

War: Pathos and Humor

French Dash Wins Back Lost Trench

Paris, March 10.—The manner in which a furious German attack at Notre Dame de Lorette was transformed into a defeat, in which 3,000 Germans fell, is described in the Petit Parisien by one of the combatants.

"The Germans blew in by mines our first line of trenches," says the story. "Before the echoes of the explosion had died away an avalanche of Germans poured down and forced the French into the second line of trenches, after a fierce hand-to-hand struggle. The Germans suddenly raked the trenches with two machine guns, forcing the defenders into the third line, from which they were forced to ertire on an easily defensive position in the rear after another bayonet battle with superior numbers.

"In no way demoralized, our men spent the night preparing to win back the lost position, which the Germans had strengthened with sand bags. Our artillery was placed in position ready to fire. As soon as dawn broke the three-inchers opened with salvos. The shells burst in our old trenches. Then the heavy artillery joined. The German artillery replied, but its shells did no harm.

FIERCE ARTILLERY DUEL

"The din became appalling. Our pieces fired as rapidly as they could be loaded. After hours of this the firing stopped and our infantry bounded forward, crouching on hands and knees. The Germans fired volley after volley, working their quick-firers feverishly. Our men took the third line, but could go no further.

"Our artillery then began to drop shells on the Germans with mathematical precision. Fifty yards from us we could see them blown into the air.

"The second night fell and we could see nothing, as rain poured in torrents. In spite of all this our infantry resumed the attack, and in a splendid charge reached the second line. It was a fearful struggle in the dark.

"Shaken by our impetuous charge, the surviving Germans fled toward the holes which had been made by their mines, to which they clung in the indescribable uproar.

GERMANS DRIVEN BACK

"The tireless French again dashed forward. In the darkness the Germans struck frantically around them, killing their own men whom they were unable to recognize. After a few minutes of carnage the Germans fled for their own positions, leaving the ground covered with dead and wounded. An impressive silence fell over the battlefield while 150 haggard prisoners were led to the rear.

"Dawn revealed a terrifying sight. Everywhere the dead lay, many falling with rifles clasped in their stiffened hands as if about to fire again. The Germans paid dearly for their attack, for 3,000 fell under our fire. Their losses were three times greater than our."

are a necessity for housekeepers who wish to excel in domestic science. They are the only American-made cooking ware which absolutely reproduces the high priced, imported German utensils, so universally used abroad. SANITO utensils have an acid proof lining which cannot crack or scale off and retains nothing to taint or discolor the food. When cooked in SANITO the food cooks evenly, retains all its juices and flavors and never scorches or burns. SANITO is a nonconductor of heat and after being heated to the cooking point—212 degrees—it requires but a very small gas flame to complete the cooking process. With proper care SANITO will last a life time.

BRASS STOLEN TROUBLE MADE

Foreigners Got in the Wrong Pew; Were Arrested on Suspicion

Among other things Fulton has its amateur sleuths, for when yesterday afternoon word reached the Granby Pulp Mill that two foreigners had been injuring some pieces of reserve machinery now stored under the lower bridge near the Granby plant, for the purpose of getting the brass off and selling it. The pieces of machinery damaged in this manner were estimated to be worth $75.00, while the brass collected from it could hardly bring $1.00 when sold.

At about three o'clock Joseph Newton and Leo Sedan, who were watching for the return of the vandals, suddenly saw four foreigners under the bridge heading toward the raceway. The watchers rushed out, hatless and coatless without waiting to investigate and made straight toward the four foreigners who by this time were leisurely strolling down the raceway path absolutely unaware of the approach of the two sleuths who by this time were breathlessly stumbling over rocks and logs strewn here and there along the path. When they were nearly all in by a strategic movement they closed in on the flanks of the foreign column and ordered a halt.

The Polaks amazed at the suddenness of the attack first looked scared, then became mad and, after a most terrific verbal bombardment, began to realize that they were being accused of something by these two Americans who got then finally to retrace their steps to the mill.

While accusations and denials were being hurled most indiscriminately and a perfectly purple streak permeated the atmosphere about the mill, officer Bray, then off duty and not in uniform, was located in the neighborhood and called to the scene.

The officer heard the complaint made by Newton and Sedan and believing the evidence to be sufficiently strong arrested all four protesting Polaks and escorted them to the police station where they were promptly discharged from custody by Chief Dyer for lack of evidence.

The four Polaks have threatened to bring a civil action against Newton and Sedan for their arrest.

PUBLIC SCOOL NOTES

The high school orchestra is under the instruction of Mrs. L. R. Owens, training for the school entertainment for the benefit of the public library and the high school athletic association, to be given at The Quirk on April 15 and 16.

The following committee have charge of the program to be given by the different schools: Prin. L. D. Wilcox, of the high school; Mrs. Lora W. Kesler, teacher of elocution; Miss E. Alta Thompson, supervisor of music; Prin. J. E. Lanigan, Phillips St. school; Prin. Lois A. Harrington, State st. school; Miss Frances W. Ash, instructor teachers' training class; Miss Ruth Graveley, Erie st. school; Miss Elizabeth Sadler, Oak st. school; Miss Marie Benson, Fourth st. school; Miss Mabel Lehon, Academy st. school; Miss Maud Marden, Walradt st. school.

On March 1, 1914, there were 2,055 attending the public schools. On March 1, 1915, there were 2,002 attending the public schools and 160 attending the parochial school. This shows a gain of 107 of those attending school between the two dates and indicates that Fulton is constantly growing in school population.

* * *

A bill was passed by the Assembly last week which provides that children or persons not vaccinated shall not be admitted into schools in cities of the first and second classes but that is not compulsory in school districts or in cities of the third class to which Fulton belongs, except in cases where smallpox exists.

FLOYD ELLIOTT HAS RETURNED TO FULTON

Floyd Elliott of 207 W. 5th st., has returned from Montreal, Can.

Mr. Elliott was visiting an uncle, by name John Casey, and while in Montreal, was arrested as a German spy and held for four days until proof of his U. S. A. citizenship could be obtained from Malone, N. Y. No sooner was Elliott released from custody and given a passporrt than he made quick time in getting into the land of peace and plenty.

Mr. Elliott states that the Canadians used him good while in captivity, and although a little frightened at the time was none-the-less glad to get back home.

He was in Montreal on the 17th of February when a large light was seen hovering over the city. The officials ordered every light in the city extinguished about eleven o'clock, fearing a German aeroplane to be near. The city remained in total darkness for more than three hours until the light which caused so much uneasiness was discovered to be a toy balloon on fire.

WOMAN KILLED NEAR PHOENIX

Mrs. Albert F. Vickery Met Death Near Stop 22 Early Yesterday Afternoon

Mrs. Albert T. Vickery, 73, of Phoenix, wife of a retired farmer and resident of Phoenix, was killed almost instantly yesterday when struck by a southbound limited car near stop 22 at 1:30 in the afternoon.

Mrs. Vickery left her home at about one o'clock to visit her niece, Mrs. Frieda Van Doren, who lives near stop 22. Boarding a northbound car she forgot to signal it to stop until stop 22 was passed and was nearing stop 23. After alighting she started to walk back toward stop 22 when the southbound limited in charge of Motorman James Burney and Conductor Herman Rider, came speeding along. Motorman Burney saw the woman some distance ahead and whistled continuously, gradually slowing down when approaching her. When the car had come within a hundred yards of where the woman was standing she quickly stepped to one side out of danger as if to allow the car to go by. Burney then turned the current and started at top speed as the car bounded swiftly along the woman stepped back again to the track where she had been walking. The motorman horrified by the sight quickly applied the brakes, but it was too late to save the woman who was struck and hurled bodily to one side of the track.

Within a hundred feet the car was brought to a full stop, the motorman, conductor and several men passengers rushing back to aid the injured woman, who though apparently internally hurt showed no outward marks or bruises. She was unconscious however, evidently from the minute she had been struck. They took her carefully from the ground, placed her on the car and rushed with all speed to Phoenix, but she expired within a few minutes.

The body was taken to the undertaking rooms of Fred W. Hakes, but it was some time before identification was established. Coroner E. J. Cusack of Fulton made a brief investigation yesterday afternoon and used every effort to establish the identity of the woman; the only clue he had at the time being a small purse marked A. A. Vickery.

Besides her husband, two sisters, Mrs. H. B. Wood and Mrs. Addie Tyler, both of Phoenix, survive.

Coroner Cusack will hold further investigation to determine the exact cause of the accident and just where the responsibility lies. It has been stated by many acquaintenances Mrs. Vickery that her sense of hearing was not acute and this may be one of the causes of the accident.

"SMART SET" TONIGHT

A delightful melange of song, humor, comedy and surprises is promised in the latest production of the famous "Smart Set" company which is the attraction at The Quirk tonight.

The production bears the title of "His Excellency the President," and will have as the leading funmaker that incomparable and resourceful comedian, Salem Tutt Whitney. The piece is a musical comedy in which bright scintillating fun is said to be to the fore. It relates the adventures of a shiftless darkey who flaunts himself as the ruler of a South American republic. Mr. Whitney will have the assistance of Homer Tutt and Blanche Thompson, a young woman possessed of a voice out of the ordinary.

Tomorrow The Onyx A. C. has provided a full evening's entertainment, consisting of professional and local vaudeville acts, from which they wish to derive sufficient funds to send the team to the Boston tournament.

UNKNOWN MAN FOUND DEAD NEAR OSWEGO

Became Entangled in Highly Charged Wires—Found by Patrick Callan.

An unknown man of about 50 years was found dead on the edge of Oswego river at a spot near the county jail farm at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The body was entangled in power wire that had fallen to the ground. The man had evidently been dead for about two days. The uesh was badly burned, part of one arm being burned off completely.

The body was partly submerged in the water, face upwards. When the current had been shut off the body was removed with difficulty because of the charred condition, and taken to Undertaker Dain's rooms in Oswego.

Patrick Callan, who lives near the place where the man was found was passing along the river bank when the partly submerged body caught his eye. He immediately called Coroner Vowinkle who removed the body.

There were no traces by which the man could be identified. A few cents and a small coil of wire were the only articles found upon his person.

An investigation is being made by Coroner Vowinkle.

Fred Pierce Gaining

The many friends of Fred Pierce, who lives near Battle Island will be pleased to learn that his arm is gaining nicely.

Mr. Pierce had his left arm caught in the machinery at his plant two years ago, and suffered a gret deal at the time and ever since.

One year ago Mr. Pierce went to Syracuse and Dr. Wallace of the Crouse Irving Hospital extracted seven inches of bone from the leg and grafted it to the torn arm. Twenty-two stitches was necessary to close the wound after the operation. Last Friday the plaster cast, which was put on eight weeks ago was removed, and the arm found to be in a bad condition, but with careful treatment it will soon be, if not entirely well, sufficiently improved to be used.

At the time of the accident Mr. Pierce hung over the running machinery for more than ten minutes and had not one of the employes come just when he did Pierce would not have escaped with his life.

Had Surprise Party

Lillian Harder of 606 E. Broadway was given a surprise party on Monday evening by a number of her friends. The occasion was the young lady's sixteenth birthday. Refreshments were served, games were played and a jolly good time was the experience by the young people. The following guests were present:

The Misses Marie Wilson, Leah Rhodes, Helen Rhodes, Helen Guilfoile, Marjorie Brackett, Florence Freeman, Rita Launt, Virginia Coop, Caroline Weatherby, Jessie Harder, Uhla Switzer, Bertha Randall, Fannie DuBois, Florence Mahlerwein, Thelma Palmer, Margaret MacRae, and Robert MacRae, Alfred Weatherby and Harold Baker.

A number of pretty gifts were received by the hostess.

Billy Sunday's Sermon to Women

There follows the text of the formal, prepared sermon, delivered recently by "Billy" Sunday. The evangelist did not adhere to his sermon. Deviations-and there were many, picturesque and characteristically forceful—are to be found in the general account of what took place at the tabernacle.

"My text is taken from II Kings, iv. 26: 'Is it well with thee; is it well with thy husband; is it well with thy child?'

"You remember the Prophet Elisha and his journey to the school of prophets up to Mount Carmel. There was a woman who noticed the actions and conduct of the man of God and she said to her husband, 'Let us build a little room and place therein a bed, and bowl and pitcher, that he might make it his home.'

"The suggestion evidently met with the approval of the husband, because ever afterward the man of God enjoyed this hospitality. I sometimes thought she might have been a new woman of the olden times, because no mention is made of the husband.

"You never hear of some old lobsters unless they are fortunate enough to marry a woman who does things and their name is always mentioned in connection with what the wife does.

"If you will just lay aside your perjudice, you little frizzy-headed sissies, I will help you so you won't make the mistake your ma made.

"You know there are homes in which the advent of one, two and possibly three children is considered a curse instead of a blessing. God, in His providence, has often denied the honor of maternity to some women. But there are married women who shrank from maternity, not because of ill health, but simply because they love ease, because they love fine garments and ability to flit like a butterfly at some social munction.

"Crimes have been and are being committed; hands are stained with blood and that very crime has made France the charnel house of the world. And America, we of our boasted intelligence and wealth, we are fast approaching the same doom, until or unless it behooves somebody with grit and courage to preach against the prevailing sins and run the risk of incurring the displeasure of people who divert public attention from their own vileness rather than condemn themselves for the way they are living. They say the man who is preaching against it is so vulgar, rather than the one who did it was stinking and vile.

"I want to tell you women that I have never this sermon in any town or any place where I have been without feeling embarrassed, but it has to be done, and I will tell you right now if you think you won't like what I say you cang o now, or else keep your mouth shut when you get out of here.

Fault of Society

"Society has just about put maternity out of fashion. When you stop to consider the average society women I do not think maternity has lost anything. The humbler children are raised by their mthers instead of being turned over to a governess.

"There are too many girls who marry for other causes than love. I think ambition, indulgence and laziness leads more girls to the altar than love; girls not actuated by love, but simply willing to pay the price of wifehood to wear fine clothes. They are not moved by the noble desires of manhood or womanhood.

"Some girls marry for novelty and some girls marry for a home. Some fool mothers encourage girls to marry for ease so they can go to the matinee and buzz around. Some fool girls marry for money and some girls marry for society because by connecting their name with a certain family's they go up a rung in a social ladder, and some girls marry a young buck to reform him and they are the biggest fools in the bunch, because he would not marry you to reform you.

"You mothers are worst fools to encourage your daughter to marry some old lobster because his father has money and when he dies, maybe your daughter can have good clothes and ride in an auto instead of hobnoofling it.

"Look at the girls on the auction block today. Look at the awful battle the average stenographer and average clerk have to fight. You cannot work for $6 a week and wear fine duds and be on the square as much as you are without having the people suspicious.

"In a letter to Miss Borson, President Roosevelt said: 'The man or woman who avoids marriage and has a heart so cold as to know no passion and a brain so shallow as to dislike having children is, in fact, a criminal.'

Appeals to Mothers

"As a mother, is it well with thee? Are you pure or are you guilty? have seen old wrinkled hands go around the neck of the firstborn and a kiss planted upon it, and I believe that a child begotten of holy love and brought forth of a desire to glorwill no more be lost than the Son of God will be lost.

"Is it well with thee? Is it well with your husband? 'The best man in the world,' your answer. Very well; is it well with the child? I think its responsibilities are equal, if they don't outweigh, its privileges, and when God is in the heart of the child. I don't wonder that that home is a haven of peace and rest.

"I have no motive in preaching except the interest I have in the moral welfare of the people. There is not money enough to hire me to preach. I tell you, ladies, we have to do something more than wipe our eyes and blow our noses and say 'come to Jesus.' Go out and shell the woods and make them let you know why they don't 'come to Jesus.'

"I say it is a part of the Gospel to instruct. We take children and turn them loose at school and they herd on the campus and keep company and there is some fellow there, loose in his language around home, and he sows the seed there and you want to instruct the children right and you can't begin it too young.

"I believe the time will come when sexual hygiene will form part of the high school curriculum. I would would rather have my children taught sex hygiene than Greek and Latin. A lot of the high school curriculum is mere fad. I think the time will come when our girls will be taught in classes with some graduated woman physician for an instructor.

"Women live on a higher plane morally than men. No woman was ever ruined that some brute of a man did not take the initiative. Women have kept themselves purer than men. I believe a good woman is the best thing this side of heaven an da bad woman the worst thing this side of hell. I think they rise higher and sink lower than men. A prostitute is the most degraded on earth or the purest on earth.

Gauge All Standards

"Our homes are on the level with women. Towns are on the level with homes. What women are our homes will be; and what the town is, the men will be, so you hold the destiny of the nation.

"I believe there is something unlnished in the make-up of a girl with the absence of religion. The average girl today no longer looks forward to motherhood as the crowning glory of womanhood. She is turning her home intoa gambling shop and a social beer and champagne drinking joint and her society is made up of poker players, champagne wine and beer drinkers, grass widowers and jilted jades and slander mongers—that comprises the society of the average girl today. She is becoming a matinee-gadder and fudge-eater.

"I wish I could make a girl that flirts see herself as others see her. If you make eyes at a man on the street he will pay you back. It doesn't mean that you are pretty. It means that if you don't care any more for yourself than that, why should he? The average man will take a girl at her personal estimate of herself.

"It takes a whole lot of nerve for a fellow to look a girl in the face and say, 'Will you be my wife and partner, and help me fight the battle during life?' But I think it means a whole lot more to the girl who has to answer and fight that question. But the fool girl loafs around and waits to be chosen and takes the first chance she gets and seems to think that if they are made one, the laws of man can make them two again.

"The divorce laws are damnable. America is first in many things that I love, but there are many things that are a disgrace. We lead the world in crime; lead the world in divorce—we of our culture.

"Many a girl has found out after she is married that it would have been a good easier to die an old maid than to have said 'yes,' and become the wife of some cigarette-smoking cussing, damnable libertine. They will launch the matrimonial boat and put the oars in and try it once for luck, anyway, and so we have many women praying for unconverted husbands.

"I preached like this in a town once and the next day I heard of about five engagements that were broken. I can give you advice now, but if the knot is tied, the thing is done.

"I am a Roman Catholic on divorce. There are a whole lot of things worse than living and dying an old maid and one of them is marrying the wrong man. So don't be one to do that. The trouble with the average American girl is she holds serself too cheap. She is just scared to death of being what the world irrelevantly calls an 'old maid.'

"And, girls, don't worry if you think you are not going to get a chance to marry. Some of the noblest men in the world have been bachelors and some of the noblest women old maids. And woman, for God's sake, when you do get married don't transfer the love God gave you to bestow on a little child onto a Spitz dog or brindle pup.

"There are a lot of you women sitting right out there whose temperature has run up seven degrees just since I have been preaching.

CARDINALS GET TWO GIANTS

Bescher and Robertson to Be Traded for Perritt, the Pitcher

Marlin, Texas, Mar. 10.—Although John McGraw refused to commit himself pertaining to the men to be traded to St. Louis for W. D. Perritt, the pitcher, it was reported heretoday that "Bob" Bescher and "Dave" Robertson, both outfielders, were to be sent to the Cardinals in the deal. McGraw said that the men in the trade had been decided upon, but that he was not at liberty to name the players until the St. Louis club should come to terms with them.

Bescher came to the Giants last year from Cincinnati as part of the deal that sent Herzog to the Reds as manager. He was considered one of the best outfielders in the National League, but did not play up to his game with the Giants. Robertson is a youngster who has been nursed along by McGraw for several seasons. He showed exceptional batting prowess at the start of the year last season, but fell down when the race became close in August He was originally a pitcher, but broke his arm playing football, and has been unable to pitch since.

McHALE WANTS RAISE

Savannah, Ga., March 10.—"Marty" McHale, the last of the Yankees to report to "Bill" Donovan, joined the squad today, but is still unsigned. A long talk with his manager took place shortly after McHale registered, but came to nothing, the pitcher insisting that he would hold the club to a promise of an increase in salary made by Frank Farrell before the Yanks changed hands.

Failin gto strike a bargain with Donovan McHale proposes to plead his suit before Captain T. L. Huston. Captain Huston, however, has said that he will not raise the ante one penny. Under the circumstances McHale's stay is likely to be short, for the New York club will not assume his expenses until he has signed a contract.

ONE MORE BASKETBALL GAME FOR SEASON

Monday night's basketball game between the State st. scouts and the Holy Name team was the last but one for this season upon the City Hall court. The exception is that of tomorrow night between the Fulton High and the Alumni.

Each one of the teams has won a game and the managers report their men primed for the deciding contest. Every loyal High school student should be on hand at 8 o'clock to cheer their team to victory.

HEARING TODAY ON BILL TO GUARD ALL CREDITS

Albany, Mareh 10.—Counsel for the National Association of Credit Men appeared at a hearing before the Joint Committee on Judiciary of the Assembly and Senate at Albany today to urge the passage of the so-called Accounts Receiveable bill, drafted by the association. The purpose of the bill is to prevent fraud through secret transfers of accounts receivable by mercantile and other firms. Similar measures have been introduced in the Legislature of Ohio and Rhode Island and efforts will be made to have other States pass them.

The practices aimed at involve the hypothecation of accounts receivable by business men and firms to obtain loans, the chief objection being that secret hypothecation of such accounts is detrimental to both the debtors whose accounts are pledged and the creditors of the pledger.

Hypothecation of such accounts has been resorted to frequently, according to the credit mens' organization, by firms having limited cash balances. The result has been the extension of larger lines of credit to weakly financed firms than was justified by their business. A firm using this method of financing could obtain credit by pledging its occounts receivable, although its affairs were in such condition that no bank or other agency would extend credit.

MOTT LOST MATCH

Harry Mott, the champion wrestler of Fulton, met his Waterloo at the hands of Private Cedericks of Oswego last night. Mott hit the mat in 7½ minutes in the first round and in 4½ minutes in the second round.

About Sports Generally

By Frank G. Menke

Jim Gaffney, owner of the Boston Braves, gets a seasick feeling every time he thinks about how he overlooked a chance to land "Hassen" Pfeffer, the wonderful Brooklyn pitcher, who in his first year in the big leagues showerr more real stuff than any young pitcher has in the past five years.

Pfeffer won 23 out of 35 games for the Dodgers last year. His pitching average was .657—a matter of 171 points above the team average. Pfeffer ranked third among the pitchers on the basis of effectiveness. The average runs scored off of him per games was only 1.97.

"And I could have had that fellow as easy as not," moaned Gaffney.

"Why didn't you harpoon him?"

"Because I got him confused with 'Old Jeff' Pfeffer, a pitcher that we had released in 1912. About the middle of 1913 I noticed that a pitcher named Pfeffer was setting the Central League on fire. But I didn't pay any attention to him. I figured it was our old pitcher Pfeffer making a few last gasps as pitcher."

"Yes?" we encouraged.

"Well, early last summer when we played against the Dodgers a huge looking youngster named Pfeffer went into the box against us. He certainly was a fine looking specimen of manhood and he looked like a fellow who could pitch every day and never grow tired.

"That pitcher began standing us on our ears. His speed was terrific, his control perfect, and his curves were wonderful.

"'Where did you get that fellow from?' I asked Manager Robinson, of the Dodgers, later on.

"And to think," added Gaffney, "that I could have landed that fellow. I saw what he was doing up in Grand Rapids long before the Dodger people did and I could have sent one of my scouts up there and grabbed him. But I mixed him up with 'Old Jeff.' And now—well ain't it——?"

Those Boston Braves never think about Pitcher Aitchison, of the Dodgers, without a feeling akin to murder welling up in their bosoms.

Aitchison was the particular jinx of the Braves last year. Nine times they faced him and eight times he turned them back beaten—and badly beaten, at that.

The Braves rushing along like madmen after the first of July were irresistable until they encountered Aitchison. And then it was different. Other clubs could beat Aitchison—but the Braves could not—Aitchison won only 12 games in 1914—and eight were from the Braves.

"But we finally got to him," said Jim Gaffney. "Eight times he lammed us, but the last time he faced us the boys made up from those eight beatings. They hammered Aitchison's offering all over the lot, scored about 14 runs and finally chasing Aitchison to the cooler."

HOT LINERS

So pleased are the Phils with St. Petersburg, Fla., as a training camp that there is a bare possibility that President Baker and his associates may purchase the stretch of land known as Coffee Pot Park and maintain a permanent Southern base here. The plan looks practical. At the edge of the park there could be erected a wide-spreading bungalow that could be utilized both as a hotel and clubhouse.

* * *

Three tentative schedules have been drawn up by John H. Farrell, president of the New York State League. One calls for a short season from May 6 to September 6, in which time 127 games would be played. Another schedule calls for 134 games, and for Albany to play at home when Troy is on the road, and for Troy to be home when Albany is on the road. The third schedule also calls for 134 games and schedules Albany and Troy at home and on the road at the same time. According to these schedules the season would open May 5 and close September 12.

* * *

Chief Umpire Bill Brennan of the Feds is strongly against use of the emery ball. He told Federal officials so when the matter was taken up at Buffalo. In this connection Brennan told of a former O. B. veteran who has evolved an entirely new one—the talcum ball. Use of the powder at the right time and with the proper twist, said Brennan, will fool a batter every time.

Report comes from Paso Robles, the camp of the White Sox, that Pitcher Reb Russell reduced his weight from 224 to 208 in one day's hiking over the hills. If this is a sample of the speed that Manager Rowland has been talking about, then other teams may as well surrender.

* * *

Plans under way for an exhibition game between the Pirates and Tigers at Detroit on June 6 have been called off. The intention had been to have the Tigers jump home from New York for a Sunday show-off with the Buccaneers, but as Jennings' men would have to jump back to Philadelphia that night, it was decided the program was too hard.

* * *

Skating in another thing that the major league managers may put under the ban. Pitcher Jim Shaw of the Washington team sprained an ankle so badly gliding over the ice that he will be handicapped through the greater part of the training season.

* * *

Outfielder Joe Burns of the Portland team of the New England League was somewhat surprised when he opened his contract some weeks ago and found that he had suffered a cut in salary. He was also further surprised when he found that he had been cut $5 per month, or a dollar and a quarter a week. The amount would tend to show that it was Hugh Duffy's intention to slice his salary just enough to say that it was cut. He could not have cut it much less.

WHY AN EXTRA SESSION

The announcement from Albany that there is a growing likelihood of an extra session of the Legislature comes to the people of this town as a complete and unwelcome surprise.

For some weeks there has been an evident paralysis of Legislative endeavor, a patent eagerness to introduce bills with no corresponding readiness to dispose of them, but to the present moment there has been no disclosure of any question sufficiently serious to warrant calling the Legislature together again.

The State is sick to death of extra sessions. For the last ten years there has been nothing but a succession of extraordinary convocations of Albany legislatures to perform the duties neglected at the regular meetings. Scandal, extravagance, waste of time and the money of the taxpayers have resulted invariably.

In 1914 the Republican party in this State told the voters that Democratic control had been inefficient, wasteful, frequently scandalous. The charge was true. The result of the campaign demonstrated that the electorate believed it. But in believing it and in choosing Republican legislators they had no intention to replace Democratic by Republican inefficiency, extravagance, ineptitude.

For an extra session in 1915 there is not the smallest excuse. Such a session will be a deliberate and wilful waste of money at a time when State and city expenditures should be cut to the bone. Such a session will simply mean that the Republicans have failed as did the Democrats to develop leadership, to display ordinary intelligence and diligence in public service.—N. Y. Tribune.

LEGAL NOTICES.

Foreclosure and Sale

SUPREME COURT [illegible] County, New York. Lora M. Ferguson, as administratrix of the Estate of Charles R. Ferguson, deceased, plaintiff, against [illegible] Greenberg and others, defendants. By virtue of a judgment of foreclosure and sale in the above entitled action, duly made and entered in the Clerk's Office of Onondaga County, New York, on the 27th day of January, 1915, and also filed in the Clerk's Office of the County of Oswego, New York, on the 1st day of March, 1915, I, the undersigned, Referee duly appointed for that purpose, will sell at public auction at the front door of the Court House in the City of Syracuse, County of Onondaga, New York, on the 26th day of April, 1915, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, the lands and premises described in said judgment and directed therein to be sold, which are bounded and described as follows, to-wit:—

ALL THAT TRACT OR PARCEL OF LAND, situate in the Town of Cicero, County of Onondaga and State of New York, being part of Lot Number Seventy-two (72), to be surveyed from the Southeast corner of said Lot in a square form as near as may be, and to contain One Hundred (100) acres of land, as the same was granted by Letters Patent to Robert Troup, excepting and reserving out of the above described premises Fifty (50) acres of land heretofore conveyed to Aaron Griffin, and now owned by John Siver; being the equal South half part of the same, and bounded on the North by a line running through the center of said One Hundred (100) acres and parallel with the North line of the same, the piece of land hereby conveyed being the Fifty (50) acres and the North half of said One Hundred (100) acres.

ALSO ALL THAT OTHER TRACT OR PARCEL OF LAND, being part of said Lot Number Seventy-two (72) in said Town of Cicero bounded as follows, to-wit:— Beginning on the Westerly Bank of Chittenango Creek at the Northeast corner of the State's One Hundred (100) acres in said lot; running thence West Thirty (30) chains Sixty-six (66) links along the North line of said State's One Hundred (100) acres; thence North Seventy-four (74) degrees East Nineteen (19) chains and Sixty-three (63) links to an oak tree standing on the Westerly bank of said Creek; thence Southerly along the bank of said Creek to the place of beginning; containing Nine and Forty-nine One Hundredths (9.49) acres of land, be the same more or less.

ALSO ALL THAT OTHER PIECE OR PARCEL OF LAND in said Town of Cicero, being part of Lot Number Seventy-two (72), bounded as follows, to-wit:— Beginning at the center of the State road leading from Bridgeport to Cicero Corners; running thence North Seventy-four (74) degrees East Five (5) chains and Eighty (80) links to the West Line of the State's One Hundred (100) acres, intersecting North Two (2) chains and Twenty (20) links South of the Northwest corner of said State's One Hundred (100) acres; thence South Ten (10) chains and Fifty (50) links along the West line of the same to the center of the State road; thence Northerly along the center of said road to the place of beginning; containing Two and Eighty-three One-hundredths (2.83) acres of land more or less.

Excepting and reserving ALL THAT OTHER PART OF SAID LOT Number Seventy-two (72), bounded as follows, to-wit:— On the Northeast by the center of the highway leading from Bridgeport to Cicero Corners; on the West by lands owned by Jonathan Sternburg; on the South by lands owned by John Siver, containing One (1) acre of land more or less. Being the same premises deeded by Samuel Rector to Jonathan Sternburg on May 27, 1902, and recorded in the Office of the Clerk of the County of Onondaga on May 31, 1902, in Book 337, page 478.

ALSO ALL THAT TRACT OR PARCEL OF LAND, situate in the Town of Redfield, County of Oswego and State of New York, in Great Lot Number Twenty-one (21) in Township Number Twelve (12), commencing in the center of the State Road on said Lot line, running thence Eight (8) chains and [illegible]-five (35) links Southerly in the center of said road from the South line of said Lot; thence Westerly in the center of a road parallel with the North line of said Lot to the West line of said Lot; thence North to the Northwest corner of said Lot; thence Easterly on said Lot line to the place of beginning; containing Twenty-five and Forty-two Hundredths (25.42) acres of land be the same more or less.

ALSO ALL THAT TRACT OR PARCEL OF LAND, situate in the Town of Redfield, County of Oswego and State of New York, bounded and described as follows:— All that part of sub-division Number Four (4) in Great Lot Number Fifteen (15) lying Westerly of the State road and bounded Southerly and Westerly by the Great Lot lines; Easterly by the State road; and Northerly by the Southerly lines of Sub-division Number Two (2); and containing about Fifty-nine and Forty Hundredths (59.40) acres, as survey made by Jabez Green.

ALSO ALL THAT OTHER TRACT OR PARCEL OF LAND, situate in the Town of Redfield, County of Oswego and State of New York, known and distinguished as sub-division Number Four (4), Lot Fourteen (14), Township Twelve (12), One Hundred Fifty-seven (157) acres.

SETTLEMENT MADE IN LA MOYA CASE

Oswego, March 10.—After the case of John La Moya vs. Henry P. Burgard had gotten well under way in Supreme Court an offer of settlement was made and accepted by Attorney A. S. Wright and yesterday the action of Lucretia Dragona, as admx., etc. of Raffele Dragona, against Francis P. Donovan went to trial. The plaintiff, widow of the deceased, asks for $10,000 damages through Attorney Dennis O'Sullivan. Dragona was killed on the East River road last Fall as he was leaving his work on the Burgard contract, being struck by an auto driven by the defendant, who lives in Syracuse, and had been visiting relatives here. Donovan was arrested, but Coroner Vowinkel, after an investigation, held he was not guilty of any criminal negligence. The defense insists that the car was moving at a moderate rate of speed and that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence. Besides his widow there is one child. Charles N. Bulger appears for Mr. Donovan with E. J. Mizen as counsel.

The case of James W. Gaffney vs. William Barry went over the term today by consent of counsel.

FLATIRONS RUST 12 YEARS

Winsted, Conn.—Fred Helmet, a good natured farmer who, his friends assert, would make some woman a good husband, because he never goes out after dark, bought a set of flatirons twelve years ago. Placing them on the back of his kitchen stove, he took a vow never to use them or permit any one else to use them until he had a wife.

The flatirons remain on the stove, unused.

ADVERTISING SENSE

The proprietor of a large store in London says:

¶ "When war broke out our firm ceased advertising and the employes went on short time. Noting that our competitors were also not advertising, two months before Christmas our firm launched out once more. Orders rolled in, the staff were put on overtime and the last two months of 1914 were record ones for business."

The regular meeting of the Political and Domestic Economy club was held at the home of Mrs. A. B. Byrne on Church st.

John Hallam has so far recovered as to be able to be about the house.

Charles W. Brown, who was injured about the head by a falling limb the first of last week is improving, and it is hoped will soon be able to be out again.

Our community was shocked Tuesday morning, March 2d, on hearing of the sudden death of Herman Van Hoosen of Martville, of heart trouble. Mr. Van Hoosen was one of the rural mail carriers on Route 53 and carried mail the day before his death. He leaves his widow and one son, Brink Van Hoosen, a mother and one sister, Mrs. Ella Reed.

The following gentlemen were named at the village caucus held last Friday evening to be voted for at the coming election: President, Fred Jenett; trustee, Jerome Hyatt; treasurer, W. C. Matteson; collector, Frank Wellington.

Mrs. Jane Mory, who has been helping to care for her brother, John Hallam, has returned home.

Miss Grace O'Kelly of Oswego was a recent guest of Miss Mary Ball.

Mrs. George Duthy has been the guest of friends in Syracuse the past week.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the M. E. church met in the church parlors Wednesday, March 10.

Rev. F. W. Danning attended district conference at Central Square Tuesday and Wednesday.

Mrs. George Beckett Lewiston is spending a few days with her father, Mr. Bunalthouse.

Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Chamberlain attended the anto show at Syracuse.

J. B. Burt and son Stanley are spending a few days in Syracuse.

Mrs. John Manning is recovering from her recent illness.

Helen and Leonise Hammand spent the week-end with friends in Oswego.

Mrs. Howard Cole and daughter have returned home after spending the winter with her sister.

Miss Hattie Taylor has been quite ill the past week.

Mrs. Pearl Sturge and daughter spent the week end with his mother, Mrs. Emma Sturge.

Miss Mary Adamy spent a few days at home last week returning to Skaneateles Monday night.

Mrs. O. J. Adamy is spending the week in Syracuse with her son, E. W. Adamy.

Mrs. C. B. Brower returned from Syracuse last Friday.

Mrs. Ida Irwin spent a few days in Syracuse last week.

Another fine program was given at Golden Sheaf Grange Saturday night consisting of solos, recitations and original papers. Solos by Mrs. Wheeler and Mabel Eckard and Roy Hall; recitations by Frank Nevdle, Clinton Tucker, Mrs. Manning; a talk on "Billy" Sunday and his work by Mrs. Gardner and P. A. Welling. The first and second degrees will be conferred on a class of ten or twelve next Saturday night and the end is not yet. Remember, Fellow Grangers, nothing succeeds like success, and this is what Golden Sheaf is after just now. But you, all of you, must count one every time. Will you?

Mrs. Pearl Wright, the soloist who assisted Rev. Paul Brown in evangelist services, has been singing for the last week at the "Billy" Sunday meetings in Philadelphia. She speaks very highly of Mr. Sunday's work.

MT. PLEASANT

Rev. Wiliams attended District Conference at Central Square last week.

The L. A. S. will meet at Alford Clark's Wednesday, March 17th, at noon. It is hoped this will be the banner meeting of the season as Mr. and Mrs. Clark are royal entertainers and there is a large amount of work to be finished before conference.

Mrs. Harriet Sheffield is recovering from an illness.

Wm. Rath lost a valuable horse last week from indigestion.

Mrs. Benton Cole and Mrs. Lyman Lamb visited Mrs. Thomas Hogan in Scriba last Wednesday.

Delbert Myers will work for James Bartlett after April 1st.

Mr. and Mrs. Byron Distin and family were week-end guests of Fred Randall in Syracuse.

Mrs. Delos Distin was called to Syracuse last Saturday by the serious illness of her daughter, Mrs. Fred Whittemore, who was verry seriously ill.

The Wesleyans will hold a Ghost Social at the home of Lewis Ives on Friday evening, March 12th. Everybody come and bring your friends and enjoy the company ghosts.

Mrs. George Bartlett is ill with the mumps.

Mrs. Charles Osborne will entertain the Aid Circle in the Rowlee District Friday evening, March 12th.

Roy Balcom has moved onto the Pearson farm which he has taken for the coming year.

Born, to Mrs. Carrie Phillips Wells at Minetto, a son.

Evangelistic meetings at Luddington school house are being well attended. Rev. Holmes gave a splendid talk Sunday afternoon and Mr. Brown of Fulton gives fine talks each evening. Rev. Stockwell and Holmes are assisting.

BUNDY'S CROSSING

The funeral of William Burchin was held at the church Tuesday. He was born at this place fifty-nine years ago but made his home in Oswego for some time where he was a teamster for many years. He was driving across the tracks at West Ninth and Utica sts., when a shifting engine struck him, cutting off one leg and crushing the other and breaking one arm. One horse was killed. He was hurried to the hospital where he died. Interment was at the Bundyville cemetery.

On Saturday evening occurred the marriage of Miss Eva Frost of this place and Allen Dewey of Scriba.

A stork arrived at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Frost on Tuesday evening with a ten and one-half pound girl.

Mrs. C. J. Echard and granddaughter called on Mrs. Byron Wells Wednesday.

James Stevens is entertaining his cousins, Earl and Ernest Henderson of Madison county.

A very pleasant party was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Graham at Battle Island, Sat. evening, the occasion being their nineteenth wedding anniversary. The guests were Mr. and Mrs. Fred Dodge Norman Dodge, Miss Greta and Ira Dodge, Mr. and Mrs. James Stevens, Earl and Ernest Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Echard, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Echard and daughter Catherine, Misses Elizabeth and Bertha Echard, Mr. and Mrs. Erwin Dumont and family, Mr. and Mrs. Byron Wells and daughter. The evening was spent in music and games and a supper.

Lewis Burchin, while helping Geo. Echard butcher, slipped and the contents of a boiler of hot water fell upon him. The right side of his face and shoulder were burned.

Mrs. Lewis Burchin is caring for her nephew.

Mrs. Lathrop entertained her grandsons of Oswego on Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Echard spent Sunday with friends at Baldwinsville.

Postage Stamps.

The American public consumes 40,000,000 postage stamps per day. By the ordinary methods of printing postage stamps this process costs the government a tremendous sum annually. By the invention of one machine by the officials of the bureau of engraving and printing the cost of manufacturing stamps has been reduced 57 per cent. The new stamp machine eliminates nineteen of the operations in making stamps, goes through twenty-one different operations of its own and turns out 4,000 completed stamps per minute, 2,400,000 in a ten hour day.

Britain's Iron Duke.

The Iron Duke, Great Britain's new super-Dreadnought, said to be the most powerful battleship in the world, is a costly sort of ornament for the navy. In action her guns can use up ammunition at the rate of $50,000 a minute. This is the first battleship to be equipped with specially designed guns for air craft. These guns are expected to send a projectile made for the purpose a height of 10,000 feet.

The Colonel's Duel

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

After supper a dozen or more of us congregated in the hotel office for a smoke, and presently the landlord came among us to say:

"Gentlemen, we have a fire eater in this town named Colonel Sebastian. He has several peculiar theories of his own, and I wish to post you in advance. He is very strong in his talk and should you differ with him he will challenge you to a duel. The colonel is a dead shot, and I hope you'll take a friendly tip and not engage in a discussion. Let him have his own way and never mind what he says."

The colonel had never killed any one yet, but that he stood ready to do so if his opinions were disputed the landlord felt dead certain, and so we agreed to agree with the colonel if he came in—all but one. The exception was the smallest and the most humble looking man among the guests. No one knew that he had made up his mind to oppose the colonel, and when the latter entered, half an hour later, he picked him out of the crowd as a good man to go for. He got alongside of him and after a bit turned on him with:

"Perhaps you have not been informed that I am the originator of the idea that all men were once animals of some sort and that perfection has been reached only after many centuries of time?"

"No, sir, I haven't," was the prompt reply.

"But I am, suh, and what do you think of the idea?"

"What idea?"

"Why, the one just stated. I think you heard me, suh—I think you did."

"Oh, I remember! Well, I don't train with that crowd, thank heaven!"

"Suh, do you know what you are saying?" cried the colonel.

"I do."

"And that your language, suh, is personally offensive—personally offensive!"

"I'm sorry you belong to the crowd who furnishes great ideas."

"Crowd, suh! Why, you have grossly insulted me and must at once apologize or accept a challenge!"

"Bring on your challenge, colonel!"

"Then you will fight me, suh?"

"Certainly. Just name time, place and weapons. By the way, I want to leave in the morning. Can't we fight in the billiard room, out in the yard, up in my room? No use waiting until tomorrow."

"And you'll fight me, suh?" gasped the colonel.

"With the greatest of pleasure, and I'll bet a thousand dollars to a shilling I kill you. Where can we get swords, rifles, pistols or bowie knives? I am just aching to fight you!"

"Were you told about me, suh, befo' I appeared here this evening?"

"Oh, yes."

"You were told that I was Colonel Sebastian?"

"I believe that was the name."

"The Colonel Sebastian of the Fifteenth Texas?"

"Yes, the Tenth or the Fifteenth."

"Who led the charge at Malvern Hill?"

"It was something like that."

"Not only one charge, suh, but three—three desperate charges!"

"They say five, but let it go at three."

"And, suh," said the colonel as he frowned like a bushel of carpet tacks, "did you hear that I was a duelist?"

"Something was said to that effect."

"And that I had had twelve affairs of honah?"

"Only twelve, colonel? Why I understood it was twenty," replied the other. "Well, this one will make you thirteen."

"Yes, suh—yes, suh. Will you honah me by giving your name?"

"Name? Please excuse me for my forgetfulness. Did you ever hear of General Chilvers?"

"Why—why"—

"Of the Louisiana Tigers?"

"Who—what"—

"Who led nine desperate charges at second Bull Run?"

"Bless me, suh!"

"And who has killed three times the number of men that you have in duels?"

"General Chilvers"—

"Never mind that, colonel. You have challenged me, and I accept. Let us have it over with as soon as possible, as I have some business to attend to."

"General Chilvers"—

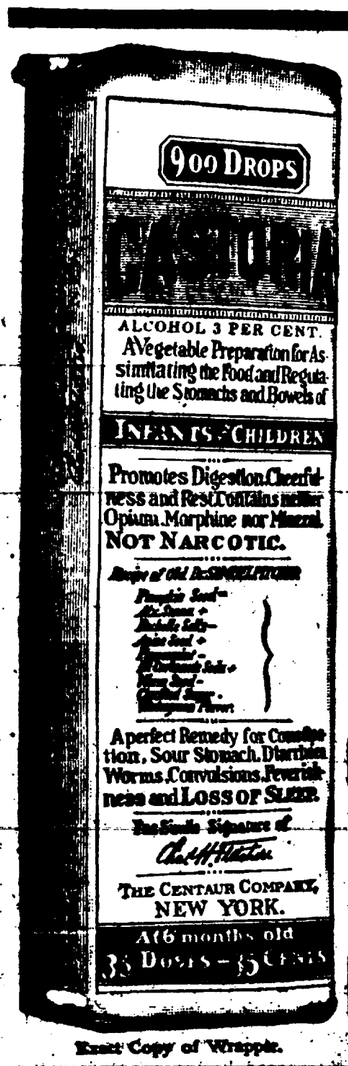
"I choose pistols, and I don't think it will detain me over five minutes. Where shall we go?"

The colonel swallowed his Adam's apple three or four times and then asked:

"You—you won't apologize?"

"No, sir, never! My object is to kill you and get a theorist off the earth. Hurry up, or I may not be able to hold myself!"

The colonel was on his feet, but he drew himself up, settled his hat on his head and his face was as white as sour and his voice trembled as he said:



"Suh, I am a fighter and a dead shot, but as this is my birthday, suh, and I don't want to stain it with blood I overlook your rather eccentric ways."

And when the silence had lasted five long minutes the landlord turned the small and humble man and gasped:

"For heaven's sake, who and what are you?"

And the reply was:

"Oh, I'm just Simmons, and I travel for a Chicago chestnut house. This is my first trip."

An Incorrigible Coquette

By EDITH V. ROSS

In antebellum days there were shooting matches among the gentlemen of the southern states in defense of their honor, the causes of which were usually published to the world. But when a woman was the subject of dispute some other cause was invented in order to keep her name out of the matter. At times when the ingenuity of the participants failed them in inventing a cause they would resort to absurd expedients.

Miss Cary Randolph many years ago was a belle in Charleston, S. C. Among her suitors were Robert Fitz-Hugh and Percy Bryce, both South Carolinians. Miss Randolph was not averse to setting her suitors against one another. It gratified her amour propre. But in this case she went too far.

One day while she was walking with Fitz-Hugh Bryce passed them. The lady smiled on him and invited him to join them. She knew that neither would relish the presence of the other, but this did not trouble her; she wished her friends to see her with one of the men who were known to be devoted to her on each side of her.

Having paraded her lovers before her friends she turned in the direction of her home and on arriving there dismissed them. Had she asked them to go in with her there might have been no unfortunate result. Had she asked one of them in it would have been tantamount to an expression of preference. This, too, would have ended the matter, for they were both gentlemen and either would have taken his dismissal as final. Leaving them to walk away together was the worst thing she could have done.

They proceeded some distance, remarking upon the weather and such other makeshift topics; then when they were about to part Fitz-Hugh said to Bryce:

"I was surprised at your intrusion."

"The lady invited me."

"That was common politeness."

Both men were ready to explode, but Fitz-Hugh repressed his feelings for the time and, turning on his heel, walked away. As he proceeded jealousy got the better of him, and, seeking his friend Walter Raymond, he commissioned him to take a challenge to Bryce. Raymond asked the cause and when told of it replied that he would have nothing to do with an affair that would bring in the name of a lady, whereupon Fitz-Hugh told him to make up a pretext to be given to the world as the cause of the duel. Raymond, after some thought, decided that the ostensible reason for the quarrel was to be that Bryce had called Fitz-Hugh a redhead. Fitz-Hugh's hair was auburn. This was not a reason calculated to deceive the public, but Raymond had no inventive genius, and it was the best he could do.

Miss Randolph had made choice between these two men—a very decided choice. She was ready to give herself to one of them. But she desired to prolong the pleasure of being courted by both and make herself more valuable to the man she loved by rendering her winning more difficult.

During the effort made to keep the coming meeting a secret from her, she got wind of it. On the morning appointed for the duel she mounted a cob and rode to the grounds, arriving there just in time to see the rivals for her hand standing facing each other with deadly intent. Her presence put a stop to the proceedings.

"I have heard," she said, "that one of you gentlemen is about to kill the other. Since I have made up my mind to accept a proposition of marriage from one of you I object to the other killing him."

They looked much at each other, but said nothing. The seconds, who were opposed to the meeting, saw an opportunity to stop it where it was.

"Perhaps," said Bryce's second after an awkward pause, "Miss Randolph will deign to remove the cause of the quarrel."

"What is the cause?" asked the lady.

Again there was a pause, more awkward than the first, at the end of which Fitz-Hugh's second said that her principal had been insulted by being called a redhead. If Miss Randolph would decide whether Mr. Fitz-Hugh's hair was red it would end the matter.

"Mr. Fitz-Hugh's hair is a fiery red," she said, "but that has nothing to do with my preference."

Fitz-Hugh colored. "Gentlemen," he said, "I see no reason why this affair should not proceed."

"Nor I," added Bryce.

Miss Randolph made no interposition until one of the seconds had given the word "Ready" and the other stood ready to give the signal to fire by dropping a handkerchief. This man, expecting that Miss Randolph would indicate her preference, delayed, keeping an eye upon her.

She smiled at him.

"This is absurd," he said. "Do you intend to risk losing the man you love? Decide."

"How can I," she replied, "in such a public fashion?"

"Gentlemen, shut your eyes," said the second.

Every man except the principals closed his eyes. Hearing a laugh at some distance from them, they opened them to see Miss Randolph walking away with her arm through that of Mr. Fitz-Hugh.

AUBURN MAN A BIGAMIST

Case Among Indictments Handed Up Yesterday by the Grand Jury

Oswego, March 10.—An unusual case developed at the arraignment of prisoners, indicted by the last Grand Jury, before Justice Emerson yesterday, when Frederick H. VanDuyn, twenty-eight years old, of Auburn, was called to plead to indictments charging him with attempt to commit bigamy and with perjury. One indictment alleges that he secured a marriage license to marry Lillian L. Lawrence, of Williamstown, in that town, on February 24th, 1915, while still the husband of Jennie VanDuyn, whom he married in Syracuse, December 24th, 1909, and the other indictment charges him with falsely stating in his application for a license that this was his first marriage.

VanDuyn, it is claimed, was in Williamstown from December 24th to February 25th and promised during that period to marry Lillian Lawrence. Just before the ceremony, it was stated, it was reported to Miss Lawrence that he had another wife. Udelle Bartlett appeared for him; he pleaded not guilty and was released on $1,000 bail in each case.

George Patterson, seventeen years old, charged with entering the Y. M. C. A., pleaded guilty and was paroled on his promise to return to school, and Albert Passo pleaded guilty to grand larceny in Granby, sentence being deferred to permit him to get the stolen property, which he had since disposed of in Fulton.

Other arraignments were as follows:

Arthur Tanner, burglary, third degree, and petit larceny and removing part of a railroad switch; pleaded not guilty; U. Bartlett attorney.

John Abbott, permitting a child to be placed in such a position as to endanger morals, pleaded not guilty; J. P. O'Connor assigned.

Edwin J. Quderkirk, assault, second degree, Boylston, pleaded not guilty; bail $1,000; Dennis O'Sullivan attorney.

Chet Loungsly, burglary, third degree, and petit larceny, Fulton, pleaded not guilty; bail $1,000; John J. McGrath assigned.

RAILROADS WOULD HAVE NEW ORDINANCES

Proposing that Oswego adopt certain ordinances prohibiting the trespassing on railroad property, officials of the New York Central & Lackawanna railroads held a conference with City Attorney McCaffrey this morning in connection with another safety first campaign which was recently inaugurated by the railroad companies. Upon suggestion of Mr. McCaffrey the attorneys for the railroad companies will draw the proposed ordinances which will be submitted to the Common Council for action soon.

The officials of the New York Central object to workmen crossing the railroad bridge, which is utilized by many as a short cut. It has been proposed that a watchman be stationed to prevent this and if the Common Council accept the ordinances the violators will be subject to arrest. It is also desired to keep the public off the companies' rights of way and from the railroad shops, where brass and other articles are stolen.

The railroad men claim that five thousand deaths a year are due to the lack of the enforcement of the city ordinances and that the companies are held liable and frequently held to pay heavy damages because it is made possible to present a state of facts to a jury other than exists.

Paint or Not

Is a horse worth more or less after feed?

Hay and oats are high today; shall I wait today and feed him tomorrow?

That's how men do about painting their houses and barns and fences. Paint has been high for several years; and so they have waited. Some are still waiting.

Their property drops a trifle a year and the next job of paint creeps-up creeps-up creeps-up; it'll take more paint by a gallon a year; they don't save a cent, and the property goes-on suffering.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, March 10.—Light upon the causes and effects of the foot and mouth disease is shed by Dr. John F. De Vine, consulting veterinarian of the State department of agriculture, who has given many facts relative to the malady whichhas destroyed innumerable cattle and which is at present prevalent in many sections of the country and especially New York State, to an alarming degree.

"The foot and mouth disease is known to science as Aphthous fever, says Dr. De Vine, "and is a specific, highly infectious and communicable disease which attacks ruminating animals such as cows, sheep, goats and deer. Swine are also frequent victims. The disease may be transmitted by inoculation to most all species of warm-blooded animals."

Dr. De Vine states that human beings are slightly susceptible by natural infection, particularly infants, by drinking raw milk and that in rare cases adults have been known to be affected by the disease by virtue of having been exposed to infection by handling diseased cattle.

"In the infants the principle symptoms are eruptions of vesicles about the motuh and lips, chills, high fever and digestive disturbances. Vesicles may also appear on the nose, face, between the fingers and around the nails. While several deaths have been reported in infants, ordinarily the malady is not fatal in a well-nourished child. Symptoms in adults are usually confined to eruptions or blisters about the lips. Several cases of human infection have been reported during the present outbreak in and about Greater New York."

That animals such as horses, dogs, cats, fowl, pigeons and birds which are not necessarily susceptible may act as carriers of the foot and mouth disease from farm to farm, is pointed out by Dr. De Vine. He says that it is frequently necessary to place certain restrictions upon carriers as well as actually infected animals.

"The greatest care should be exercised by human beings since the virus is readily carried by the hands or clothing from diseased to healthy cattle. Where a person has visited an infected farm they are a menace to the stock community unless their hands and clothing have been immediately thoroughly disinfected."

Dwelling upon the cause of the foot and mouth disease, Dr. De Vine says that it generally arises from what is termed a "filterable virus." He explains that this is a substance which passes through a porcelain filter which ordinarily holds back diseases producing bacteria.

"The causative organism is so small that our microscopes of highest magnification fail to reveal it to the eye. This is also true of the causative factor of scarlet fever and smallpox in the human family."

Dr. De Vine says further that from the present knowledge of veterinarians the period of inoculation runs from one day to two or three weeks and that the disease runs a rapid course. He explains that while mortality does not run high ordinarily, the mortality does not represent the real loss from the standpoint of the animal industry. Lameness or a disposition to lie down is one of the first symptoms; excessive salivation and smacking of the lips is another. Ulcer-like sores follow and the feet of the animals become so sore that the animal affected dreads to move. The mouth becomes so sore that food is not taken and water is repudiated. Excessive thinness results as does deformed feet and permanent lameness. Necrosis of the bones and sloughing of the hoofs are other results.

ITALY'S HAND FORCED BY ALLIES' ADVANCES

London, March 10.—Dr. E. J. Dillon, in a dispatch to the Daily Telegraph from Rome, says:

"It is affirmed in political circles here that Italy's final choice between neutrality and intervention is wholly independent of the attitude not only of Greece but of Roumania. Among the considerations which render t decision morep ressing now than has been the case since the outbreak of the war is the specific axiom which underlies a policy of 'consulta'—that Italy cannot maintain a disinterested attitude toward the partition of Asiatic Turkey, which the forcing of the Dardanelles has thrust into the forground.

"As the break up of theTurkish State is now a foregone conclusion Italy's status and her vast potentialities render it incumbent upon her government to establish an indisputable claim to an adequate share in the division of the spoils, and it is recognized that the is but one way of effecting this, viz., by co-operating with the Allies, not merely in the local action but in the general land and sea operations of the campaign."

OLD ENGLISH HOUSES.

In the Days of Wooden Huts, Thatched Roofs and Clay Floors.

The habitations of English common people for centuries consisted of a wooden hut of one room, with the fire built in the center. To this hut, if a man increased in family and wealth, a lean-to was added and later another and another. The roofs were of thatch, the beds of loose straw or straw beds with bolsters of the same laid on the floor or perhaps eventually shut in by a shelf and ledge like the berths of a ship or by a small closet.

The Saxon thane or knight built a more pretentious "hall," a large open room like the Roman atrium with a lofty roof thatched or covered with slates or wooden shingles. In the center of the hard clay floor burned great fires of dry wood, whose thin acrid smoke escaped from openings in the roof, above the hearth or by the doors, windows and openings under the eaves of the thatch.

By day the "hearthsmen" and visitors, when not working or fighting, sat on long benches on either side of the fire and, as John Hay puts it, "calmly drinked and jawed" or, gathering at long boards placed on trestles, regaled themselves on some sort of porridge with fish and milk or meat and ale.

At night straw or rushes spread on the floor formed beds for the entire company in the earlier and ruder days, when the "baser sort" were glad to share their straw with the cows.—National Magazine.

SEEING THE WIND.

It is said that any one may actually see the wind by means of a common handsaw. The experiment is simple enough to be worth trying at least. According to those who have made the experiment, all that is necessary is a handsaw and a good breeze.

On any blowy day hold the saw against the wind—that is, if the wind is in the north hold the saw with one end pointing east and the other west. Hold the saw with the teeth uppermost and tip it slowly toward the horizon until it is at an angle of about forty-five degrees.

By glancing along the edge of the teeth you can see the wind." It will be pouring over the edge of the saw much after the manner that water pours over a waterfall. This is doubtless due to the fact that there are always fine particles of dust in the air, and as a strong breeze the wind forces against the slanting sides of the saw glides up the surface and suddenly "tears over" when it reaches the top.

It is doubtless the tiny particles that make the air dust laden that can be seen falling over the edge of the saw as the wind current does, but it is about as near as any one can get to seeing the wind under normal conditions.—Washington Post.

Humor in Old Wills.

A certain Lieutenant Colonel Nash left an annuity to the bell ringers of Bath to "toll dolefully" on each anniversary of his wedding day, and contrite Mr. Withipol of Walthamstow left the bulk of his property to his wife, "trusting," he says—"yea, I may say as I think, assuring myself—that she will marry no man for fear to meet with so evil a husband as I have been to her."

Mr. Jasper Mayne at least considered himself witty when he bequeathed to his valet a wornout portmanteau, as it contained something, said the will, which would make him drink. The excited valet ripped open the trunk and found a red herring in it. So, doubtless, did the Scotch gentleman who in 1877 left to his son's care his two worst watches, "because," he said, "I know he is sure to dispose of them."—St. James' Gazette.

Wonderful Memory.

A few years ago there was a teamster in Milwaukee named Israel Mullin who was able to tell at the end of the week the number of loads and their weights he had hauled for the six days past without so much as a figure on paper. It would have been useless to furnish him with paper and pencils, his memory was found to be unerring. He was dismissed once for using liquor too freely and a man appointed to his place who used pencil and paper. The first week the pencil and paper man made over a dozen errors, and Mullin got his job back.—Pittsburgh Press.

Know Traveling Men.

"She's a sensible girl," said the first traveling man.

"You bet she is," said the second. "Last night when I took her to dinner before ordering she asked me if I was going to pay the check myself or work it into the expense account."—Detroit Free Press.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE CAMPAIGN

"BURY THE HATCHET—EVERYBODY'S DOING IT"

What L. W. Emerick Thinks of the Forthcoming Enlargement of the Chamber of Commerce.

There have been submitted to me plans looking to the enlargement of the facilities of the Chamber of Chamber, which will accomplish much through co-operation with the other organizations working for the good of Fulton.

The moulding of public opinion and the work of civic and commercial betterment has heretofore been conducted fruitfully in Fulton. While our various organizations have been successful, however, they have in the main not been large enough in membership, nor strong enough financially to do what should be required of them. And their past accomplishments are but evidence of what can be done by a strong Chamber of Commerce, properly organized, ably conducted, and, through a large membership, adequately financed.

I have given much thought to the enlargement of the Chamber of Commerce along the lines proposed, and it has my hearty endorsement.

L. W. Emerick.

"Confidence" Keynote of Wilson's Talk

About sixty of Fulton's representative citizens were present at the C. of C. luncheon at the Clark today. Lucius Wilson, "the man with the message," followed his yesterday's talk in the same well balanced style of thought expressed before.
well built plan back of the spoken words. Here one sees the selfish, well buildd plan back of the spoken words. Here one sees the selfish, pessimistic citizen set aside and in the place reigning supreme are the healthy happy minded citizens blazing a trail toward a "greater city."

In speaking further Mr. Wilson stated:

"The first question to be taken up is, Can we show the citizens of Fulton where they will get a reasonable return for their investment of $25? The reply to this inquiry will be in the lectures which will be continued from day to day. You will not get the same money back, remarked Mr. Wilson, but you will get returns far greater than your investment indirectly after you have created in this city the proper spirit, the proper, hopeful, feeling of confidence which is the very foundation of the success of a development movement.

"The definition of a live town is a town where its citizens are willing to bet on tomorrow; where in a dead town the little, shallow, dying citizen says, Oh, we have tried this before and nothing came of it. Enterprise there is dad, development there is forever stayed. 'Is it not,' asked Mr. Wilson, 'worth while for a human being to live in a live town?" You only have a few years to go so I say live while we may and live in an atmosphere of promise and hope where the spirit of aggressiveness is rrampant. The Chamber of Commerce stands fo those things which make a place wirth while; it should embody the very heart of the communty which pulsates regularly and strongly ever presenting new opportunties and further advancement to the citizens as well as to the community.

"In Detroit there stands a statue of Gen. McCoon, costing $40,000, one o fthe piooneer builders of that city, the hard-headed, close, conservative man would say that statue costs too much you could buy it at Sear & Roebuck for 99 cents. Gentlemen, let me tell you that each day over 50,000 young men and women pass by that statue and, if it awakens in the heart of only one young man who see it that inspiration, that determination tosucceed to progress, to live, it is worrth the $40,000 which it cost.

"If your Chamber of Commerce can typify this spirit of progress and advancement, if through its organized efforts and willing co-operation of all within the confines of this city this spirit of "go to it" can be made part of the very atmosphere, then is it not worth $25, I ask?

"The definition of a live town is one in which the atmosphere is permeated with latent energy, progressiveness, enthusiasm and promising pertations.

Seattle has been often set up as an example, there scores of young men with a little money took a chance, they worked together, they made up their minds to go in and win and let nothing stop them—now you can see the direct consequences of a bold confident spirit backed by organized agressiveness. Seattle is now on the jump.

"Dallas is also known as another live town, as a matt[illegible] fact

RIGHT TO SINK AMERCAN SHIP HINGES ON CARGO DESTINATION

Action of German Ship Lawful Only If Wheat Aboard William P. Frye Was Consigned to the British Government.

Washington, March 11.—No fixed rule of international law can be cited to determine what will be the fate of the German converted cruiser Prinz Eitel Fredrich, whose request for permission to provision and repair at Newport News was taken up by the Neutrality Board this afternoon. It is this Board which, as the advisory body to the tSate and Navy departments upon all such matters, must pass upon this difficult case. The overshadowing complication of the case is the sinking of the American merchant ship William P. Frye, while en route from Seattle to a British potr with a cargo of wheat.

This act may be lawful or it may constitute a serious violation of American rights. Only if the wheat was destined to the armed forces of Great Britain, or consigned to the British government could it properly have been considered contraband, and unless the cargo of the Frye was contraband her destruction by the Prinz Eitel Friedrich was an unwarranted act.

No belligerent war ship is warranted in sinking a neutral merchant vessel unless more than fifty per cent of her cargo is contraband of war, and then the vessel may only be sunk if it is clearly impossible for the captur to take her into port as prize.

While the rulings of international law regarding permission to be given to belligerent war ships to remair and provision in neutral ports is hazy and difficult of application, it is considered improbable from the facts of the case already learned that the Prinz Eitel Friedrich ever again will steam out upon her marauding career as a commerrce destroyer.

Numerous Repairs Needed.

She cannot be permitted to make any repairs to her ordnance or armor plate nor any of such character as would increase her fighting strength. Nor can she be permitted to be renovated completely. She properly may be held to only those slight repairs required to make her sufficiently seaworthy to reach her nearest home port.

A report received from the Norfolk Navy Yard by the Navy Department said the chief engineer of the Prinz Eitel Friedrich thought it would require two or three weeks' time to make repairs. This very properly may be granted to her. But the captain of the Prinz Eitel Friedrich is reported as desiring a much longer period for repairs. He desires to have the ship docked at the Newport News plant and to have her hull, propeller, rudder and auviliary machinery overhauled. It is very improbable that this request will be granted.

If she does decide to make a try to gain the open sea with only such slight repairs as are allowed she will be permitted to take just sufficient coal to make the trip to Germany and provisions for the time that trip would require.

When the decision is made regarding granting permission for repairs to the Prinz Eitel Friedrich no news of it will be made public, lest French and British cruisers gather off the Norwalk Capes to catch the German cruiser as she attempts to slip away to sea. Only if her captain elects to have the commerce destroyer interned will the decision of the United States government in this matter be made public.

The prisoners of the Prinz Eitel Friedrich probably will be permitted to land. It is expected that their respective embassies and legations here will care for them and provide passage home for them as soon as possible. If there are any soldiers or sailors of belligerent countries among the prisoners they will be interned, but it is understood that all of them are crews and passengers from merchant vessels. The Navy Department's advices tsate that there are no Englishmen among the prisoners, although unofficial advices credit the cruiser with the sinking of three British ships and say that she has on board seventy-eight men from their crews.

British Embassy's Demands

The British Embassy prepared to protect the interests of the Allies which are involved in the case. It will be demanded by the British government that the United States force the Prinz Eitel Friedrich to disarm and interne or else to put to sea as soon as the barest necessary repairs are made.

So far as can be learned the question of the sinking of the William P. Frye will not be taken into consideration in deciding whether the Prinz Eitel Friedrich is to be allowed to put to sea. If it is found that the Frye was destroyed illegally a claim for damages will be made to the German government through diplomatic channels by the State Department. This action will be taken on behalf of the Frye's owners. But since the crew of the Prinz Eitel Friedrich in sinking the Frye acted as the agents of the government they cannot be held personally responsible. This is the first case of an American merchant ship sunk by a belligerent vessel in the present war.

HOW SHIPS CAN AVOID THE DANGERS OF A SUBMARINE.

THE ADVANTAGE OF SHOWING A CLEAN PAIR OF HEELS AND OTHER DEVICES FOR CHECKMATING THE SUBMARINES.

Several methods of checkmating a submarine are shown in this diagrammatic drawing, prepared especially for this newspaper, the New York Herald and the London Sphere. In the foreground are the enemy's periscopes, to which a merchantman is turning his tail. This position throws the wake of the vessel toward the oncoming torpedo, and may succeed in deflecting it to right or left. In every case it is necessary for the merchant skipper when in dangerous waters where a submarine may be encountered to drive his ship at full speed and at the same time steer an irregular course. In previous cases the enemy's "under sea boat" has appeared abeam of the ship about to be attacked and in such a position that the merchantman could not suddenly turn and ram her, but should two or three craft be in company when attacked then there might be a chance for one of them to ram while their enemy was engaged with the others, for it must be remembered that no fighting craft can be put out of action quicker than a submarine if it is touched either by the bows of its foe or by a shot from a light quick firer. In every case the merchant captain will have to think and act quickly immediately he sights his sinister foe. The map in the left hand bottom corner shows the area of Germany's so-called "blockade" with the "open" channel to the north of the Shetlands and extending down to Holland.

GERMANS, TIRED WAITING, THREW CARGO OF WHEAT INTO ATLANTIC OCEAN

Newport News, March 11.—Eight masters of ships burned or sunk by bombs or gun fire from the Prinz Eitel Friedrich landed here this afternoon in a group, each hurrying to report to his owner and to consult with consular agents. Every one of them had only praise for the treatment they, their passengers and crews had received from the commander of the German sea rover.

Chief interest centered around Capt. H. H. Kiehne, master of the American four-masted bark William P. Frye, captured and sunk by the Prinz Eitel Friedrich in 29 deg. 45 min. south latitude, 24 deg. 50 min. west longitude on January 28.

"We had a cargo of wheat from Seattle for Queenstown and orders," said Captain Kiehne. "and had an uneventful voyage until we reached 29 deg. 45 min. south, latitude, and 24 deg. 50 min. west longtitude, when we ran into a calm. While lying becalmed the German converted merchantman hove in sight and ran up signals for us to stop. A light breeze had sprung up and we were making about two knots. I proceeded and made no effort to heave to. Then I was boarded, and a parley ensued. They asked me what my cargo was and I told them.

"After a conference the Germans decided that inasmuch as we had what they called contraband cargo they would throw it overboard. So a lieutenant and squad of men came on board to help my crew get the wheat into the sea.

"A little later the Prinz Eitel Friedrich went off to sink a ship about five or ten miles away and returned about ten o'clock at night. We were so slow getting the wheat overboard they decided to sink the ship. At eight o'clock next morning a bomb was placed in her hold.

"I left, with my wife and two boys and my crew in our boats and made way for the cruiser before the bomb was placed. At nine o'clock the bomb was fired and the ship sank half an hour

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

BE HUMANE

OH! why be unkind to a cow or a rabbit, a horse or a chicken, a toad or a hound—or kick at a cat out of sheer force of habit and tread on a worm as it crawls on the ground? "To live and let live" is a motto, by golly! that should be observed by the world to a man. Oh! friend, have a heart for the dog and the polly—show them ev'ry kindness you possibly can. Some folks seem to think that it's handsomely proper to club at a horse with an immature leg—to pull off the legs of a captured grasshopper or throw a pound rock at the head of a frog. We ought to be mum to these poor, lowly creatures—the animal, fish and the bug and the bird, and not heave a brick at their innocent features or scare them to fits with a harsh, scolding word. When my days are o'er and my friends get together and speak of "yours truly," they'll murmur at least—"Although the poor boob had a brain like a feather, he never tied cans to the tail of a beast." Each creature is here, I believe, for a purpose—they've got their small something to live for and do—so therefore be kind to the snail and the porpoise, the elephant, pelican, goldfish and gnu. The mortal who tortures a bug or a sparrow, or don't care a rap if he causes them pain, is cowardly, selfish and heartless and narrow—he ought to be thrashed with a hickory cane. So, friends, be humane to the little canary, the pig and the weasel, the little red hen; be kind to the fox and the glum cassowary, the gosling, the bat and the robin! Amen!

FIRST AID JARS

Will be Placed at Various Points on the Empire United Trolley Lines.

Employes of the Empire United Railways and associated lines will in the future be well supplied with the methods of attending to accidents and with the necessary information as how to use the remedies and make the patient comfortable until the physician arrives. Necessary apparatus and instructions are contained in neat little glass jars which the railways have sent out from their headquarters in Syracuse.

These are known as "first aid jars", and are gurnished by the National Affiliated Safety Organizations, which is made up of a number of electric traction and power companies. They are to be placed at various points on the line.

WINDOW WISHERS

Along the pathway of daily existence are windows, transparent and giving a clear vision of the things beyond—baubles they may be or, yet of sterling worth, but this side of the windows are the "Window Wishers."

Like the little folk at Christmas season, who stand and wistfully gaze within at the gaily tinted toys, so these Wishers stand.

Fulton has its "Window Wishers" the same as all places, because her people are too the children of this earth. Day by day the young, the old, the strong, the weak, the sick and the well all gaze on. Each picks his own prize beyond the window and treasures it in mind.

To illustrate: There's the good citizen who looks and sees beyond a model high school, finely equipped, the pride of the surrounding country. Another gazing sees a Y. M. C. A. or club rooms, simple perhaps, but nevertheless a beginning. The next sees dry territory, another sees recreation spots for the public, and so on down the line, each with his individual vision fastened upon the individual prize.

So they stand these "Window Wishers" in their wistfulness—wishing but losing the opportunity to obtain. Mists and steam and dust and rain would hide or dim these visions but for those who toil to keep the windows clear. Selfishness, care, indifference and a multitude of elements arise to obscure and hide, but a valiant corp of workers are on hand to keep the windows clear; they play the lights upon the sterling things beyond, and call forth admiration upon the treasure store.

The men or women in public life who are leading, urging building toward better things dispel the mist and make clear the vision. The building of a citizenship is the building of an insitution tho it be not visible to mortal man, and he who adds but a grain of sand to the mortar is worthy of the name "Citizen."

OPPORTUNITY AND GOVERNOR WHITMAN

A wem onths ago, when the people of this State elected Mr. Whitman Governor, they recognized perfectly that he was without executive experience. They saw in him an honest, industrious and successful prosecuting officer, in whose past achievement there was promise of future usefulness on a larger scale.

As Governor Mr. Whitman was frankly an experiment. It was recognized on all sides, from the outset, that he had frequently given evidence of an instability of political purpose, a limited outlook upon public affairs, an exaggerated personal ambition, which might conceivably make it impossible for him to grasp the great chance for himself and for his party that his election would provide.

But in November, 1914, the voters of this state were not thinking of the future, but of the past. Four years of Democratic failure in the State, the scandal of the Sulzer impeachment, the indecency of Tammany control, the failure of Martin H. Glynn, honest but unimaginative, to withstand the pressure of machine influence—these were uppermost in the minds of men of all parties and of no party. They were not striving to vote Charles S. Whitman into office, but to vote Charles F. Murphy out of power.

That time has passed. That task was completed. What the people of the State are now asking is whether Mr. Whitman can measure up to the opportunity which came to him a few months ago. They are demanding to know whether the present Governor of the State is a leader or a follower, a man or a man's man.

In the third month of the legislative session Albany activities have been stricken with paralysis. From the capital there come the familiar but ever nauseating rumors of jobs to be had, places to be made for Republicans, or abolished and re-established that Democrats may be eliminated and the worthy, the "deserving Republicans," cared for. So far as it is possible to see at this distance, the change in the State Capitol has been in labels, not methods; in names and not in manners.

It is manifestly unfair to hold the Governor responsible for all this. No blame can attach to him if it shall turn out that he is not a leader; that he is one more in the long list of accidents whom incidental meritorious performance in a minor office has pitchforked into a larger office for which he was wholly unsuited. But such a discovery, without carrying discredit, must bring a death sentence to all further political ambition.

At the moment Mr. Whitman is plainly touching the crisis of his public career. The situation at the capital calls for courage, intelligence, leadership. The people of the State, weary of clamor for jobs, manipulation of patronage, hesitations and dubitations, ask that the Legislature shall complete its necessary tasks, dispose of the regular business of the state economically and intelligently, and go home. The Legislature has so far disclosed no capacity for such a task. It has paltered and bungled. It is still paltering and bungling.

The opportunity now within Mr. Whitman's grasp is the opportunity no real leader of men or parties permits to escape. The rewards of success at Albany this year may be almost incalculable. But to the present moment Mr. Whitman has disclosed no capacity sufficient to supply the necessary leadership. In an area of darkness he also seems to be hopelessly groping.—Tribune, N.Y.

SUFFRAGE CAUSE LOST WARM FRIEND

The suffrage cause has just lost a warm friend in Mr. Peter Groden of New York, father of Mrs. Jerome M. Fitz, corresponding secretary of the Rhode Island Woman Suffrage Association. For years Mr. Groden wore a bittle "votes forw omen" button and made sincere converts of those who sneered. His constant prayer was "that God would let him live long enough for himself and his little right rib' to walk to the polls, as American citizens, together to vote for honest men."

OSWEGO ATTORNEY MAY NOT BE PROSECUTED

Oswego, March 11.—A petition was placed in circulation today, asking District-Attorney Francis D. Culkin to suspend the prosecution of Frederick T. Cahill, the Oswego lawyer against whom six indictments were found by the Grand jury last week.

Friends of Mr. Cahill, it is understood, have taken up the matter and an effort will bem ade to have the prosecution deferred for the present at least. The petition was circulated among the lawyers and business men of the city. No announcement has been made as to whether the case will be remanded to the County Court for trial.

John Blunt's Infatuation

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

John Blunt, gentleman's valet by profession, just now out of a position, was going up to his room on the fourth floor of a tenement house when he noticed a dainty glove on the stair before him. Seeing a figure in skirts ahead of him, he picked up the glove and, hastening on, asked the comely young woman he overtook if the glove belonged to her. She smilingly acknowledged that it did and thanked Mr. Blunt accordingly. Moreover, he noticed or fancied he noticed a look of admiration in the young woman's eyes, which was not surprising, for he was a good looking man.

"I 'aven't seen you in the building before," said John. "'Ave you been 'ere long?"

"Honly a few days. Me and my mother 'ave a couple o' rooms on the next floor above, but I'll not be 'ere very long. I'm looking for a place."

"What kind of a place?"

"A lady's maid."

"Mebbe I can 'elp you to that. I'm a 'valley' myself when I'm at work and know a lot o' swell folks."

"If you do, please let me know. I'm in No. 9 on the next floor above."

The very next day Mr. Blunt rapped at No. 9 and was admitted by an elderly woman, who called out "Susan!" and in came the young woman he had met the day before. He said he had called to get some information as to what wages she would expect and other items of like nature, but in reality he was desirous of forming Susan's acquaintance.

There are trifers among the lowly as well as among the swells, and Mr. Blunt was bent on an affair with the pretty lady's maid. He called often, and his attentions appeared to be highly appreciated. Susan seemed a bit fond of finery and jewelry, and Mr. Blunt considered himself fortunate in being able to gratify her, especially in the matter of jewelry. He made her presents of a few inexpensive ornaments, but they did not seem to satisfy her. John found her very fascinating and in order to gain her good will produced articles of greater value. Finally he found himself so deeply infatuated that he proposed marriage.

To his surprise Susan refused him. Nevertheless from time to time she gave him encouragement to hope that she might reconsider her refusal. She said that she had expensive tastes and was afraid that he would not be able to gratify them. She hinted at a suitor, a plumber, who had made a great deal of money, but she did not love him. Nevertheless she was thinking of marrying him because he could give her what she craved—jewels.

Upon this John shied off for awhile, Susan didn't seem to mind the change in his attentions to her a bit. Indeed, she scarcely noticed him when they met. One day she told him that she was in receipt of handsome presents from the plumber and she expected a proposal.

Soon after she had told John this he came to her one day with a brooch containing several large diamonds, telling her that his last master, a stockbroker, had given him a tip by which he had made a lot of money. He had spent a part of it for his beloved Susan.

Susan's eyes sparkled with pleasure at seeing the ornament. She put it on and admired it and herself in a mirror.

"You look fine in it, Susan," said her lover. "I'm so 'appy at my luck in making the money to buy it for you, seeing as 'ow now you needn't 'ave to give yourself to the plumber."

But Susan did not quite accede to the proposition. John begged her to end his suspense and agree to marry him, but she said that the expense of living was rising every day and she was afraid that without a permanent income they would come to grief. She would rather remain single and be a lady's maid than be married and in poverty.

But John did not despair, for her love for jewelry seemed to him to have been born in her, and his old master, the stockbroker, gave him another tip and he made more money. This time he gave Susan a bracelet, a serpent with ruby eyes. Again Susan was delighted and seemed to warm; but, though on the verge of consenting, she did not consent.

One day John called to see his love when she was not at home. Her mother received him and said to him:

"I'm doing all I can for you, John, with Susan. Persevere and you'll win. It's the jewels that's doing it."

One day when John called at No. 9 he elicited no response. He tried the door and found it locked. The same evening he tried it again with a like result. When a couple of days had passed and No. 9 was still locked John made up his mind that something was wrong. He disappeared himself.

Susan had returned to the home of a wealthy woman with whom she lived as her maid. A friend of this lady, also wealthy, had lost valuable jewels and had suspected her son's valet. Averse to publicity, she would have stood her loss without appealing to the police had not Susan, hearing of the case from her mistress, volunteered to make an attempt to wheedle them out of the thief.

John was discovered, but the jewels were restored to their owner, and Susan was well rewarded.

SPRING FASHIONS

BY I. E. HYDE FULTON N. Y.

Miss Fashion, you're a fickle girl, you keep the women in a whirl. Oh, what will you do next? You've pinched our hats up like a nest. Perhaps you think we like them best. But, no, we're surely vexed. Our necks you deign to dress as freaks. Our collars rise like mountain peaks. But, we must wear them so. You puff our sleeves, or cut them short; no wonder that the men folks snort and say, "She is a show." The waist, where is it? Can you say? Oh yes, it's here; but, yesterday 'twas higher up or lower. You make a sash and then a belt. I'm sure if you knew how we felt, you'd play us tricks no more. Our skirts first bind and next they sweel until we look like some old bell that's bound about with frills. We wore them long, but now, Oh My! But this we know—now we can try to step twelve inches long. There's no use kicking at our fate. Our hair, I s'pose, we must brush straight. We'd rather wear it curled; and, must we dye it green or blue? That old, old story's ever new—"This is a funny world." Miss Fashion is a—Sissy boy; he plays with us as with a toy. When Paris fashions lead. I'm mindful of our nation's plea—"American made." Ah! this for me—America, our creed.

Why Not Judge Everybody Alike?

The Evening Times is in receipt of a communication, signed by "Fulton Citizen," who recites the incident of Sunday night's police raid, and the subsequent sentence meted out by Judge H. J. Wilson to the young women found in the Ontario st. house.

"The Fulton Citizen" asks this question:

"What could two young girls, alone possibly, be doing in a house that it should be raided; and if there were others who abetted the disorderly affair, why were not their names mentioned?

"Also, why not publish the name or names of the person or persons who conduct the resort?

"Why not judge the manager of the resort as well as the offenders who frequent the place?"

"Fulton Citizen."

Opinions

Country Schools

The little red schoolhouse on the hill has come in for some pretty hard knocks lately. The last is that of Professor Wood of Columbia, who says that aside from its value as an educational plant it is no great shakes as an upbuilder of health. He says that city school children are considerably healthier than those in the country and cites figures to prove it.

Thus old idols fall. Pretty soon some one will come along and say that Lincoln would really have amounted to something if it hadn't been for his demoralizing experiences as a rail-splitter, and the fact that he had to pick up his education the best way he cold.

But as a matter of fact it probably is true that the city schools are more healthful for the common run of pupils, just as they are more efficient in grinding out education. It would be a severe indictment of our elaborate systems of inspection and our expensive teaching forces if they were not.

For the child of exceptional stamina, mental as well as physical, however, the advantage would seem to lie in the country. Plowing through snowdrifts and paddling along muddy roads, buffeting wintry winds and walking unsheltered beneath summer sun are likely to be as toughening physically as grubbing comparatively unaided into the stubborn fields of knowledge is mentally.

After all, it is he who goes along that goes dauntlessly and unflinchingly; for he knows there is none to aid him and he must make a good job if it.—Ex.

Compensation Costs

The State Senate has not accepted the Assembly's bill for a perpetuation of the job-holding tribe in the Workmen's Compensation Bureau; it ought not to yield in conference a particle of the vital principle involved.

In 1914 it took nearly one-quarter as much money to pay the salaries and expenses of the compensation job-holders on the Albany payrolls as to pay the awards of the thousands of injured workmen throughout the whole State. The compensation awards to injured workmen were $1,576,801. The salaries and expenses of the compensation bureau aristocracy were $470,967.

As long as the opulent appropriation held out the compensation job-holders got their fat salaries both easily and promptly. Thousands of injured workmen waited weeks to get their compensation awards, the average amount of which was about $83.

Whatever the purpose of the Assembly compensation bill program, its effect is to take tender and generous care of the tribe of job-holders, while the injured workmen continue to wait indefinitely for the receipt of their petty awards.

The people of New York are very much alive to the importance of preserving the compensation system, of perfecting its methods and quickening its results. The people of New York are not interested in, they are disgusted with, the useless job-holders getting rich pay while the injured workmen are strung along for their little award averaging only $83. The people of New York will be just as disgusted whether the prodigious funds going to the job-holders are drawn out of the State Treasury, the insurance premiums or the damages due to workmen that are mained and to the families of workmen that are killed.

It might never occur to the compensation job-holders, but it ought to occur to the Assembly, and it does occur to the public, that if princely sums are drawn from any source what soever in connection with our compensation system they ought to go, for the most part, not to the sleek and prosperous job-holders but to the crippled workmen.

The State Senate has been trying to legislate some of the job-holding aristocracy out of office, while at the same time providing for quicker compensation relief. If they can't directly legislate them out, let them stick to the next best plan of starving them out.—Times, N. Y.

Rockefeller Fund Spreads In China

Many Curable Diseases Prevail, Commission Reports

To improve medical conditions in China and provide better hospital facilities and instruction the Rockefeller Foundation has established a special board, with John D. Rockefeller, jr., at the head. It will be known as the China Medical Board of the Rockefeller Foundation, and Roger S. Greene will be the resident director in Peking.

The decision to found such a board follows the report of a special commssion made up of Harry P. Judson, president of the University of Chicago; Dr. Francis W. Peabody, of the medical faculty of Harvard University, and Roger S. Green, at one time United States Consul General at Hankow.

"The commission," says the official announcement, "reported that the need of medical relief in China was very great. Not only have many preventable and easily curable diseases prevailed there almost unchecked, from the earliest days down to present times, but intercourse with foreign countries and modern methods of communication have introduced into regions previously unaffected such terrible scourges as the bubonic plague and have contributed largely to the spread of other dangerous infections.

"So also have modern systems of transportation and of industry brought in an entirely new series of accidents in an entirely new series of accidents and occupational diseases with which Chinese civilization is not yet prepared to cope. A special obligation therefore rests upon western cilization to mitigate this suffering, for part of which it may be held directly responsible.

"The Chinese Medical Commission made numerous recommendations designed to meet the situation systematically, one of the primary ideas underlying the whole plan being to enlist the actual cooperation of both the missionary agencies and the Chinese people. The report of the commission has in its general outlines been adopted by the Foundation as a basis for its work in China. Details, however, will be studied separately, and each project will be taken up for definite decision."

The China Medical Board has been constituted as follows: John D. Rockefeller, jr., chairman; Wallace Butterick, director; Harry Pratt Judson, Frank J. Goodnow, Dr. Simon Flexner, Wickliffe Rose, Jerome D. Greene, Starr J. Murphy, John R. Mott, Dr. Francis W. Peabody, Dr. William H. Welch and Frederick T. Gates. E. C. Sage is the secretary of the board.

The plan outlined by the commission looks forward to the development of medical education in China as the first step toward effective work. It is probable, therefore, that two or more medical schools already existing in China will be aided by the Foundation to put themselves on a satisfactory basis, so that they can train graduates equal to those of institutions in Western countries.

With a view to building up a body of Chinese medical men who will in time be able to take the lead in teaching the medical sciences in their own country, the Foundation has decided to establish six fellowship, each of $1000 gold a year, with allowances for necessary traveling expenses, to enable Chinese graduates in medicine to prosecute further studies abroad. Six fellows have been appointed, one of whom has already arrived in this country.

It is also proposed to enable the missionary societies to send out a larger number of well-trained nurses. An appropriation has been made for five nursing scholarships to enable Chinese nurses to come to the United States and secure a first-class training at some of the leading schools in this country.

A small appropriation has been made for the translation of nursing text-books, and aid may be given to nurses' training schools.

TEAM COMING BACK; APPRECIATION WANTED

That Oswego city may appreciate the work of its basketball team, The Times of that city thus voices sentiment:

"Oswego ought to have some interest in the basketball team that has spread the city's name throughout the north west the past winter," said a prominent business man today. "Barlos and his boys have surely made good and should be able to close the season here with a big game against either Utica or Troy. The team is now returning from the west and will arrive late next week. If the Armory is available a game should be arranged under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce, to show that the team is appreciated here. Neither Barlos nor his men have asked anything from the city whose name they have borne, but they would naturally like to close the season here and show the home people the stuff that has won them such recognition in the west."

Basloe figures that he will get back home about March 17, the game en route having been canceled owing to the long, hard trip the boys have just closing. A game with Racine, Wis., Jack Noll's birthplace, on Monday night last, was the final match of the trip. The team might have had another week on the Michigan penninsula but canceled the games. They also had games scheduled with northern Ohio towns but decided to forego all contests and beat it back home. The team will rest several days at Rochester, Murphy's home town, and wind up the season either at Herkimer or Oswego with the Troy or Utica teams.

The boys had a score at Racine, winning by 33 to 27 in a fast game. The Lowe team represented Horlick's Malted Milk Co., which has its plant at Racine. Jack Noll got a big reception from his former fellow townsmen.

Edson Doremo has sold property in Sandy Creek to Miles C. Ostrander for $2,000.

PLEASING THE COOP.

Hens Have a Sense of Humor, and They Should Be Amused.

An eastern psychologist who devotes a good deal of time to practical applications of his theories declares that hens have a sense of humor. He says they would lay more regularly if properly amused.

Unfortunately he fails to suggest the forms of amusement that hens could be expected to appreciate. Of course roller skates are out of the question, and so are Teddy bears and paper dolls. A hen might learn to play hop scotch and tag and blind man's buff, but that would be about the limit. Of course the comic supplements could be hung around the coop and the "Lays of Ancient Rome," and other entertaining pabulum might be mixed in with the daily pan of mush.

But it's all experimental. Hens are so different. There have been hen owners whose whiskers alone were funny enough to prompt a hen to crawl into the hay mow and lay a hatful of eggs. Yet they never do.

That's the great trouble with psychologists;

"TWIN BEDS"

That there is a world of fun, wit, and unending laughter if you are a cliff dweller, otherwise a resident in an apartment house, to the onlooker is demonstrated beyond all cavil in that big laugh festival by Salisbury Field and Margaret Mayo, called "Twin Beds." Of course, if you are an occupant of one of these rest promoters, you may not see the ludicrous side of your daily home existence.

Three families occupy apartments over each other, the center is that of Harry Hawkins, and his ingenuous wife, with a penchant for making acquaintances in the elevator. Over them reside Signor Monti, the famous and fat Italian grand opera tenor and his wife. Since fame came to the singer, his amatory passages have involved him in many suits for damaged affections; but that does not prevent his making love to a pretty woman, in this case, Mrs. Hawkins.

Below Hawkins resides his friend, Andrew Larkin, who is to be married the day following the opening of the farce, to Amanda Davis. Hawkins is disgusted because his wife is giving a little party in honor of the tin wedding anniversary of the Montis.

When the tenor has about reached the point where he intends to admit his love he insists upon singing an aria, his rendition of which has made him famous. Mrs. Monto, realizing that "her curly-haired wop yodeler" is fast getting beyond marital control, tells Hawkins of the symptoms which precede a declaration of love on the part of her husband.

Monti and Mrs. Hawkins enter, the former insists upon singing the aria. Signora Monti and Hawkins choke off the burst of song. Larkins enters and shows Mrs. Hawkins the wedding ring to get her opinion, also, to see how it fits. The ring is tight and while she attempts to remove it with the assistance of Larkin, enter Miss Davis, who flies into a rage at seeing her husband-to-be holding Mrs. Hawkins' hands.

Hawkins, having received a letter from the owner of the building calling attention to a new apartment house just completed, for which he is seeking "desirable tenants," decided to move to escape his neighbors, and bribes his wife with a promise of "twin beds just like the Montis."

A pretty little love scene in the new home is shattered by a familiar voice above singing the famous aria. Hawkins is paralyzed, but recovers and dashes to the telephone, demanding who has the apartment over his, only to be told "Mr. and Mrs. Silas Jones." Again he phones and asks, "Is Signor Monti there?" to be told they know no such persons.

Hawkins departs for his club to participate in the giving of a loving cup just before "Mrs. Silas Jones" descends to his floor and brushing aside the maid pounces in on Mrs. Hawkins, who gasps, "Signora Monti."

There is a crash of glass. Monti's wife disappears to head off the escape of the tenor, who comes tumbling down the fire escape into the Hawkins' home. The acme of frigidity is the loving greeting of the bride and Mrs. Hawkins. They depart and Monti flees.

He returns at 4 in the morning, mistakes the Hawkins' apartment for his own, in his inebriated condition and creeps into the vacant twin bed. The denounement is as clever as the rest of the witty farce, to be seen at The Quirk Theatre, Monday, March 15. The engagement is for matinee and night. Seat sale opens Friday, March 12, at 10 a.m.

"THE LITTLE CAFE"

The offering at The Quirk Friday night only, March 12, will be one that will prove about the best thing of the season, for the underlined attraction is "The Little Cafe," a musical farce in three acts, which the original producers have introduced to the American stage with signal success. C. M. S. McLellan is responsible for the book and lyrics and Ivan Caryll composed the score. The original production and the New York company of over 100 people will appear here exactly as utilized during the year's run on Broadway. The cast includes: John E. Young, Harry Depp, Joseph Monahan, Colin Campbell, Maurice Cass, Makefield Moree, R. H. Woodley, Albert Stuart, William Doyle, Roy Hoyer, F. Stanton Heck, Marjorie Gatesou, Blanche Morrison, Edna Munsey, Bessie Stewart, Marie and Irene Cattell Grace Weeks, Irene Medora, Helen Larkins and Margaret Anderson.

CLUB WOMEN ENJOYED TALK

Mrs. F. E. Goodjon Entertained in Honor of the Speaker, Mrs. A. W. Hildreth

A luncheon was given today by Mrs. F. E. Goodjon of Buffalo st., in honor of Mrs. A. W. Hildreth, president of the State Federation of Women's Clubs.

Mrs. Hildreth is a Syracuse woman and since holding the office as president of the federation has been most active in stimulating thought in state club circles along the lines of human welfare work. Among the big problems set down by the federation for this year are the stamping out of illiteracy, prison reform, and purity measures. Mrs. Hildreth will leave soon for the western coast where she is a delegate to the Purity Congress and also will be one of the chief speakers at a convention for prison reform.

The officers of the Woman's Civic League were present at the luncheon given by Mrs. Goodjon today, and at three o'clock thirty-five of the local women most interested in civic matters heard Mrs. Hildreth in a talk on the value of the federation of clubs.

Mrs. Hildreth spoke on a big womanly topic in a big womanly way and made a deep impression upon those who heard her. Every woman, of unselfish instinct, is today devoting a part of her time to the world's big problems Mrs. Hildreth pointed out. The return in value for the effort spent reacts upon the individual with golden worth, enlarging the ideals, and making in turn for deeper sympathies and better homes.

The simple direct appeal made by Mrs. Hildreth, for bigger womanhood, bigger and better homes was felt throughout the group of women who were so fortunate as to hear the talk.

The local league is considering the possibility of joining with the state federation before the close of the season.

SANDY CREEK SETTLES BASSINGER DAMAGE CASE

The town of Sandy Creek, agreed yesterday to settle the suit brought by Evart Basinger, the town paying Mr. Bassinger $390 and receiving a discharge of all liabilities. The matter was arranged at a conference of the attorneys with the town authorities. County Attorney Gallagher, Judge H. D. Coville and Supervisor H. L. Wallace represented the town of Sandy Creek and T. Arthur Hendricks represented Mr. Basinger. The plaintiff claimed that the bridge over which he was driving on May 28 collapsed, throwing him into a ravine and causing personal injuries to his horse and damage to his wagon. He asked $5,000 damages.

A verdict of no cause for action was returned by a jury in Supreme Court late yesterday in the action of Lucretio Dragona, as administratrix of Raffele Dragona, against Francis F. Donovan of Syracuse. The cause had been on trial before Justice Emerson since Tuesday.

The plaintiff sued to recover damages for the death of her husband who was struck and instantly killed by an automobile driven by the defendant last fall. The accident took place on the east river road late last fall. Contributory negligence was found on the part of the dead man.

The case of William Winder against Charles Davis to recover $1,000 damages for assault went to trial. The assault is alleged to have taken place at Hannibal on December 1. The plaintiff claims that his jaw was fractured.

The action of Evert Basinger against the town of Sandy Creek was settled by the payment of $390 to the plaintiff. He asked for $5,000 for injuries sustained through the collapsee of a bridge.

It is expected that the case of Lucy McCriskin McKay to set aside the will of her grandfather, the late Patrick McCriskin, will be reached on Friday. It is the first case that has been sent to the Supreme Court in Oswego county under the new law. The plaintiff was a beneficiary under a will made by Mr. McCriskin several years ago.

Another will executed in January, shortly before the death of Mr. McCriskin, was filed in Surrogate's Court three weeks ago. The action is brought to set aside the later will on the ground that undue influence was brought upon Mr. McCriskin. She is represented by Thomas L. McKay, while Charles N. Bulger represents the McCriskin heirs.

BASKETBALL TONIGHT

On the city hall court tonight, the curtain will down on the basketball season of 1914-15, when Fulton High will line up against the Alumni.

HE DIDN'T KNOW EGGS-ACTLY WHAT TO DO

Replying to your inquiry as to whether I was over a shipment of eggs at my station, will say that I had not been able to check up my warehouse for some time but at once made a thorough search and have to advise as follows:

I found the case was set off here by train 77, Conductor Missem, a little over three weeks ago, and got shoved back in the corner of the freight house near the steam pipes and when I found the crate the chickens were just coming out of the shells.

I, therefore, have to advise that I am short the case of eggs I was over and over a case of chickens. Now, please advise me what to do—this is a bad "case" and my freight house is getting pretty "fowl" on account of having it here so long. Can't Freight Claim Agent settle for the eggs and I will send him the chickens, or maybe the fellow who owns the eggs will claim the chickens belong to him but in that case he should pay us the difference between the price of eggs and chickens unless you figure that the agent of the railway is the mother, as was stated by the agent at Punxsutawney at a recent meeting.—By "Albertus."

Raleigh's Advice.

—If any desire thee to be his surety, give him a part of what thou hast to spare; if he press thee further he is not thy friend at all, for friendship rather chooseth harm to itself than offereth it. If thou be bound for a stranger, thou art a fool; if for a merchant, thou puttest thy estate to learn to swim; if for a churchman, he hath no inheritance; if for a lawyer, he will find an evasion by syllable or word to abuse thee; if for a poor man thou must pay it thyself; if for a rich man, he needs not; therefore, from suretyship, as from a manslayer or enchanter, bless thyself; for the best profit and return will be this: that if thou force him for whom thou art bound, to pay it himself, he will become thy enemy; if thou use to pay it thyself, thou wilt become a beggar.—Sir Walter Raleigh.

Suspicions of Charles Reade.

Wealthy men are often abnormally auspicious of tricks. The celebrated author Charles Reade was one of this kind. He always imagined he was being robbed and set traps to catch the thieves. When he became lessee of a certain theater he suspected that his ticket office cheated him by letting in the public for anything they could get and keeping the money. So Reade turned up the collar of his overcoat, pulled his hat down over his eyes and shuffled up to the box office as the people were going in. He shoved a half crown in the box office keeper's hand and whispered: "It's all right—that's for you—I don't want a ticket. Just pass me through." The clerk ran out, seized Reade by his coat collar and was passing him roughly into the street when he recognized his "chief."

Origin of the Name Automobile.

The word automobile comes from two words, one Greek and the other Latin. The two words are auto and mobile. The former is derived from the Greek autos, meaning self, and the latter from the Latin mobilis, adverb, movable. This is originally derived from the Latin verb moveo, movero, movi, motus, meaning to move. We are unable to say who first suggested the name for self propelled vehicles.

LONG HAIR AND LONGEVITY.

A Theory That There May Be Some Relation Between Them.

Did it ever occur to you that there was any relation between a fine, bushy head of white hair and the long life of the owner?

I believe that I can claim without fear of successful refutation that a very large majority of men who have passed the age of eighty years have or had a goodly show of hair on the crown or top of their heads. I by no means claim that this is universal, for it is easy to recall men who lived to even greater age than eighty who were quite bald.

Without any attempt at a chronological list, I jot down a few names that come to mind as I write: John I. Blair, known at his time as New Jersey's richest man, ninety-four; Daniel Drew, New York capitalist and college founder, ninety-one; Hon. William E. Gladstone, English statesman, eighty-nine; Commodore Cornelius Vanderbilt, New York, founder of the New York Central railroad, eighty-three; Rev. Edward Beecher (brother of Henry Ward), ninety-two; Hon. Peter Cooper, New York philanthropist, ninety-three.

It would be easy also to name quite a number of men who possessed fine heads of hair who reached only middle age, but my purpose is not to be statistical, but rather to possibly start interest in an unusual subject and see what can be deduced therefrom.—Pittsburgh Press.

A Series of School Tests and an Ambidextrous Failure.

Ever since it was proved that in all righthanded people the speech center of the brain—the place from which talking is controlled—is on the left side of the brain and that in lefthanded people it is on the right side there has existed a suspicion that if a person became ambidextrous, or able to use both hands equally well, the speech center might be doubled, and consequently talking ability might be improved. Very elaborate tests have shattered this hope.

A German specialist obtained the assistance of the school authorities and tried it out on nearly 3,000 school children. After a careful record was taken of each child's hand preference, speech ability and general capability all the children were told to try to use both hands. For many months an effort was made to have all the children become ambidextrous.

At the end of the test all the teachers and other observers agreed that, though some of the children had succeeded in becoming ambidextrous, the effort had worried them all and had shown no advantages manually or in speech that in any way recompensed for the trouble taken. Consequently the scientist has decided that nature is doing pretty well with her own system of left side speech and right hand preference.—Saturday Evening Post.

Elephants' Ears.

The African elephant is equipped with enormous ears, while his brother in India has only small ears. Both animals have small, inadequate eyes and are forced to trust to scent rather than vision in the battle of existence. The Indian elephant lives in the jungle, where odors are pungent and easily discernible, but the African elephant is a native of the plains, where the air is dry and hot and barely circulates. The heat dries the moisture out of the tiny hairs in the nostrils which connect with the sensory nerves, and it is only through flapping his enormous ears that he can create the currents of air which enable him to discern any odor at all.

Travelers are prone to ascribe the flapping of an elephant's ears to fury, but this is a mistaken notion.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Gunners' Patron Saint.

Why was St. Barbara chosen to be the patron saint of all gunners? It is one of those things which are to be known and which one ought to know, but does not. Meanwhile there is the fact that she does intercede for all gunners by land or sea.

In the old French navy the Ste. Barbe was the gun room, and the name may be found with that meaning attached to it in all dictionaries. Moreover, in France she is the saint not only of gunners, but of all fire brigades. The sapeurs pompiers hold their holiday on the day of her feast.—Westminster Gazette.

COURT ORDERS CASE VACATED

City's Contention Upheld by Appellate Division; Other Suits Hinge on Outcome of McCarthy Case

City Attorney George Fanning received notice from the Appellate Division this morning in the case of Josephine G. McCarthy, appellant, vs. City of Fulton, respondent.

The Court had sustained the action of the trial court in vacating the judgment obtained by Josephine McCarthy for the sum of I1981 against the City of Fulton.

The ground upon which this decision was rendered sustains the contention of City Attorney Fanning in that the city charter of Fulton requires that notice must be given or complaint be made to the city of dangerous places in the sidewalks. This notice was not given before Josephine McCarthy sustained her injury at the corner of 2d and Academy streets on December 8, 1910.

The first time the suit came for trial Miss McCarthy received a verdict of $1981.00. Piper Rice & Prendergast appearing for her. This judgmetn was set aside and vaiated by a trial court and then an appeal was taken to the appellate division, 4th department, now sitting at Rocheater.

The result of this verdict has great bearing here because on the calendar in various courts there are $18,000.00 worth of actions for accidents to pedestrians who slipped or fell on sidewalks sustaining injury.

The same decision will apply to all of these cases, thus relieving the City of Fulton from any qnancial responsibility.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, March 11.—Extra session talk, prevalent in some quarters does not appear to be founded upon much fact, according to influential Republican legislators. Majority Leader Harold J. Hinman of the Assembly is one of the important legislators who is strenuously opposed to such a proposition and so apparently, is Senator Elon R. Brown of the Senate. Assemblyman Hinman says "no more summer legislation for me," while Senator Brown has said that the session would end when the program of the majority has been completed. Viewing the possibilities of an extraordinary session in the light of the utterances of the two Republican floor leaders, it would appear that the prospects of the law makers coming back in the summer are indeed remote

For the past six years there have been more extraordinary sessions of the legislature than ever before in the history of New York State. When there was not an extra session, there was some unusual feature in which the senators and assemblymen were officially involved and which kept them in Albany for a far longer period than the "one hundred days of legislation" which many believe constitute a legislative session.

Governor Hughes started the extra session ball rolling by calling the members back in an endeavor to pass the anti-race track gambling bill and was unsuccessful. Governor recalled the law makers with the hope of persuading them to pass the direct primary law. He also failed. Then came the administration of William Sulzer which resulted in his impeachment, a proceeding which required the presence of the law makers at Albany practically the entire year. The first year of the administration of Governor Dix as it is doubtless well remembered, resulted in a session of many months owing to the deadlock over the election of a United States senator. And thus it has been from year to year, sessions of such lengthy duration as to cause thosein the legislature to weather them with bitterness and impress those who did weather them, and who now by virtue of long service occupy the important posts, to decry against a long or extraordinary session this year.

If the arguments advanced as above are not sufficient to put to an end at once the predicition that an extrardinary sesion is sure to be the order of things this year,the fact that the Constitutional convention will take place this year should be the final blow against the fesibility of the legislators being called back to Albany. On top of this even, comes the declaration of Governor Whitman, made some time ago, that he proposes to permit the legislature to deal with the needs of the State without interferences except through the medium of special and emergency measures as h comes wise should be sent in from time to time to expedite legislation under consideration.

The economical promises of the Republican administration also argue against an extraordinary session. The weekly expenses of a legislative session are enormous and because of that it is obvious that the leaders in the legislature who are charged with the responsibility of adhering to the program of the party in power are not likely fo advocate procrastination; neither is the governor likely, the conservative ones say, to set the executive machinery in motion to summon back to the Capital city the legislators after they have decided that the program for the session has been completed.

CONTEST A TIE

The M. W. A. membership contest has resulted in a tie.

In the pool contest Lilly scored 50 against Blodgett's 33. The total now stands 452 against 466, or 14 points in favor of Capt. Ives' team.

Physicians Must Register

Fulton physicians have been notified to obtain blanks necessary for registration under the new Harrison Drug act, which went into effect the first of March.

Under this act every doctor as well as drug store musth ave a license number and a prescribed form to be filled out for every prescription containing the drugs. The act was drafted for the purpose of governing the traffic in habit forming drugs and medicines.

Liquor as a Bank Asset

The impressive fact in that Pittsburgh bank failure is not that the ordinary rules of sound banking were violated, as Comptroller Williams reports. Nor was the fact that a man who had served a term in prison its president of largest general significance. What will create the widest discussion is the assertion by the bank officials that prohibition laws were the real reason for its downfall.

It appears that the bank had become heavily involved in the securities of brewing companies and that the decline in those securities due to temperance laws in West Virginia and elsewhere undermined the bank's resources to an irreparable degree.

The assertion is often made that prohibition laws do not prohibit, and that a statute does not curtail the amount of liquor consumed. This fallacy is easily disaproved by financial statements of brewing and distilling companies. When state after state votes "dry," it is bound to lesson the quantity of liquor which can be sold, and inevitable also that the capital invested in the liquor-producing industry must gradually shrink.

Official statistics prove that the money invested in the liquor trade in America is very much greater in proportion to the labor employed than the average in all other manufacturing plants. If it be true that a shrinkage in a portion of such capital has caused one large bank to fail, the prohibition question at once takes on a new face. Obvlously it becomes the duty of bankers to recognize facts as they exist and make plans for the future accordingly.—Public Ledger.

Tough on the Joker.

The contributor wrote a joke about a plumber whose bills were always normal. "That," said the editor, rejecting it, "is not a joke; it's simply a lie."

The contributor tried again with a story of the plumber whose charges left nothing to be desired on the score of size. "That," said the editor, who had suffered, "is not a lie. Neither is it a joke."—London Scraps.

it had no reason to exist away out there on a flat plain; but it was built and developed by the spirit of confidence which when backed up by local pride conquers everything.

"Gentlemen, you can not live alone; you must co-operate; one must help another and one crannot exist without the other, so I urge you to be broad and optimistic, join hands in this movement to create right here that spirit of confidence which speels success.

"Real estate," said the speaker, "of itself is nothing; but real estate mixed with men means everything. The bottom of the scheme is inspiration, then confidence, then success.

"Emerson said: 'That every man is endowed with some faculty which makes it possible for him to perform what some other man cannot do."

Mr. Wilson closed his remarks with a statement that tomorrow he would show why Factory getting was a big feature to the development of a community and each day he would devote his time to various parts of his plan as the local conditions brought them forward.

Announcement was made that a fish dinner would be served by Manager McQuade at which the wives of all would be most welcome.

Why You Should Be a Member of Fulton's Chamber of Commerce

1. The Chamber of Commerce promotes acquaintance among business men. Acquaintance is the basis of confidence. Confidence is the basis of business.

2. Every man owes a debt to the community that is not paid by his taxes. He owes service to the community in return for all that is does to aid him. You get the greatest results for your service when it is rendered through the Chamber. It speaks for civic, commercial and industrial Fulton.

3. Man, like the bee, is useful and productive only when he has a hive as his base of operations. The Chamber is an organized hive. It can make your effort count.

4. Self protection is a universal instinct. It is just as necessary in business as in organized government. The modern Chamber of Commerce organization means your protection against unjust exactions. Government and public service corporations recognize organized business men.

5. The Chamber's value to the community is as much in the opportunity for service it gives a man as in the service it renders him. Service is the best means of self-education in business as in public affairs.

6. In the Chamber of Commerce, each member gets the services of several hundred minds in promoting his business for $25.00 a year. It is a wise business man who cashes in on such a proposition.

7. The Chamber is an independent forum for the discussion of civic and commercial subjects out of which come united judgment and action.

8. The Chamber systematically builds up the good will of Fulton throughout the country. This is a valuable asset to Fulton business.

9. One man protesting against a nuisance is a "kicker." Several hundred men protesting are taken seriously.

10. The Chamber asks every man who loves Fulton—not whether he has done his share of work for the city—but whether he has done all he can do. Fulton patriotism means your best all the time.

11. The power of the Chamber of Commerce is measured by its centers of information and influence. It needs you—your name, your influence, your money and your service.

PASSION SUNDAY PEACE PRAYER

Transcript of Peace Decree by Pope Benedict Read In Catholic Churches

A transcript of the peace decree from the Pope was read in Catholic churches recently that parishes might perpare for observance of Peace Sunday, March 21.

The decree of the Pope outlines the ceremonies to be carried out and the prayers to be recited. Sacraments of penance and holy communion are urged upon all that day. Signed by Peter Gasparri, cardinal secretary of state, the decree reads:

His holiness, Pope Benedict XV, in deep affliction at the sight of a war which destroys thousands of young lives, brings misery to families and cities, and rushes flourishing nations to the brink of ruin, yet bearing in mind that Almighty God, whose prerogative it is to heal by chastisement and through pardon to preserve, is moved by the prayers which spring from contrite and humble hearts, desires ardently that above the clang of arms may be heard the voice of Faith Hope and Charity, alone capable of welding together the hearts of men in one mind and one spirit. Therefore, while he exhorts the clergy, and the faithful of the whole world to works of mortification an piety in expiation for the sins by which we have called down upon ourselves the just wrath of God, the Holy Father has ordained that throughout the Catholic church prayers shall be offered in order to obtain from the mercy of Almighty God the peace which all desire.

Special Services

For this purpose it is hereby decreed that in every metropolitan, cathedral, parochial and conventual church in all dioceses situated outside of Europe on the 21st day of March (being Pasion Sunday) there shall be celebrated special religious functions.

After a recital of the order of the day this prayer composed by the Pope is ordered to be said:

Dismayed by the horrors of a war which is bringing ruin to peoples and nations, we turn, O Jesus, to Thy most loving heart as to our last hope. O God of Mercy, with tears we invoke Thee to end this fearful scourge; O King of Peace, weh umbly implore the peace, for which we long. From Try sacred Heart Thou didst shed forth over the world divine charity, so that discord might end and love alone might reign among men. During Thy Life on earth Thy hearth beat with tender compassion for the sorrows of men; in this hour made terriblew ith burning hate, with bloodshed and with slaughter once more may Thy divine heart bem oved to pity. Pity the countless mothers in anguish for the fate of their sons; pity the numberless families now bereaved of their fathers; pity Europe over which broods such havoc and disaster. Do Thou inspire rulers and people with counsel of meekness, do Thou heal the discords that tear the nations asunder; Thou who didst shed Thy precious blood that they might live asb rothers, bring men together once more in loving harmony. And as once before to the cry of the Apostle Peter; Save us, Lord, we perish. Thou didst answer with words of merey and didst still the raging waves, so now deign to hear our trustful prayer, and give back to the world peace and tranquility.

And do thou, O most holy Virgin, as in other times of sore distress, be now our help, our protection and our safeguard. Amen.

A Trick With Words.

An extraordinary memory was that of Dr. Addison Alexander of Princeton Theological seminary. His memory was not only tenacious of facts, but of mere words. For the amusement of young people he would sometimes say, "Now I am going to talk without thinking." He would then pour forth period after period of strange words and incongruous images harmonious and even rhythmical in sound, but wholly destitute of sense. If that seems an easy trick try to suspend your reason and give free rein to your fancy in periods that shall be grammatically correct and yet without meaning.—Youth's Companion.

War: Pathos and Humor

Tommy Atkins Always Ready to Shoot at Unwary "Gerbays"

"There you are, and keep your head down! It is a fair target at that distance," said the officer who had come out of the shelter to meet the newspaper correspondents who were being permitted to inspect the trenches.

The correspondents were in the defences at the edge of a hardwood grove called the Ploegsteert woods. The British had fought fiercely in order to get possession of this grove, for it meant cover for them. Occasionally, bullets whistled overhead and the swish of German shells which were being fired at something in the rear passed higher up, while a hidden British battery was sending its shells in the opposite direction.

At intervals in the defences men were waiting, with rifles laid, to plug any moving thing that looked like a "gerboy."

'If a gerboy helmet appears, can you put a hole through it?" was asked one of the riflemen.

"It looks so. They don't put them up very often, sir," was the answer.

Two hundred and fifty yards away was a wall of sand bags. The bare field between the two lines was as lifeless as a desert, and for all one could see the German breaswork was not occupied by a single human being. But there, as on the British side, sharpshooters were waiting and officers were watching through the refrecting mirrors of the periscope.

"Here we will be until the big push comes," say the men. By the 'big push' they refer to the movement when the new British army is in the trenches.

At night German patrols creep out to see if the British are up to anything new, and the British do likewise to ascertain if the Germans are. And sometimes some of the men are killed.

Those who are not on watch are lounging on beds of straw under the timber roofs. To the rear there are many more shelters where officers and men are quartered.

Except for thresh of shells and the bang of guns the scene is most peaceful. When the Germans cut loose with some of the rat-a-tat-tat of the rapid fire guns or begin shelling, the men take to their shelters until the storm is over. They always are in danger from sniping and are likely to be called at any minute to suffer heavy losses in repealing an attack. They are veterans who cease to think of possibilities.

"If you are killed, why, you are killed," says "Tommy Atkins," "and what's the use in worrying about it? The more you worry the better it pleases the Germans."

From Mons to Ypres the British regulars gained familiarity with death. Very proud are all the men who have stuck it through from the time of the British landing until now. When one of them was asked about it, he said, "just luck, that's all. Maybe I'll get it from a sniper when this winter is over."

"'Gerboys' May Hear You."

"Profanity comes too high," said the soldier. "The 'gerboys' may hear you and then turn loose. And it may not only cost you your life but your pals."

With darkness falling over the flat country and the buildings becoming shadowy the correspondents walked away from the cover of a village with the commanding officer of that section of the front, with the rattle of a machine gun growing louder toward the trench. Whenever any one goes near the front he is bound to hear the machine gun, even in this quiet spot of the British front.

"Perhaps—perhaps not," the officer replied. "The gun is laid for the top of their trench. We don't hold down the fire too much, as we want the Germans to know we are on deck."

"Are we in bullet range yet?" was asked.

"Rather—five hundred yards. That's why we don't walk up in the day time. The flares you see are going up from the German trenches." replied the officer.

These flares, like Fourth of July rockets, throw a glare over the sodden fields and revealed the faces of the correspondents and the officer and outlined their figures.

"In that way they keep watch to see that we are not creeping up for an attack," the officer added.

Another three hundred yards of plunging in mud and the correspondents descended into the wet earth behind tiers of sand bags and were walking on a board walk at the bottom of a great ditch. Step off that and one sank over his ankles. The commanding officer pulled aside a curtain and a lieutenant came out of his cellar looking neat enough for a parade. Neatness under any conditions is a point with the British officer, and he keeps his men upto it. It is amazing how "Private Tommy Atkins" in this sea of mud keeps clear of it.

Soldiers Sleep Above Water Line.

"If the men get careless of their appearance and in their habits," says the officers, " this means carelessness in the trenches which would bef atal. Thoroughness of detail and industry are of paramount importance in this kind of war."

Behind curtains in the same kind of cellars as the officers occupy were soldiers lying on board floors in their blankets above the water line. A subaltern was up for questioning, when the commanding officer found one of the pumps was not working. Pumping alone keeps the trenches from being flooded. The commander spoke to every watching man a cheery "good night," and from a soldier came an equally cheery answer.

On in that gigantic zig-zagging ditch in the darkness, slipping off the planks at times and catching one's self by stretching up the hands for support against the wet and slippery walls, for a mile the correspondents proceeded with heads below the parapet, while the German flares lighted the sky and while the British rapid fire guns whirred at intervals and the German snipers made reply. Then the correspondents left the trench and wallowed in the mud back to a point in the road outside the bullet range, where a column of sturdy soldiers was waiting before going up for their turn in the trenches. Behind them were supplies for the trenches and an ambulance to care for any wounded who had accumulated during the day in the trenches or those hurt during the entrance of relief parties or the exist of the men relieved when the German rapid fire guns sent out a spray of bullets in the hope of finding a target under cover of night.

The tired men who come out of trenches find baths and clean clothes awaiting them and have nothing to do but rest until they return to the watch, for the British army regards the care of each man's physical well being as the prime essential.

The trenches to the observer who sees the British army for the first time do not supply the most interesting feature. If one seeks picturesqueness it may be found on the road where the French flank and the British line join—where one sees the East Indian, a trotting trotting battery of French artillery, Belgian reservists at work on the road and the British in khaki.

The extreme thoroughness with which all is done makes a more lasting impression. The fastidiousness about sanitation and the treatment of the wounded recall American methods.

There seems little unnecessary fighting to gain any minor advantage in the trenches. Everything seems submissive to a purpose—when the time comes for the "big push," which will see the deadliest fighting of the war.

THE CITY MANAGER.

It is sometimes argued that, although the city manager form has the obvious advantage of providing a trained executive head for the city government, the man cannot be found who is really expert in all the diverse affairs of a large municipality. But if the search for such a man would be fruitless is it not equally idle to expect under the commission form of government such degree and division of expert knowledge among the councilmen as will enable each of them to become an ideal department head?—American City.

MODEL CITY OF JUVENILES.

Municipality in Illinois Run by Young People of Both Sexes.

When the Educational Club of Ridgewood, Ill., confronted with the fact that it was doing much for the minds of adults, but was neglecting the children, decided to form a model city of juveniles within the city to train the young in practical citizenship, the idea was immediately popular among the children. The city has been organized and christened "Ridgewoodville", and has the distinction of being the most complete child city in the world.

The children have elected municipal officials, from mayor down, and now have a board of aldermen, police force, street department and all other essentials of the well modeled municipality. As a means of interesting boys and girls—yes, girls, too—in the responsibility of good citizenship and the science of municipal government the plan has proved a great success.

After the city was declared duly organized amid the enthusiasm of every boy and girl it was decided to visit the various city departments and offices of Ridgewood, Joliet and other neighboring cities to note how the affairs of each were conducted. The children, of course, were especially interested in the police and fire departments, and the municipal officials gladly showed them the operations of each. The chief of the Joliet fire department went so far as to offer the embryo juvenile city some spare apparatus of its fire department, an offer which was regretfully not taken advantage of because the child city had no buildings in which to house the equipment.

When it came to organizing the police department every boy was eager to be elected chief of police, but Herbert Schefk was unanimously chosen. The policemen were selected under civil service. The examination was practically the same as that required by the city of Joliet. Eight boys took the "quiz," and every one passed.

Ridgewoodville is governed entirely by its juvenile officials elected at a regular election by its juvenile citizens. No grownups hold office, although they attend meetings of the officials as advisers and citizens. Their advice the children are not bound to accept. It is in every sense a city of the children.

The youngsters divided the city into three wards. Two aldermen, one boy and a girl, are selected from each ward. The children are strong for equal suffrage, and the boys insist that the girls shall have a fair division of power in the government and in all other rights and privileges.

The problem of financing the juvenile city was one requiring more than ordinary attention. The department of parks and playgrounds came in for special attention. It was found that the only immediate expenditures faced were for athletic supplies, so the children spent their first city cash for athletics. A baseball nine was organized among the boys and a basket ball team among the girls.

Some of the adult advisers wanted an appropriation for streets, but the children replied that all the work would be done by the children, thus saving that expense.

A local bank cashier was secured to deliver an address on the issuing of municipal bonds, and the children were taken on a tour of one of the banks. City government in all its phases is being taught by lecture and act.

Sanitation in the South.

A remarkable instance of what a rural township can do in sanitation if it makes up its mind to be progressive is given in an article just published by the United States public health service. Chas. Kerr township, in Hanover county, N. C., started out last summer on a sanitary campaign under the combined leadership of the county board of health, the state board of health and the United States public health service in Wilmington, N. C. As a result every house in the township has sanitary conveniences.

"If there is any other rural township in the entire south that can show a progress equal to this it ought to come to the fore and let itself be known," says the author of the article. "When a study of several hundred counties shows nearly one-half of the farm homes without any sanitary conveniences at all it is a matter of pride to point to the achievement of a township like Cape Fear, in New Hanover county, which demonstrates itself as being so far ahead of the average.

"While it has been repeatedly claimed by some public speakers that the south is making more rapid strides in improving its sanitation than any other part of the country, an examination of tens of thousands of farm homes in the south Atlantic states shows that there are yet many townships where the sanitary index is less than three on a scale of 100."

TOWNS FOR WAR VICTIMS.

Belgian Refugees in Holland Are Housed in Structures of New Design.

A new Belgian town in Gelderland, about five minutes' walk from the picturesque village of Nunspect, has arisen as if by magic. It has more inhabitants than any other in the Veluwe, the well wooded, hilly heathland of the province of Gelderland.

The town is one of the cities of refuge for the Belgian fugitives that are being or have been constructed in various parts of Holland, and this particular place is made ready for a population of 13,000. A large tract of heather grown soil has been fenced in with barbed wire, and within this inclosure has been built a town of wooden buildings, a town in three parts, each separated from the others by long, wide stretches of heather.

The wooden sheds have double walls to exclude cold and are covered with plates of a newly invented material that is impervious to the wet. Each building can shelter 250 persons, who sleep in little rooms designed for five persons each. The buildings are heated by huge stoves.

Meals are served in great common dining rooms for 1,000 persons each, with long tables and benches alongside. These dining sheds stand close to the kitchen, where ten big stoves are kept going all day for cooking. No separate cooking is allowed in the living and sleeping buildings and no smoking either—all for fear of a possible fire, which might have most disastrous consequences in this town of timber. The town is electrically lighted.

Another large refugee town for 10,000 people is being built at Ede, also in Gelderland, and other camps are to be made in other healthful localities, for it has been found absolutely necessary to evacuate the first fugitive camps, those in north Brabant, Zealand and Limburg.

In a kind of way the Belgians in these refuge towns govern themselves, although the burgomaster is appointed by the Dutch government. Under him stand the several parish priests, who know their flocks, having fled with them to Holland. The priests choose trustworthy men to keep order in the various sections and to be spokesmen for the people if they have anything to request. Every day the burgomaster makes the rounds of his town himself, and any one that wishes may speak to him personally.

A Utilities Bureau.

Preliminary plans for the organization of a vast national agency through which all American cities may co-operate in exchanging information about public utilities, were made recently in Philadelphia when the trustees appointed at the recent convention of American mayors in that city held their first meeting. After perfecting their own organization the trustees, who include men of national reputation, outlined the activities which will be essayed in 1915 by the new utilities bureau, an organization which, with its tremendous scope, is expected to lead to a fairer adjustment of public utility rates and service throughout the country.

In general the organization will serve as a national agency, in which American cities may co-operate in exchanging data as to maps, service standards and cost factors in municipal utilities.

About Sports Generally

By Frank G. Menke

The golfing clan has answered the first call of Spring and the vanguard of its army is abroad on the links today making vicious assaults upon the little globule.

The ice hasn't melted from the ground in some sections of the North; here and there the snow flakes linger still. But that is not considered a handicap by the golfers. Somebody discovered a robin in the northern part of the country the other day and the golfers have taken that to mean that Spring really is in our midst.

And so the golfers are goifing again and they will continue golfing until the zero weather and the blizzard of next Winter chase them to the protection of the old base burner.

Sporting goods houses throughout the country report heaviest early sales of golfing equipment in history. Most of their sales are of complete outfits, indicating that the recruits to the golfing ranks will be increased by the thousands in every big city in the country this year.

The new fad among earnest golfers is to have a few "action" photographs taken of themselves. The photograaphs, which catch the golfer in full swing, are good teachers. They show up many faults that a golfer has that he never imagined he had.

C. O. Hazlet, the great British golfer, always was considered a marvel of grace. That was because all the pictures taken of him were posed affairs. A photographer snapped Hazlet recently, while he was at the "top" of his swing, and even Hazlet could hardly believe that the clumsy appearing party was really himself.

" A certain golfer became disgusted with his game after the first three holes, and turning to his caddy, said:

" 'Have you ever seen anyone play a worse game of golf than I am playing today?'

The caddy did not answer.

" 'I say, caddy,' repeated the golfer, 'I asked if you ever saw any one play a worse game of golf than I am playing today?'

"I got you the first time,' answered the caddy. 'I was just thinking.' "

A woman is a woman whether she's a golfer or not. If you don't believe it, here's a yarn from the February issue of the Golfers Magazine to bear us out:

A woman who has not been playing golf so very long appeared in a tournament at the Lakeside Club at Tacoma. The only club she had was a brassie. She drove, approached, putted and played in the bunkers with the one club.

"Why didn't you bring your other club?" asked a friend.

"Too much trouble to carry them all around," replied the one-club player, "so I picked out the prettiest one."

A new beginner at the golfing game mangled the turf and missed his drives in such a way as to discourage him greatly. He mentioned it to a friend.

"Don't get discouraged; keep right at it;" advised the friend. "You'll be a great golfer some day."

"What makes you think so?" asked the dub golfer.

The question that has been frequently asked by a great many of Colonel Bob Hedges's patrons, as to whether or not Eear Hamilton, the starry little portsider of Branch Rickey's crew, would be of any use to the Brownies the coming season, since his injury in a collision with a fence on the Eads Bridge all but put the nifty little left-hander out of commission, can be answered right now. Dr. Martin Pike Lewler, the Brownies' trainer, who has been attending to Earl's pitching arm since his arrival here, says that "Ham's" arm has completely mended, and the injury to his pitching fin will not affect Earl's hurling this season. In fact, Dr. Lawler says that "Ham" will be a better hurler this season that he has ever been since becoming a Brownie in 1911.

Out in Pesh Robles, Cal., the other day Bunny came through in a pinch with a four-ply swat over the boards, with two comrades hanging on the sacks, and also contributed a nice single when it was needed. Brief has been playing sensational ball around the first sack and looks like a sure bet for the job;

That the baseball players at the University of Illinois keep their throwing arms in shape all the year around is attested to by the fact that 500 panes of window glass are broken on the campus per month. SMART COAT.

ATTRACTIVE COAT FOR YOUNG GIRL.

The twelve-year-old girl will find this coat very much to her liking. It is high waisted, with a wide belt of the same material and a covered buckle of blue moire silk. The collar and cuffs are also of moire silk.

White shoes and stockings are worn with this pretty spring creation, which shows also, as does the companion illustration, the liking this season for black and white.

An Eye For an Eye.

The law of Afghanistan is in theory the same as that of Mohammedan countries in general—that is, of the Koran. This is an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, and enables the party wronged to avenge himself on a relative if circumstances prevent him from reaching the aggressor in person, hence revenge becomes among the Afghans a point of honor, which no man may waive except with disgrace.

"Now, children," said the teacher, "I've explained to you the nature of a fixed holiday. Now, give me an instance of a movable holiday."

Her Wavering Affections.

"Hubby, I'm in love with that hat."

"You fall in love with too many hats. If you'll promise to remain constant to that one as much as six weeks I'll buy it for you."—Buffalo News.

Impulses more than reality-makers [illegible] and can make them understand.—Feltham.

MILITARY HATS.

Everybody Is Wearing Them and Looking Pert and Pretty.

Would you be in fashion? Then adopt a hat which in shape at least resembles one worn by some person in military service in the armies of Europe.

It need not be a general officer. It is the private or the marine who gets the head covering which is jauntiest. These hats must be of the sort which best become a feminine face not too old for small hats, which are only convincing when partly posed a trifle toward one ear.

Among the new millinery there is not a model exactly like Tommy Atkins', but there is a tiny affair which covers no more of the hair than does his of scarlet cloth. Like the majority of the military hats not designed for service at the front, this one is of black velvet. A broad sided rever brim lies so flatly against the crown that its presence would be overlooked but for an edging of narrow silver ribbon. Tiny tassels in silver or gold are new among military trimmings, but they are not a surprise, for they accord perfectly with the tinsel braids and cordings.

Homemade Icebox.

Few people know that a very good icebox for summer use can be made by placing a small box inside a larger one and filling the space between with sawdust. Set on blocks, bore a hole in bottom of both. If kept tightly closed twenty pounds of ice will keep in this box three or four days.

Air and Exercise.

Air is absolutely essential to the well being of every child. The mother should make it a part of her regular duties to see that her child has at least two hours' outdoor exercise every day. If school is over at 3 the child can come in at 5 to prepare his or her lessons for the following day.

THE ART OF SHOPPING

There is more in shopping than entering a department and buying certain articles. There is an art of successfully carrying out this necessary and delightful business that can easily be learned.

The shopper should remember that time is money and that salespeople are like herself, human, and equally deserving of courtesy and consideration.

There are one or two "Do's" that every shopper should lay to heart:

Do remember to have clearly in mind what it is that you require. Bring patterns if matching is to be done.

Do not forget that the saleswoman has to attend to many customers and cannot give an undue share of her time to any one. So do not indulge in long and unnecessary conversation.

Do remember that standing behind a counter all day is fatiguing and make allowances for human nature.

Animals No Longer "Stuffed."

Animals in the national museum are no longer stuffed, but a careful plaster cast of the subject is made and the skin is then stretched, glued and sewed over it in a manner that almost defies detection, and results in a remarkably lifelike representation. To add further to the illusion animals are presented in their natural environment and surrounded by natural foliage. They are often arranged in family groups, so that something more than an impression of how an isolated specimen looks can be obtained. Much care and pains were expended in the arrangement of the natural backgrounds.—Popular Science.

NEW SPORTS CLOTHES.

What the Smart Set Does For Outdoor Recreation.

This brings into consideration a most attractive display of smart neckwear, sports hats, trim shirts and blouses, the most swagger article in boot styles and a corresponding array of good looking sports suits.

Both corduroys and tweeds have their admirers. It is about six of one and a half dozen of the other in point of preference, so honors are even.

It is of green cotton corduroy. The coat is made with a smart yoke with the skirt part showing inverted pleats, which are belted in such fashion at the waist line that but a small portion of the belt need hang when the coat is worn unbuttoned.

The Distinguished Guest.

Captain Raabe was a man whose name had weight in the French cavalry. He was a tall man, belonging to the middle aged trooper type. With military qualities of the highest kind, he had a singular bearing, a savage sort of misanthropy and a cynical tongue, which stood in the way of promotion. When he was in the Sixth lancers, on garrison duty at Commercy, one of his comrades brought his father to dine with him at the officers' mess, a man of humble position and unpretentiously dressed. Captain Raabe, considering that this guest had not been fitly received, gave expression to his opinion, saying that if the executioner of Commercy had come in evening dress he would have had a better reception. The officers demurring, he made no rejoinder, but shortly afterward came to mess with a guest whose dress was irreproachable. Every one lavished attentions on the unknown. When dinner was over Captain Raabe, raising his glass, proposed the health of "the executioner of Commercy."

Sir Isaac Newton.

The discovery of gravitation was the first of many great ideas that came to "the greatest original thinker of all time." Newton was also the pioneer in announcing the physical properties of light. His epitaph, translated from the Latin, on his monument in Westminster Abbey describes in a few words the greatest accomplishments of Newton. It reads:

"Here lies Isaac Newton, who by vigor of mind always supernatural first demonstrated the motions and figures of the planets, the paths of the comets and the tides of the ocean. He discovered what before his time no one had even suspected, that rays of light are differently refrangible and that this is the cause of colors."

Why London Rises Late.

London's modern business hours came in with the invention of telegraphy. Before cables and wireless London kept its own time. Now its policy is to be in communication with the greatest possible part of the world for the longest possible time. The American continent is only waking when London begins to think of lunch, while the far east is closing down for the day. By getting up the early London makes the best of the day in both halves of the world.—London Chronicle.

A Venetian Episode

By WILLIAM CHANDLER

Many years ago, when the principal method of getting rid of an enemy or a rival was either by the stiletto in the dark or by poison, there lived in Venice one Andrea Casini, a gentleman of wealth, whose only daughter, Lita, was just coming to a marriageable age. The Palazzo Casini stood on the bank of the Grand canal, between the Rialto and St. Mark's.

Marriages among the Venetians were at that time usually contracted for by the parents of the bridegroom, but in this case, Signorina Casini having fallen in love with a young man of equal rank with herself, no objection was made to their union. Signor Ricardo Centimiri was a young man of wealth and family, respected by every one, and the match was regarded as an excellent one.

One afternoon, when the Grand canal was a promenade for the wealthy denizens of Venice, Signorina Casini and her fiance were riding in the latter's gondola, bowing to their friends and acquaintances as they passed. A stranger from Rome was also riding in a gondola with a view to seeing the beauty and fashion of Venice and on meeting Signorina Casini was struck with her beauty.

This man was one of the De' Medici family, who in its time played an important part in the history of Italy and whose members committed so many crimes, though his relationship came through his mother. His name was Lorenzo Crispi. On seeing Signorina Casini he inquired who she was and on being informed took measures to secure an introduction.

When an Italian noble of those days, especially a De' Medici, saw a woman he wished to possess, he stopped at nothing. Crispi visited the Palazzo Casini and, being a member of the most powerful family in Italy, was received with marked favor. Though he knew that Signorina Lita was betrothed to Ricardo Centimiri, he proposed for her hand.

The proposal interrupted the pleasant conditions with reference to the engagement of Lita and Ricardo, for Signor Casini insisted upon his daughter breaking with him and accepting Crispi. This at once threw the lovers into a sea of trouble. Lorenzo Crispi, having made his proposition, pretended to leave the matter to be settled by the Casini family, but really had determined that Lita should be his bride.

Signor Casini found it more difficult to force his daughter to give up her lover and marry Crispi than he had supposed. After much persuasion and many threats he told Crispi that he feared he must forego the honor desired him by a member of the distinguished De' Medici family, for his daughter was so wrapped up in Ricardo Centimiri that it would be impossible to force her to break with him. Had Signor Crispi made his proposal earlier Signor Casini had no doubt that all would have gone well. Crispi simply bowed to indicate his sorrowful obedience to the young lady's wishes.

Soon after this Crispi saw Ricardo debark from his gondola at the steps of the Palazzo Casini. Crispi ordered his own gondolier to draw up at the steps and followed Centimiri to the house, calling for Signor Casini. Learning that Casini was not at home, but was expected shortly, Crispi went into the library to wait for him.

Meanwhile Ricardo and Lita were in another room conferring as to how they could parry the efforts that were being made to force Lita to marry the stranger from Rome. Crispi saw a lackey pass through the hall with wine and glasses on a salver. Stopping the servant, he drank a glass of the wine and asked the man to whom he was taking it. The latter told him that it was for Signorina Casini and her guest.

"Present my compliments to the signorina and ask if I may be permitted to join her," said Crispi.

Permission could not well be refused, and Crispi was shown to the room where the lovers were.

"I desire," he said, with a profound bow, "to congratulate you both on your engagement. I wish you, signorina, as great happiness as I feel disappointment for myself."

Responding to these self sacrificing words, the lovers proceeded to reciprocate, the three pledging one another in a glass of wine. Centimiri was deceived, but Lita was not. She believed that Crispi had some sinister intention and resolved to be on her guard with a view to thwarting it. Presently she asked to be excused for a few moments and left the rivals together. Taking position in a room where she could see and could not be seen, she saw Crispi, when Centimiri was not observing him, drop something in his rival's glass.

She re-entered the room, and Crispi said to her:

"I was just about to ask Signor Centimiri to pledge me in token of his good will. May I ask the same of you?"

Lita consented. Taking up one of the three glasses on the table she handed it to Ricardo, the one Crispi had tampered with she handed to him and took the third herself.

"Let us drink," she said, "to a long friendship between us."

WHEN MEN WORE MUFFS.

Likewise Silk Stockings and Plaid Shawls and Capes.

In the good old days about which so many men so dreamily read and profess to reverence, and when men were believed to be more bold and dashing and daring than they are now, the muff was the thing of winter wear for men. It was a regular part of a gentleman's cold weather toilet.

Among Horace Walpole's Christmas gifts to his friend George Montagu, in 1676, were "Anecdotes of Painting," a pamphlet on "Libels," the "Castle of Otranto" and a muff. That was the period of the muff for men. It had been an article of men's apparel for many years before, and men retained the muff for long years afterward, it being cast off when men forswore colored silks and satins, rare laces and jeweled shoe buckles.

It was not so far back in American history that men wore silk stockings—not merely silk socks and knee garters and fancy garter buckles, and many men walking the streets of Washington today remember when their sex wore brilliant plaid shawls and when the cloth cape, called a "talma," was the height of masculine fashion. Now and then one sees a gentleman of the old school walking along with a gold headed cane and wearing a somewhat motheaten, frayed or shiny "talma."—Washington Star.

AN ICEBERG AT SEA.

One of the Most Awe Inspiring Spectacles in Nature.

There is nothing in nature so imposing and awe inspiring as the iceberg, writes Lacey Amy in the Wide World Magazine. It gives an overpowering sense of relentless force, of dignity and of brilliance.

Beneath the sun's vivid rays or the dark clouds of threatening storm, in the moon's cold beams or dimly through the shadows of moonless night, in calm and tempest—every one of them, from the tiny "growler" to the huge mass of spurs, arouses at first glimpse an awe undiminished by a growing appreciation of its beauty.

Always before one is the thought that but an eighth of the iceberg's bulk shows above the water, the remainder stretching down and down into the blue-green depths and out and out until captains breathe freely only when the horizon is clear of them. Far out in the ocean, with the largest steamers passing swiftly miles inside, they ground upon the bottom in tremendous depths and calmly await the relieving touch of sun and current.

In the wildest seas and strongest gales these frigid mountains float undisturbed. There could be no seasickness on an iceberg, for its foundations are fathoms below the wave disturbance.

An Earthquake.

The horror of experiencing an earthquake has been set down by F. S. Lyman, who was in the Hawaiian Islands some years ago, when there began a series of earthquakes on the southern flanks of a so called "quiet volcano."

"First the earth swayed to and fro from north to south, then from east to west, then round and round, up and down, and finally in every imaginable direction, for several minutes, everything crashing around and the trees thrashing as if torn by a hurricane, and there was a sound as of a mighty wind. It was impossible to stand. We had to sit on the ground, bracing with hands and feet to keep from being rolled over. The villages on the shore were swept away by the great wave that rushed upon the land immediately after the earthquake."—Exchange.

Getting On.

"How are you getting on with your photography?"

"Well," answered the young man with brown finger tips, "I'm doing better. The snapshot portrait I took of Mr. Curmudge must have been recognizable."

"You are sure of that?"

"Perfectly, for as soon as Curmudge saw it he said he could whip the man who made that picture."

For the Children

Winter brings no more glorious sport than that of skating. With the crisp, frosty air exciting one to effort, a good pair of skates and hard, smooth ice the sport is exhilarating in the highest degree. Most boys and girls will experience a thrill of delight when they view the picture of the young woman on skates. It will remind them of many joyous hours spent in this favorite pastime. In health promoting qualities no exercise excels skating. The ease with which one glides over the ice at great speed is the great charm, and by no other method of locomotion can the human being cover so great a distance without the aid of machinery. But in skating there are a few things to remember. Do not skate until in profuse perspiration and then sit down to cool off. That procedure is almost sure to result in a serious cold. When overheated move slowly about until the body is in a normal state of temperature. Of course it is unnecessary to remind young folks that thin ice and air holes must be avoided.

Who Am I?

This game is always a favorite, and, while not new, it may be made to seem so by choosing new characters each time of playing.

The hostess prepares in advance as many slips of paper as there are guests expected, writing upon each the name of some well known character in fiction or history on in contemporary life. Upon the arrival of her friends as she greets them she pins one of the bits of paper on the back of each. The wearers do not see them or know what characters they are supposed to represent, but are expected to guess it from the remarks of the rest, who are careful not to tell the name. For instance, the "Queen of Hearts" may be complimented upon her domestic talents and her delicious pastry and be asked whether her dishonest servant had reformed or been dismissed.

"Little Red Riding Hood" may be condoled with on the death of her grandmother and warned of the danger of making chance acquaintances on the road.

"Henry VIII." might be rallied on his fondess for the ladies and questioned about divorces; "Goliath" advised to "take a man of his size," and not bully a little fellow, and "Columbus" might be asked about his voyages and discoveries.

1. Behead in this place or state and get an adverb meaning sooner than.
2. Behead to unfold and get an article used in writing.
3. Behead to invade in a hostile manner and get to help.
4. Behead a place for sitting and get something we must do to live.
5. Behead to flush with success and get coming after time appointed.

China's National Tree.

The national tree of China is the tung tree, and it is valuable for both its wood and its oil. Its branches are wide spreading, and its bark is smooth and green. Its fruit, which looks not unlike a shellbark hickory nut, is as large as a small orange. In the center of each of these nuts are three triangular seeds, and valuable oil for polishing woodwork and leather is extracted from them. The refuse is used as a fertilizer. The wood of the tree itself is made into fine boxes and musical instruments.

The Seven Dolls.

Seven dollies went to school
On a lawn beach, nice and cool;
Seven dressed, fresh and clean,
Seven heads of golden sheen.

"We must be polite," said they,
"Never cry, always obey;
Sit up straight, as we are told,
While our little books we hold."

Mistress Betty, kind and grave,
Made the little dolls behave;
Taught them how to read and write,
And never with each other fight.

From her seat upon the grass
She taught each chubby little lass
How to keep her dress so neat
And her face so clean and sweet.

Also how to lead a life
Free from discord and all strife
And to others ever do
As you wish they'd do to you.

Seven dollies sought my call,
Mistress Betty led them all,
And they still gamble in their play.

GERMAN CHANCELLOR MAKES GLOOMY SPEECH TO PARLIAMENT

Statesmen Give to Dr. Von Bethman Hollweg a Cold Reception, Showing That His Days as Minister Are Numbered

Amsterdam, March 11.—The Germans Reichstag met this afternoon after three months' vacation. It was a sad meeting and the whole proceeding was melancholy. Many members were in uniform and the Chancellor was dressed as a general, but was looking aged and worried. His speech was no greeted with any cheering at the outset. It may be summed up in the words, "Everything is going well."

He admitted that the German armies had not gone forward, but quickly added, "They have not gone backward, either."

"They are an iron wall," he said, "on which the Allies are breaking their strength."

Finally, he denied there was danger of famine.

Even these platitudes failed to stir the members, except a handful of superpatriotic conservatives. The cold reception given to the Chancellor and the blank refusal which opposed his adjournment proposal, combined with Germany's hopeless military, naval and economic position, show that the days of Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg as Minister are numbered.

"A LASTING PEACE IS NOW SPRINGING UP"

Berlin, March 11.—The President of the Reichstag, reviewing the war situation at the opening of the Reichstag today, said:

"In the west, from the Vosges to the Channel, and in the east, from the Baltic to Bukowina, our armies and those of our allies are standing like a wall of steel and iron.

"In the south the brave Turkish army is guarding the Dardanelles, which a great [illegible] fleet is vainly attempting to conquer. This army also is threatening the Suez Canal and Egypt, which has become the prey of the British Empire.

"England declares she cannot forego the right to starve Germany. Germany has replied with submarines, the crews of which already have given many proofs of their heroic bravery. Germany is not to be conquered by starvation. Our enemies did not reckon with our economic strength, with the organized strength of our agriculture, commerce and industry, the unity of the nation and our firm determination to win.

"Our sacrifices are gigantic, but on the blood soaked battlefields a lasting peace is springing up which will lead our great and beloved Fatherland to new and flourishing power."

Dr. Karl Helfferich, Secretary of the Imperial Treasury, in his speech presenting the budget, said he would not deal with the financial program of the future, but would only outline the budget, which balanced at 13,000,000,000 marks ($3,250,000,000), which was four times greater than any estimates ever presented.

This budget, he added, was only intended to make legal provision for the coming financial year. For the army, navy and colonies, a more detailed project would be presented. The systematic redemption of the imperial debt would be maintained, 68,000,000 marks ($17,000,000) being assigned for that purpose. Measures for the redemption of the War Department would be settled later.

"Our enemies," Dr. Helfferich continued, "must be made to answer for the material damages they have caused by wantonly plotting the war. The current financial year will probably show a surplus of 38,000,000 marks ($95,500,000).

Dr. Helfferich asked the Reichstag for a further war credit of 10,000,000,000 marks ($2,500,000,000) to insure financing the war until the late autumn, and then proceeded to describe the financial situation. He asserted that both Great Britain and France had falsely estimated Germany's financial resources because Germany's increase of capital had mostly been employed at home. The fact was, th imperial secretary said, that the German national credit stood better than either that of Great Britain or Frrance at the present moment. There was no need, Dr. Hefferich continued, to impose new taxes in Germany, for the government was financing her war requirements exclusively by loans and note issues. The demands of the Empire on the Reichsbank, he said, again had approached the culminating point, but the bank would be relieved by the second war loan.

The Austrian war loan, according to the Minister, also had been successful, while of the enemy Powers only Great Britain had any noteworthy success with her loan policy. France's incapacity for decisive financial action, he said, was astonishing. France apparently had been unable to raise more than $2,000,000,000 francs.

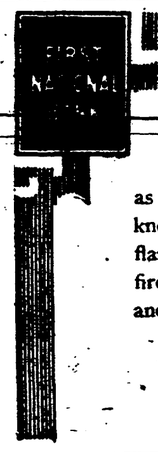
The Paris conference regarding a joint loan by France and Russia, Dr. Helfferich said, he miscarried on its essential points. The British financial policy knew how to cut the golden straps from soft leather of the Allies.

In the future, as in the past, Dr. Helfferich declared Germany would have to thank not cumpulsory measures, but the patriotic spirit of the nation for the satisfactory increase. The Bank of England's reserve of gold was due to inroads on the Indian gold reserve, the gold of the national bank of Egypt and the Belgian national bank and to similar [illegible] nevertheless its reserve now showed a falling off.

GERMANS LOSE 100,000 MEN IN ONE MONTH

London, March 11.—Frederick Rennet, the Daily News correspondent at Petrograd, tleegraphs:

"It is believed the Germans have lost more than 100,000 in killed and wounded since the fighting began in the Mazurian Lakes region a month ago."



The Daily Chronicle's Petrograd correspondent says:

"Competent authorities at Petrograd think an early retreat from the Ossoletz regions is probable. Such a retreat must also influence considerably the situation in theN arew section of the Russian front, where obstinate fighting at this moment is still going on.

"There is considerable activity on the fronts at Plock Kutno and Zgherj. Animation is noticed also in the Pilitca region. These facts allow of the suppostion that the Germans will persist in their attempt to carry out the plan of operations which they contemplated earlier. Despite the complete failure of their efforts in the Niemen-Ossowtz region, a new grouping of German troops is being effected for that purpose."

According to a message that reached me late tonight from Bruges, March 18 is the date fixed by the Germans for the next great offensive in Flanders. Troop movements continue on a large scale.

The Tribune has received a telegram from Budapest in which it is affirmed that an important faction of Hungarian Deputies has presented a signed declaration to the Hungarian government asserting that the situation in Hungary politically and economically is desperate and that half of the Hungarian army has been destroyed, many of the regiments having lost three-quarters of their strength.

TOWARD BETTER THINGS

A series of meetings for vocational discussion in the Abilene (Kas.) high school promises to develop into a vocational club. The boys of the school listen to representative men in different fields of work who tell of the requirements and rewards of their particular kind of work.

Seniors of the Boston high school of commerce, some twenty in number, have been visiting business men in their offices to learn what is expected of such young men when they apply for jobs. This inquiry originating with public school authorities is being promoted by the chamber of commerce.

Seven states in the United States and four provinces in Canada have enacted laws authorizing municipalities of 10,000 population or more to establish city plan boards or commissions; twenty-five cities in the United States have organizations for the promotion of city planning; thirty-four cities of the United States have city plans developed in lesser or greater degree; nine cities in the United States have authorized art commissions; twenty;nine cities and towns in the United States and six cities in Canada have authorized city planning commissions. The banker who agitates for a city plan is serving his city.

A practical step in the evolution of the village school as a social center has been taken by the people of Frederic , Wis. The schoo l board made arrangements to use the three omnibus, which daily bring the children to the school from a territory of 15 miles about Frederic, for the transporting of all the residents in the school district to the community for lectures, motion picture shows and other social center programs at the Ferderic high school. Business men are behind the movement. They hope to provide not only entertainment for the people, but to develop a community spirit for the commercial advance of Frederic and the outlying territory.

Lest year a school superintendent in a small Ohio town received a catalog from the Cleveland Home Gardening association. This is an association that furnishes garden seeds at one cent per packet, generally to public schol pupils. It excited the interest of the pupils. They asked the teacher to send in their orders for them. This was done and it was found that 265 packets of seeds, mostly flowers, had been ordered. This was done in a school enrolling fewer than thirty pupils. Plans for ten different homes scattered throughout the parish have been completed. These will, it is hoped, serve as models for the beautifying of other homes in the community. The parish priest, Rev. Joseph Hayde, is at the bottom of the scheme for home adornment. With twenty-four members of his parish Father Heyde attended the sessions of the short course at the college of agriculture, University of Wisconsin, and the meeting of the Wisconsin country life conference. He keeps in constant touch with modern methods, and opens the church doors to lectures for young men on agriculture and landscape gardening.

Rising Young Attorney Succeeds E. H. Bennett and Will Move to Pulaski

The citizens of Fulton will doubtless be interested to learn of the appointment of Merritt A. Switzer, a local attorney, to the position of confidential clerk to Honorable Irving G. Hubbs, Justice of the Supreme Court. Mr. Switzer will succeed E. H. Bennett, Esq., who recently resigned to enter into partnership with Secretary of State Hugo for the practice of law at Watertown.

The new appointee is a graduate of the Oswego High School and of the College of Law of Syracuse University, from which latter institution he received the degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1911. He was admitted to practice in September, 1911, and immediately entered the office of Coon & Coon at Oswego. In April, 1913, Mr. Switzer opened an office in Oneida street, this city. He became associated with Claude E. Guile, Esq., in January, 1914, with whom he has had offices in the First National Bank building.

Mr. Switzer is a son of Dr. W. B. Switzer of Oswego, N. Y., and a nephew of Frank J. Switzer of this city. Mr. and Mrs. Switzer will remove to Pulaski the latter part of this month, at which time Mr. Switzer will assume the duties of his new position.

Improved Gas Illumination.

Owing to the numerous improvements, the intensity of gas illumination today runs to 5,000 candle power and over in single burners.

The gas is also distributed under much higher pressure than formerly. The city of Berlin has systems in operation as high as seventeen and a half pounds per square inch. This pressure is obtained by the use of blowers.

Another practice employed abroad is to light whole sections of the city simultaneously. This is accomplished by an automatic lighter for each lamp post, which are caused to operate by slight changes in the pressure. These changes are in the mains and are controlled from a central point. The lights are extinguished simultaneously by [illegible]

NEUTRALITY TO BE GUARDED

U. S. Vessels at Quarantine in N. Y. Harbor to Prevent Dash

Washingtong, March 11.—That the administration does not intend to take any chances of swift German merchantmen, now lying in New York silpping out for the purpose of preying on commerce, as did the Kronprnz Wilhelm, was evidenced by orders issued today directing that the seagoing coast guard cruiser Mohawk take station at the Narrows, and cover all outgoing craft with her guns, and assigning the navy gunboat Dolphin to similar duty off City Island for the purpose of blocking the eastern outlet by way of Hell Gate.

The Mohawk, it was announced, arrived in New York today and will at once take up her station off Quarantine, where she will be in direct communication at all hours of the night and day with the chief officers of the customs. Any movement of German craft from their berths in the Hudson river will be known at once, and unless such craft possess duly authorized clearanc papers issued by the New York custom house not one will be able to pass Quarantine without running the risk of being sunk by the guns of the guard vessel.

The status of the German vessels at New York, it is said, is not that of interned vessels, and any one of the German craft now in the harbor, so long as she does not mount guns, is in position to ask for and receive clearance papers, the same as any other craft bound on a voyage from the United States to a foreign port. It is recognized that the application for and receipt of clearance papers would be attended by a certain amount of publicity, and it is doubtful if a German merchantman fit for cruiser purposes would remain [illegible] What is feared, it is said, is that some daring attempt may be made to run through the barbor passages. When it is considered thatd uring the civil war blockade runners successfully accomplished such feats in the face of watchful blockaders, crossed shallow bars and doged in and out among cruisers outside, similar dashes to sea might be duplicated with even greater chances of success by high speed liners.

Recently the neutrality guard force of New York has been instrusted to a single tugboat stationed at the Narrows. The tug mounted no guns, possessed little speed and couldn't

In St. Peter's parish, near Middleton, Dane county, Wisconsin, active work has been carried on looking to stop any craft which should attempt to run by. The situation now is changed by the presence of the Wolmuk and the Dolphin. Both craft are armed with rapid fire batteries and are capable of sinking in short order any vessel which might attempt to push by. tI is understood that under the new order of things every outward bound steamship, no matter what her nationality, will be compelled to show by signal, night or day, her number corresponding to her name, and unless due notice has been given in advance to the guard vessels that such craft has been properly cleared at the Custom House she will be stopped at the position of either guard vessel, at the risk of being fired on if she holds her course.

England Thinks the Frye Incident Should Remove Objections

[redacted] Allows German Ships to Sink American Vessels, She Cannot Sustain Her Protests

London, March 12.—The arrival of the German auxiliary cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich at Newport News, removing, for a time at least, another menace to British shipping, and the access of the British troops in the region of La Bassee are for the moment the most interesting topics of discussion in the British Isles.

Whether the Prinz Eitel Friedrich will be interned or will again put out for the high seas, it is considered here that her carrer as a sea rover must come to an end, for should she be allowed to leave after repairs, it is believed that cruisers of the Allies on the watch will account for her.

The possible action of the American Government with regard to the sinking by the Prinz Eitel Friedrich of the American ship William P. Frye is also being much discussed, and the general view is that if the United States allows German war ships to sink American ships with food supplies for England that government hardly can protest against the Allies' prohibition of foodstuffs for Germany.

Of the British victory in northern France there is no news beyond the official reports. It is believed, however, that while no great amount of ground has been captured, the improvement in the British position brought about by it is of the greatest importance, and if pressed further might compel the Germans to evacuate La Bassee and perhaps other points which make their line so strong at present.

Equally important was the success achieved by British airmen in destroying the railway junctions at Menin and Courtrai. These are on the German main lines of communication and their destruction will delay the arrival of new contingents of troops which are reported to be again concentrating in Belgium for another attempt to break through to Calais and Boulogne.

According to Dutch reports these troops have brought with them a large number of boats for the passage of the canals and rivers, and for the first time in months they include cavalry units.

There has been some fighting in Champagne, but on the whole the French seem to be satisfied for the present with the progress they have made in that region. In the Vosges the battle for Reich-Ackerkopf has been resumed.

These, however, are small affairs in comparison with the battles which are in progress in north Poland between the Niemen and Vistulas rivers. The Germans apparently are falling back in the north, but are fighting a rearguard action, which has reached the importance of a pitched battle, and are taking a fewp risoners with them.

The Germans are again in the Augustowo forest, on the East Prussian border, which has been the burial place of so many German and Russian soldiers. The Germans have brought up more guns, but of a lighter calibre, to bombard Ossowetz, while further to the south, in the neighborhood of Ostrolenka, they say they have defeated the Russians. The battle on the roads from Khorjele to

Speaker Defines Co-operation to Mean Acting So That Other Men May Act With You; Factory Getting and What a Factory Gets the Town

The third in the series of noonday lunches today was attended by more than a hundred men and women.

President Penfield of the Chamber of Commerce made an introductory speech explaining how the Chamber came to work out the present plan adopted for the growth and welfare of Fulton.

Mr. Penfield stated the committee of six appointed by him to investigate ways and means had worked most diligently and he then called upon the chairman of that committee, N. L. Whitaker.

Mr. Whitaker stated when the committe investigated the various suggestions that came to them from various sources all seemed to be lacking in promise of lasting results. Then on investigation of the work being done by the American City Bureau was made. At first it seemed the amount of money necessary was too great. Later the efficiency prescribed, the definite plan, and the results obtained in other cities which used this bureau to stimulate their growth appealed and the choice was made.

Mr. Whitaker stated the reason an explanation was not given the public before was that it was hoped to avoid the formation of a knockery club. Even so, it was explained, there are many discussions held in the streets, that the price of membership to the Chamber of Commerce is much too great—and the result of the campaign figured as nil.

Mr. Whitaker stated the committee is ready to shoulder any criticism that arises. And that the Chamber having made a contract with the American City Bureau for a period of three years will live up to the agreement, believing that at the end of that time there will have been built a healthier, happier and more prosperous Fulton to hand down to posterity.

"Fulton," said Mr. Whitaker, "is the first city in the country where its Chamber of Commerce has employed an efficiency expert, and should the success be merited the eyes, not alone of the State, but of the whole country, will be upon us."

It was explained a secretary is being furnished by the Bureau at a salary of $1800 per annum. It will be the duty of the Bureau to fulfill the wishes for Fulton's advancement through the desire expressed by her people. The Bureau is not at liberty to carry out its own ideas, but only those which meet the approval of the people of Fulton through the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Wilson, the chief speaker, in beginning his talk said, in many places the chief idea of the community seemed factory grabbing and the secretary was expected to get factories and, factories alone. This, the speaker stated, was a false idea of the beginning of growth; that there is such a thing as getting the right kind of factories, and the right kind of factories usually have the right kind of force back of them. Then, it is seen, when these forces, factors or individuals, are of the right type, they will search for the right spot for their people to be happy in, as the manufacturer of today or of tomorrow, is the one who realizes that for a working people to give the best that is in them they must live in healthy, happy surroundings.

"First," then said Mr. Wilson, "let us analyze conditions and see if our surroundings are such that the right kind of manufacturers will want to locate in our midst."

Detroit was pointed out as an ideal place for the worker. Recreation of the kind where the expenses fit the purse of the worker are found in Detroit. "To make a people good we must first make them happy," said the speaker.

In replying to the criticisms heard on the street, Mr. Wilson thought the best way of meeting the evident misunderstanding was to urge the individuals who pay the fee of membership, and find they have been swindled, to return to the Bureau and upon explanation would receive the full amount subscribed.

Many places successful in the business world were noted: Newark, for the leather industry, and Gary for the steel industry, were among those spoken of. None of these produce in their immediate neighborhood the product used. Newark is a leather center because it attracts the men who think in terms of leather. Gary attracts men who think in terms of steel, and so on. Conditions first rather than factories. "Men who think in terms of industry first will get somewhere," said the speaker.

"Fulton is primarily a retail center, and the fact that Fulton is here should be of direct interest to every one living in this city." said Mr. Wilson. Furthermore, he stated, "I believe Fulton is today getting but one-third of her legitimate trade. I am not in a position to prove today to you that Fulton is losing two-thirds of her trade to outside interests, but I hope to be able to do so within a short time. The question is, how much more would it mean to the merchants if they got the other two-thirds of the business.

"Your home paper is the daily ambassador to the farmer who buys, or ought to buy, in your city. You cannot do without adequate means for publicity. In one city the merchants suddenly became alive to the fact that their home paper was the logical means of beating the mail order house. A committee was delegated to consult with the publishers and they spoke in these terms: "We want to double the circulation of our home paper. We want the paper into every home in the surrounding community and too, in order to help you to help us we will give you sufficient advertising to enable you to do this. Then, in addition, down came a three months' subscription and coupons were given each $5 worth of goods purchased at the local shops. The plan worked there. You can work out your own way here.",

A rest room was received as a suggestion recently by the local branch of the Bureau from a business woman. This the speaker said was an excellent idea, and that by such agencies the mailorder house connot hope to win over the heads of the merchants who are first on the spot.

The intensely interesting talk was listened to by all with the deepest concern. But one unpleasant feature marred the occasion. A guest at the hotel who was partaking of his noonday repast insisted his personality should dominate the speaker's. Proprietor McQuade met the situation in a most pleasing manner as did Mr. Wilson. The assembly vigorously applauded both.

There will be no luncheon served on Saturday.

Objects of the Chamber of Commerce

The modern Chamber of Commerce, composed of representative business and professional men, is organized to take counsel and work together upon business principles, for business objects of business value to the best interests of Fulton. It binds together the best men of the community for community service.

The Chamber of Commerce makes known the business advantages of Fulton. It endeavors to make more advantages for it to advertise. It is organized to attract new industries and to help our present manufacturers by improving shipping facilities, by securing advantageous freight and express rates, by working for better housing and health conditions affecting the labor supply. It is organized to assist the merchant in extending his trade area, in promoting home buying, in correcting abuses in the retail trade. It is organized to take an active interest in all civic movements for the betterment of Fulton; to augment the efforts of existing organizations working for these ends; to further the development of every commercial and social advantage we enjoy; to inaugurate new movements for a city better to live in, and more advantageous to work in. It is vitally interested in taxes, in schools, in public health, in streets, in garbage and sewage, in parks and playgrounds, in public service and public servants. It is organized to study and apply every just and proper method for the ascendency and prosperity of Fulton. It is destructive only in its criticism and constructive in its labors.

The Chamber of Commerce concentrates and directs individual knowledge, energy, and ambition for the common good. It maintains the machinery to accomplish what many want, but no one alone can get.—Bill Haynes.

POWER OF A BLOW

That Fulton is face to face with a great opportunity is manifest. That this opportunity is being grasped is evidenced in the number of business and professional men who are joining in the organization campaign of the Chamber of Commerce. The success of this campaign for the common welfare of Fulton is assured.

The power of a blow struck by two hundred hands in unison is tremendous. It is almost incredibly great. The power which the Chamber of Commerce may wield can easily revolutionize this city. And from what I have seen recently I am firmly of the belief that from this time forward there will be united, effo[redacted] for Fulton which could be possible without this great b[redacted] whose every interest is indissolubly bound up with that [redacted] munity.—Bill Haynes.

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

WHEN—

(Apologies to Riley.)

WHEN the chilly blasts are blowing and the wintertime draws near and the price of warming woollens is exorbitantly dear; when the playful icy breezes play the tattoo on your spine and your optics are as moisty as a watermelon rine; then you vainly hunt for money at the bottom of your sock—when the frost is on the pumpkin and your overcoat's in hock. How you long for singing robins and the rosy month of June as you wonder how the summertime has passed away so soon; how you wish that frosty winter would forever stay away—why the climate can't be even all the year through as in May; then you shiver like a victim at the old beheading block—when the frost is on the pumpkin and your overcoat's in hock. Oh! you groan in desperation as you wander all about—as you try your best to figure how to get the blamed thing out; when you haven't got a jitney and you suffer with the chills and the sum you owe the uncle is four green hued dollar bills; that pawn ticket is as useless as the creamy suds on bock—when you haven't got a kopek and your overcoat's in hock. How you dread the coming winter with its whirling flakes of snow. And you'd almost like to warm up in the place where bad folks go; when the days are cold and dreary and the nights are dark and bleak and the air is getting colder ev'ry blessed day and week; oh! you'd like to seek the pawnshop and tear madly at the bock—when the frost is on the pumpkin and your overcoat's in hock.

THE OPPORTUNITY OF FULTON

Every day it is more apparent that more factories are needed in this city to give it that impetus which it is capable of sustaining. A fortunately located city like Fulton should be humming with industrial enterprises. The elements are here to warrant it. But we must have faith.

Just now there is more local optimism about the future of the city than has been apparent in a long time. If, however, our optimism stops with a mere lip acknowledgement of the fact of our opportunity, that same opportunity will wither away before it comes to any practical value. Opportunities do not tarry. They are as fleeting as the wind. Prompt seizure and strong binding are both needed if opportunity is to be caught and put to work.

Everybody is saying, "Fulton has the greatest opportunity that ever crossed her path." Nor is this conviction purely local. The same conviction seems almost to be nation-wide in its scope. Big men in all parts of the country recognize that fortune stands right in our pathway. The outsider is watching to see what we will do. He is curious to see whether we will measure up to the opportunity. He knows that we must run to fortune; fortune, though she holds out her hand, will not run to us.

We have got to show brain work, enterprise, breadth of mind, indefatigable energy, and an abiding faith in our own destiny. Great riches are attainable in Fulton, if we will go after them. All lines of business should develop to prosperous proportions during the next five years. Good profits to capital and good wages to labor should be the rule, not the exception. The very laws of economics are at this moment working in our favor. Man and Nature are both playing into our hand. Will we be equal to our opportunities? Our Chamber of Commerce will help us to be.—Bill Haynes.

TRUTH IN ADVERTISING

A lie is a liability in advertising, while the truth proves an asset always. Experienced advertisers are extremely careful about what they say to increase sales.

Selling just once to a customer is a trick, but the sales that satisfy, and bring the customer back for more goods, are the sales that pay the advertising bill.

The shell game of publicity is now in the hands of a few. What you say in advertising can make or can break you in business. The public is eventually right, and the methods of an advertising manager will show through after a while.

If you give all you promise and a wee bit more, you are building. If you fail to do this, you are digging your own grave.

If you fool them, the goods will come back; the customers—never.—Silent Partner.

ALIEN LABOR

It is against the laws of the United States to import labor without the country, but it is an extremely difficult law to enforce. Instances of its violation coming into court are rare, yet it is well understood that the importation goes on, even as it is known that liquor is sold on Sundays. And that fact should be held in mind when considering such decisions as that of the Court of Appeals in regard to the employment of aliens on New York's subways. It is for such work that contractors, or their agents, import labor in order that the contractor may have the labor wage as low as possible to gain the last cent of profit.

But whether or not the labor is imported, much the same effect is brought about by letter writing of aliens in this country to others abroad. When a big undertaking like the subway is about to be begun, or it started, foreigners write to their relatives of the chance to work, and a great many relatives come, mostly single men willing to work at low wages and content to live under hard conditions for a few years in order that they may be able to return to their native lands and live upon what they have saved under gruelling circumstances. When hundreds of thousands of these come to the United States and bid low for jobs, American laborers, naturalized citizens, and aliens intending to stay—all of them the people whom the government should take good care of—have to go down to the plane and pace set by these temporary residents.

The State and Nation sometimes passes laws designed to set a good example for industry, and with the high-minded idea that its work, at least, shall be done under proper conditions and in a manner not dertimental to the people. The eight-hour law is such a provision and the State's anti-alien labor law is another example. The law was passed in recognition of the effects of cheap alien labor on citizen laborers. The Court of Appeals has decided that the State has a right to protect its laboring citizens in this manner.

The very fact that is argued that the contractors are bound to lose money because citizen labor under the decision must be employed is the most emphatic direct testimony which has been given of late to how alien labor beats down wages and the standard of living.

When so much has been said about unemployment in the big city it would seem that the work could go forward with citizen labor. But, all at once, it appears that there is a scarcity of citizens willing to labor. The scarcity comes only when the laborer is asked to work and to live as the temporary residents are willing to do.

Most of the problems of the country, such as the unrest, distribution of wealth, etc., are concerned with the welfare of the people who work with their hands. They, most of all need the protection of laws. It is they who become unemployed, who live often under hard conditions, whose infants die, and who have the least opportunities. This is not to speak of the skilled or the strongly unionized workmen, who, although good complainers, can take pretty good care of themselves, often to an extent more than they deserve. If we permit the aliens to come here in such numbers should we curtail their employment?—Dispatch, Utica.

Opinions

To Tax Schools and Hospitals

The Assembly Judiciary Committee by a vote of eight to five reported favorably a bill for the taxation of property valued at over $100,000 owned by religious, educational, charitable and kindred instructions. Cemeteries, hospitals and homes for aged people would be included. There would be some shifting in the source of taxation, and another result would be to decrease the value of the properties which it is proposed to tax.

In a community having a $100,000 hospital supported by private contributions, the whole population pays a little more in taxes because the hospital is not taxed. If the hospital property were taxed, the whole community would be relieved of that amount of tares, and those supporting the hospital would either have to hand over more funds, or reduce the number of beds and the efficiency generally of the institution.

With universities and colleges the situation would be the same. Cornell Syracuse, Hamilton, Union, Columbia and other schools of the State are supported by endowments and private funds. None of them overpay their professors and instructors, nor do any of them do all the work that they could accomplish if they had the means. Not infrequently they finish the year with a deficit. They aren't money making propositions. The property of each is worth millions, consequently the tax would be large. It would cut down the work they do to a drastic degree.

For instance, an Ithaca assessor estimated that the tax on Cornell would amount to $400,000 annually. If that is true, it about equals the amount that the university gets from its invested funds or endowment. It would exceed the amount that the university receives in tuition from those among the 5,000 students who pay tuition. Treasurer C. D. Bostwick of the university says that the payment of such a sum "would greatly restrict the amount of work the university could do and would tend to reduce proportionately the number of students and the amount of instruction given."

It is argued that the reduction of the number of students at the university might be as high as 1,000. The unrented rooms and the depreciated real estate in Ithaca might easily more than effect what the city and State now receives in taxes. Hospitals and other institutions which do so much for the economic and social welfare of the State would be crippled in the same way.

Moreover, if it is right to tax a $100,000 hospital, why not tax all of them, and every church in every community? That is what might eventually happen.

Religious, charitable and educational institutions have not been taxed, for they are not money making affairs their work being concerned directly and wholly with the welfare of the entire community. For these reasons they have been subsidized by an absence of taxation. The people desired to encourage their work and growth by this method. It has not yet been adequately proved by the public that there should be a change.—Press, Utica.

New York's High Credit

The $27,000,000 of New York State bonds bearing 4¼ per cent interest sold yesterday was subscribed for four times and was awarded to a syndicate at a price little under 103½, yielding to the treasury a premium of nearly a million dollars over and above the face value of the securities.

This great success testifies to the high credit of the Empire State and to the fact that there is an ample supply of capital awaiting investment in sound securities. The fact that these State bonds are exempt from taxes, including the federal income tax, contributes to their attractiveness but disappointed bidders can find at prevailing low prices corporate issues of the "trust funds" class that yield an even better income.—Herald, New York.

The Better Remedy

There are no doubt employers who grind down their employes, paying a scale of wage which scarcely permits those paid least to keep body and soul together. But such cases are rare. Most employers pay all their workers are worth and are pleased to find them worth more than the scale and reward them accordingly. The Consumers' League of New York has reported that out of 15,000 women and girl employes in the city, 8,000 receive less than $6.50 a week during the busy season. Fifty-three per cent of those in large department stores earn less than $8 a week, while of a total of 104,000 wage earners investigated, one eighth receive less than $5 and one-third less than $7 a week. In the paper box factories women make only $6 a week.

As a general proposition this help receives all it earns. In the cheaper grades the workers are in an experimental station seeking to learn so they may be valuable. A large percentage for a time are practically worthless. Those who remain long at the low wage have made no progress. The supply of competent help is seldom filled and the wage for such help is sufficient for one's support instead of the minimum wage as the remedy, it would be better to start a school of efficiency, to instruct the beginners and the dull that they might become of more value to employers and to themselves. Before an investigation of wages is made there should be an examination as to competency. Seldom is the competent man or woman unemployed or underpaid.—Watertown Standard.

The Modern Chamber of Commerce

The modern Chamber of Commerce is an organization of wide interests and broad scope. The old idea of "factory grabbing" has been surplanted by the newer idea of "enlightened selfishness." The Chamber of Commerce is still primarily a commercial association, but it works in the civic field as well. The effort to get a bigger city now results in attaining a better city. The two go hand in hand—commercial advancement and civic improvement walk side by side in the march of the modern city.

It is hardly necessary to illustrate this point. The manufacturer is better served by healthy, happy labor. The healthy happy man has a greater earning power. The merchant can sell more and better goods to the man with more earning power. The same factors, though often they seem distinctly connected, interact upon all of our people.

The modern Chamber of Commerce is therefore an important organization, one whose activities affect the bank president and the factory hand, the public service official and the housewife. There is no citizen, man, woman or child, who will not benefit by the work of the Chamber of Commerce, and everyone can find in its work a field for their own special talents. No one can say "The Chamber of Commerce does not interest me", for the Chamber of Commerce is an organization "for the city, of the city, and by the city." The measure of its usefulness will be largely the measure of the support Fulton gives to it.—Bill Haynes.

Reply to Assemblyman Hinman

Editor Fulton Evening Times.

Sir:—In reply to an item in your issue of March 2, in which Harold J. Hinman, Majority Leader of the New York Assembly, attacked the Thorn Bill, permit me to say that lawyers are taught, among their first lessons, that mere hearsay testimony is worthless. Nevertheless, Mr. Hinman has accepted this brand of testimony as reliable and with this as his basis, has used his important public office to attack and seriously misrepresent the religious teachings and practices of a large body of the most respected, useful and law-abiding citizens in the commonwealth.

It should be evident to all that if Christian Scientists denied the existence of disease in the sense that Mr. Hinman uses the expression, the ranks of the Christian Scientists would not only be soon decimated, but the law would long ago have stepped in to save the Christian Scientists from themselves.

Not many years ago some figures were printed in the New York World which showed that in one year the number of deaths of children by diphtheria in New York city under medical treatment was 1,715 as against ten deaths by the same cause in the entire United States during the past thirteen years under Christian Science treatment.

At that time the official report of the New York Board of Health showed that a total of 27,111 children fifteen years or younger died under medical treatment, as against 32 shown by the World's figures to have died in the entire United States during the past thirteen years under Christian Science treatment.

I have before me a statement made by Dr. Earnest Lederle, while he was President of the Board of Health of New York city. He said, "Since I have been at the head of the health department I have received no proof of any violation of the rules and regulations of the Sanitary Code by a Christian Scientist. I know they are reporting cases of contagion, as required by law, and are taking the necessary sanitary precautions of proper isolation and disinfection. Violations are quickly and promptly prosecuted but I have yet to find an instance where the lawbreaker was a member of the Christian Science Church." As a matter of fact, it can be proved that no evidence has ever been offered to show that any epidemic of disease, anywhere in the United States, at any time, was ever traced to the negligence, or ignorance, or carelessness of a Christian Science practitioner.

Let it not be overlooked that although hundreds of thousands of people depend wholly upon Christian Science for their health and happiness, the best our critics were able to do after searching the entire United States was to find a total of only 32 deaths of children under this method of treatment. Furthermore, it must be admitted that Christian Science children are generally well and happy.

Christian Scientists do not pretend to be medical diagnosticians; nevertheless, their method of treatment is so effective that the number of deaths from all causes under Christian Science is almost negligible. Incidentally, however, I would call Mr. Hinman's attention to the recent statement of authorities of both the Massachusetts General and Bellevue hospitals, in which they admitted that nearly fifty per cent. of their diagnoses were wrong. It is quite evident that this kind of knowledge does not save from the dire effects of knowledge.

Sincerely yours,

Robert S. Ross.

French Liner La Touraine Has Had Many Thrills on Her Trips Across Ocean

LA TOURAINE.

LA TOURAINE, the first twin screw steamship of the French line, which was afire on her last trip from New York to Havre, has often been called "the gunboat of the French mail fleet." She was built in the company's yards at Penhoult, and no other twin screw ship was constructed so slowly and carefully. She was completed two years after the keel was laid in 1889.

She is 540 feet long, 57 feet in width and 38 feet deep and registered when built 11,675 tons. On her maiden trip she broke all records for speed from Havre to New York. She has two masts, which can be rigged schooner style, and there are five decks. She can carry more than 1,000 passengers.

When she was built everything was put into her that would make a ship fast, and her appointments were luxurious, even in the light of the magnificent ships built in more recent years. She has seventeen cabins de luxe and thirty-six special rooms. An odd feature of La Touraine is the naming instead of numbering of the passageways on which the cabins open. That on the starboard side is the Rue de New York and on the port side Rue de Paris.

She has been practically rebuilt, in some parts a time or two, since starting in commission and was at one time called the most beautiful ship coming to New York.

La Touraine has had her share of trouble, which pretty well ran the gamut of ocean perils. She has barely missed icebergs and derelicts and in January, 1908, caught fire at her dock in Havre, much of her decks and her saloons being ruined. She was out of commission a year.

In 1898 it was reported she and the Lucania came within 600 feet of collision in midocean in a fog. In 1897 she lost her propeller and had to be towed into Havre. In 1899 she came near hitting the water logged and abandoned British bark Siddartha while speeding toward New York. In March of last year she was partly disabled by broken machinery at sea and arrived in New York about five days late with 550 passengers.

La Touraine has much good rescue work to her credit. It was her captain who warned the ill fated Titanic of the presence of icebergs in its course.

She did splendid work in rescuing passengers from the Uranium liner Volturno, which burned at sea Oct. 9, 1913, with a loss of 132 lives. Of the 521 passengers saved La Touraine took off forty-two.

Captain Charles Caussen, Second Captain Rousselet, Lieutenants Isenic, La Baron and Royer and Mate Contre were awarded gold medals for their services, and twenty-seven others of the officers and crew were given medals of the second class.

La Touraine was among the first ships to reach New York with refugees after the outbreak of the European war and since then has carried thousands of reservists to France from New York. She was one of the first ships to start to the aid of the Belgian relief ship Camino, disabled 300 miles off Halifax last January.

SWALLOWED HER PEARL.

Doctor Sees His Wife Eat Up $100 Gem and Spoil His Joke.

The wife of a well known New York physician has had an ambition. She has cut out every clipping she can find telling of persons finding beautiful pearls in raw oysters served at restaurants and hotels, and whenever she has dined out she has apologized for ordering oysters on the ground that it was worth giving a forty cent order on the chance of finding a $100 pearl.

The husband finally had a splendid idea. He was dining with her at a well known hotel, and he slipped round to the hotel in the afternoon. A waiter received a liberal tip and a pretty, lustrous pearl, with the order to put it in one of the oysters he would serve. The dish was served, the lady spoke as usual of her hopes and swallowed the bivalve. The doctor watched with eager gaze, but nothing happened.

A very much exasperated physician told a friend about it in the lobby of the hotel half an hour later.

"Confound it all," he exclaimed, "that was the first time in her life that she failed to chew the oyster! Do you think I had better tell her?"

TO PREVENT TUBERCULOSIS.

Bills Pending In Thirty-two Legislatures Deal With Regulation.

The National Association For the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis in a review of recent legislation dealing with tuberculosis reported that bills on the subject are now being considered in thirty-two state legislatures. In six states—Alabama, Arizona, California, Iowa, Tennessee and Washington—bills call for the reporting and registration of all living cases of tuberculosis. Alabama, Connecticut, Iowa, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and the District of Columbia are working for laws which will require that consumptives who refuse to observe sanitary regulations and are a menace to others may be removed and detained in hospitals.

In Alabama, Arizona, California, Illinois, Maine and Missouri legislation permitting the establishment of county or local hospitals for tuberculosis are being discussed, and in California, Illinois, Iowa, Maine, Missouri and New Hampshire state subsidies of $3 to $5 per week per patient are being asked for such institutions.

Run Handcar 106 Miles.

Six men rode a handcar on the Ohio River and Western railroad from Summerfield, O., to Zanesville, O., and return, a distance of 106 miles, to get tetanus serum. A Summerfield woman had lockjaw, and her condition was so serious that the antitoxin was needed immediately. The round trip was made in eight hours.

Sought Sleep, Found Death.

After being told that the smell of hay would cure insomnia C. Bruso of East Chicago, Ind., slept in a barn and was found dead with his head buried in the hay. He had been suffocated.

POETRY PAYS IN ARMY.

Humorous Plea For Good Things to Eat Brings an Avalanche.

German newspapers are making very merry over a Sergeant Max Schwerdtfeger (literally translated, sword wielder), who some time ago wrote a poetical protest to the Frankfurter Zeitung from the field, begging the folk at home not to send unpractical gifts—smoking jackets of velvet, silk vests and the like—to the front, but to send instead things to eat, especially delicacies. The letter was written in the beginning of January.

Schwerdtfeger's poem was widely reprinted in German newspapers. It has now borne fruit.

The Frankfurter Zeitung of Feb. 6 announced that up to Jan. 30 the poetical sergeant had received no less than 1,027 packages, together with personal letters in every case, and in 800 cases the letters were in verse. On the kaiser's birthday Schwerdtfeger's avalanche was especially heavy, and he was obliged to distribute not less than five sacks full of food to some 1,200 of his comrades in the battalion. The Frankfurter Zeitung, which started all the trouble, therefore begins to fear that Sergeant Max may be rendered altogether incapable of living up to his heroic patronymic, and it concludes its account with this plea:

"So please, please, please, nothing more to Herr Schwerdtfeger. He is not a delicatessen hunter. Send no more to Flanders, but to others at the front!"

FIRE IN MEMORIAL BUILDING.

Civil War Relics Lost by Flames in Lowell, Mass.

Fire in the memorial building, adjoining the city hall, Lowell, Mass., caused a property loss of $200,000 and destroyed some civil war relics that money could not replace. These included the flag carried by the Sixth Massachusetts regiment when it was attacked by a mob in Baltimore April 19, 1861, and the uniforms of Ladd and Whitney, two members of the regiment, who were killed during the rioting.

The memorial building was a three story granite structure, erected in 1892 at a cost of $300,000. The public library, containing 100,000 volumes, was on the first floor, and the upper part was given over to the use of the Grand Army posts and the Spanish war veterans. The flames did not reach the library, but heavy damage was caused by water.

One Cotton Bale a Shot.

"Well," said a New York cotton broker, "the battle of the Dardanelles ought to furnish a strong bull argument. Every time the Queen Elizabeth fires one of her fifteen inch guns she uses up a bale of cotton—that is, so much cotton went to the making of the smokeless powder for that one charge. And as long as the war lasts the [illegible] spent on cotton for the manufacture of smokeless powder will probably average not less than $100,000 a month."

"TWIN BEDS"

The charm of "Twin Beds" lies in its naturalness, witty dialogue, marvelous slang, clean theme, and hilarious situations, which follow each other with the rapidity of a Maxim-Nordfelt in action.

The story is one familiar to those of us who have lived in an apartment house.

Harry Hawkins and his wife, Blanche, who has a mania for making new acquaintances, live in an apartment house. Directly above them are quartered Signor Monti and his wife. Monti is smitten with pretty Mrs. Hawkins.

Underneath the Hawkins dwells Andrew Larkin, who is to be married the day following the opening of the farce, to Amanda Davis, who is jealous of Mrs. Hawkins. The piece opens with a little party the Hawkins manage given in honor of the tenth wedding anniversary of the Montis.

Hawkins, who wishes to enjoy a comfortable chair, pipe and the evening paper after a day at the office, is not pleased at this attention to the singer, and has a spat with his wife about it.

Signora Monti, who is acquiring a thirst, comes into the room in search of refreshment, and has a heart to heart talk with Hawkins about her husband's admiration for members of the fair sex. She discusses "the symptoms," among which is his desire to sing a great aria, which has made him famous.

The hostess and Signor Monti enter, the latter protesting that he must sing the aria from "Il pagliacci." Hawkins and Signora Monti exchange glances of comprehension, and when Monti starts to compliment Hawkins, there is trouble in the air.

When the guests depart, Hawkins tells his wife that they are going to move; the landlord has fritten saying a new apartment building of his is completed and that he is in quest of desirable tenants.

The second act shows Hawkins and his wife in their new home. A pretty love scene is interrupted by a voice in the apartment above singing the aria Monti has made famous. Hawkins phones to the office and learns that "Silas Jones and his wife" have the apartment over them. When he asks "Is Signor Monti there?" he is told that they know no such persons, and departs for his club to participate in the giving of a loving cup.

Monti—who is "Silas Jones"—eludes his wife and returns at four in the morning, mistakes the Hawkins' floor for his own, enter their apartment, and seeing the twin beds, one vacant, thinks he is home, and proceeds to retire.

It would be unfair to tell the denoucment. Selwyn & Company have selected a strong cast to present "Twin Beds" out of New York. It will have its first local appearance at The Quirk Theatre on Monday, Mar. 15. The engagement is for matinee and night.

A PLAY WITH MUSIC

A musical offering will be ushered in at The Quirk Friday night, March 12, when Klaw & Erlanger's original production of "The Little Cafe," a play with music by C. M. S. McLellan and Ivan Caryll, will be presented at that house. The piece is one of three musical comedies which McLellan and Caryll have provided for the American stage. The first of these was "The Pink Lady," followed by "Oh, Oh, Delphine." "The Little Cafe" is founded upon Tristan Bernard's farce, "Le Petit Cafe." The original production and cast of over 70 people of the New York season will be seen here. The company includes: John C. Young, Harry Depp, Joseph Monahan, Colin Campbell, Maurice Cass, Maxfield Moree, R. H. Woodley, Albert Stuart, William Doyle, Roy Hoyer, F. Stanton Heck, Marjorie Gateson, Blanche Morrison, Edna Munsey, Bessie Stewart, Marie and Irene Cattell, Grace Weeks, Irene Medora, Helen Larkins and Margaret Anderson.

STORES MAKE MANY CHANGES

Attractive Fronts and Modern Facilities Will Be the Marked Features in the Changes

Improvement in the business section of the city is the order of the day. Rosenbloom & Co. is progressing rapidly in the building of a new front. An opening for a large display window has been cut in the wall facing the driveway to the livery barns.

Kellar and Wilson are making extensive repairs to their store in Cayuga st. New floor, front and changes in shelves, counters, etc., will make the store a model one.

Stranahan and Love are rapidly nearing the completion of the big changes made in their new quarters in 1st st. An attractive modern front, with hardwood flooring, attractive woodwork and other features will result in a most modern shoe shop.

The McKinstry Clothing store will occupy about April 1 the store now occupied by the Rosenbloom Co. Remodeling and redecorating will also be done here, and the shop will be too a credit to the city.

The lower floor of the old post office building will be occupied by Young and Hill, undertakers. The owners of the building, M. F. and L. F. Cornell, and editors of The Patriot will occupy the second floor.

The merchants making the effort to keep abreast of the times are deserving of public appreciation. No one thing can give so substantial an appearance to a city as up-to-date attractive shops. This in itself should be an inducement for people to buy at home.

TUG SWUNG IN MIDAIR

This morning when passing over the lower bridge people of Fulton were presented with a novel sight. In the big lock to the north H. P. Burgard, contractor, had the tug boat, John O'Melia, swing clear out of the water on wire cables fastened to bitts on each side of the lock. W. C. Fisher, superintendent for the contractor, figured out this novel plan of docking. The five cables which seem to be about one and one-quarter inches in diameter, appear almost too light to hold such a bulk.

The big tug hung clear of the water while the men were at work under the bottom which will be thoroughly cleaned, caulked and painted. H. P. Burgard expects to commence his final dredging work on April 1st.

CONFERENCE TO MEET IN OSWEGO

Pastor of Trinity Church Announces Plans for Next Month's Meeting

Oswego, March 12.—The Rev. W. H. English, pastor of Trinity church, is preparing for the Northern New York Conference which is to meet in this city April 7 to 12 inclusive.

Bishop J. W. Hamilton of Boston who will preside, will on Thursday evening, April 8, deliver his celebrated lecture, "Some People of Quality Whom I Know in Boston," and on the following afternoon at 3 o'clock ordination of candidates for the ministry will occur, followed by the consecration of a deaconess. At a memorial service preceding the ordination and consecration, the Rev. E. B. Topping, D. D., of Utica, formerly a pastor of Trinity church here, will deliver the sermon.

The program will be printed in the form of a booklet of 60 pages exclusive of covers, and the dimensions of the pages will be 5¾x7½ inches. This will be the most complete of the booklets ever issued in any city ni this section of the State in connection with the holding of a Methodist conference. It will contain, among other views, cuts of the two Methodist churches in this city and their pastors and of the four district superintendents in the conference, besides historical sketches of the city and f local Methodism and will be a valuable souvenir. It will contain the names of all the nearly 300 clergymen from the four districts of the conference, who will be here at the gathering, and will also give the address where they are to be bileted.

The program is not yet complete but full announcements will soon be made.

REAL ESTATE NEWS

BAPTISTS HOLD YEARLY MEETING

Gratifying Reports Were Read and New Officers Elected at Largest Meeting Ever Held in City

One of the largest attended annual meetings of the First Baptist church in its history was held yesterday in the new edifice. Beginning at 3:30 p.m., with devotional exercises by the pastor, Rev. M. G. Buck and his assistant, Rev. Wayland Bassett. Following this the reports of the different societies and organizations of the church, all of which showed increased membership and activities. Especially the Bible school and missionary societies. After the reports the roll of members was called and a large majority responded to their names either by testimony or verse of Scripture, the out of town members sending messages of greeting.

After the roll call an adjournment was taken for supper, served in the spacious diningroom in the lower chapel by the Ladies' Aid Society of the church, of which Mrs. John Wilson is president. The evening meeting was called to order at 7:30 by the pastor, deacons Dockstater and Streeter offering prayer. Edward Hart was elected delegate to the Northern Baptist Convention which will be held in Los Angeles in May. Mr. Hart is in Passedena at the present time.

The election of officers for the year took place when the following were elected:

Church clerk, Clara G. Wilson; treasure of benevolence, C. W. Streeter; superintendent of S. S., Edward O. Hart; assistant superintendents, F. B. Trask, Chas. Whitmore; secretary and treasurer S. S., Lena Gardner; muic committee, E. E. Hart; chairman usher committee, Frank Cordonniere; deacons, C. W. Streeter, 3 years; M. C. Freeman, 3 years; deaconess, Mrs. Martha Bailey, 3 years; benevolence committee, C. W. Streeter, chairman; Mrs. J. A. Kempston, John Morton, Hannah Jones, Ada M. Wright, Harold J. Shafer.

After the election Rev. James Coote, pastor of the Baptist church of Baldwinsville, delivered the address of the evening, his subject being "A Peculiar People."

The reports show that the church is not standing still but that a large number have united with the church during the past year. Last Sunday the pastor gave the hand of fellowship to a company of people who competely filled the space between the pulpit and first row of pews. More candidates were received at the meeting last evening. There are some 20 candidates awaiting Baptism.

The church has taken the name of "The Church of Cordial Welcome" and is living up to it.

The treasurer of the building fund showed a remarkable report in this year of financial depression. Starting January 1, 1914, with only $2200 a building costing $25,000 was completed with every cent of indebtedness taken care of either by cash or pledges, with all the current expenses of the church met, no indebtedness and the missionary budget taken care of and with the large number of accessions to the church this has been the most wonderful year in the history.

The pastor, besides conducting the work in Fulton, is assisting several other churches in their plans for new churches and financing them.

THE FORCES THAT WIN BILLY SUNDAY

A recent Sunday sermon was on "The Forces That Win." He said: I feel that I am talking to the future through you as a long-distance telephone.

At the time of President McKinley's funeral procession this country for five minutes stopped all work. The railroads, every factory, the machinery of this land stood still; the banker stopped counting his money; the merchant quit measuring the commodities and left them unmeasured, the farmer stopped his plow in the furrow, every student closed his book for five minutes, and with uncovered heads we all attempted to pay a mark of respect and tribute to the man who had tried to make this a better nation, and happier men and women and children.

I am glad we did that, thus showing to the people that we did not forget to place a high value on character although we seem at times to be commercially dazed and drunk. We stood still long enough to testify to the world that it matters not what political party a man belongs, if he tries to make this a better nation and make better homes.

I am glad there are a great many periods in our lives when we laugh, and I can recall a good many in my life that I wish I could forget.

700 Years of Service Given McKinley

Seventy-five million people in the United States each giving five minutes, would make over 700 years of service rendered McKinley. I am glad we did it. I am glad there is a Fourth of July when we uncoil our enthusiasm and testify to the world that we realize at what cost we laid the foundation of the greatest nation God's eyes ever rested upon.

I am glad there is an Easter to recall him that burst through the bonds of death; I am glad we have Christmas to recall him that was born amidst the malodorous, unwashed beasts in the manager to save us, if we are men and women enough to accept him.

I am glad there is a Labor day to pay tribute to the man with the dinner bucket and calloused hand. I am glad we have a Thanksgiving day, when we all journey back home and eat turkey and cranberry sauce and mince pie. As a nation, we can raise enough to feed the world.

I read the other day of a man who was shipwrecked on an island where everybody and everything was small. The men and women were only six inches high and the children were proportionately small in size. He was the biggest thing they had ever seen, and he created a sensation among them. He was requested when he went out to have a stroll to notify the police, so that when he walked along the streets they could have a brass band ahead of him so that he wouldn't stop a funeral procession or step on a labor parade; he was requested not to swing his arms, so that he wouldn't knock down a church steeple, and so he created a sensation.

The Smallness of Man

He went to sea again and was wrecked the second time. This time he was on an island where everything and everybody were large. Men and women were 60 feet high and the kids proportionate. He was the smallest thing they had ever seen, and he created a sensation by contrast. He saw a giant, but the giant took a couple of steps and got him and put him in his pocket and carried him home and dumpled him in the lap of his 9-year-old daughter and said: "Sissie, there's a plaything for you." She had a cage made and put him in it.

When she went out calling she took him along for a doll, as a plaything. I tried to imagine myself on the island as a big man, as he was. How chesty I became. I went strutting along as I picked my way along the street none so big as I. I felt like Alexander the Great when there were no more worlds to conquer. And when I tried to imagine myself on the island as a little man, how small, how shriveled up, how dried up I became. So we are big or little, not owing to our avoirdupois, but where we are.

Listen, you boys, when you go into the world it takes something more than being a studen to make a successful man. But a student is a thousand times bigger than the God-forsaken mutt of a corner loafer who hangs about the barroom drinking all he can and sneering at religion. The girl student is a bigger woman than the girl who spends all her time seeking after pleasures.

It is like a girl, when she is about 17 years of age, and her mother introduces her to some young man. She says: "Mamma, mamma, who is he?" When she becomes 24, and her mother introduces her to some young man, she says: "Mamma, mamma, what is he?" But when she is 35, she says: "Mamma, mamma, for God's sake, where is he?"

Your Size Depends on Where You Are

You know Squire Jones is Squire where he lives because everybody in town helps to magnify Squire Jones But bring Squire Jones to Broad and Chestnut streets and let him rub eldows with the crowd and be jostled about. Let him throw back his head and look up at the buildings to count the stories. You know what happens. He is just a unit in the crowd. But at home he's some pumpkin.

It is like the grasshopper. He sat on a sunflower, and he swelled up with pride, and he said, "I am the biggest thing that ever happened, and when I strike the ground it will tremble as from an earthquake." And he leaped to the ground, right in front of a big turkey gobbler. The earth did not tremble, but along came a big fat hen, and she said to the turkey gobbler: "Did you see a fat-legged grasshopper pass along this way?" And as the turkey gobbler gulped, he said: "He didn't pass; he stopped."

As the grasshopper tried to adjust himself in the craw of the gobbler to a more comfortable position, he said: "How little and dried up and useless I am in here. How big was I out there, or how big I thought I was." You are big or little, not according to avoirdupois, but according to where you are.

Schoolboy Bigger Than Loafer

How many opportunities to develop yourselves physically and morally and to make good you pass up because you are too lazy to do anything except make yourself fit to be one of the crowd.

Now, young folk, I want to tell you something in the hope that I can induce you to write your lives in italics.

I hold that the boy who goes to school is bigger than the young lobster that loafs in the streets, smokes cigarettes, goes into the back door of grog shops and tries to drink the whole bunch under the table. It is bigger to pray than it is to blaspheme; it is bigger to pray than it is to be that little scoundrel that walks the streets blaspheming and sneering at religion. It is bigger to sit in church than it is to line up with the bunch at some bar with a French plate glass in front.

We have the greatest nation in the universe, and the greatest opportunities to become something in all the world, and if you can't become something, you are a mutt, a mollycoddle, excess baggage, and nothing but a mere cipher.

This element in us; this hope for something better is nature clearing the ground. That is why the young man goes west. He is tired of being a molehill and wants to be a mountain.

Not to grow up, not to get bigger is to bring on yourself the contempt of those who do grow.

Don't Borrow Trouble

You can tell a young man's size by what is overcoming. Those who borrow trouble never get a chance to pay it back. Remember that. It is not necessary to be in a great place to be great. Gettysburg was only a blot on the map until they fought their battle there. Little Bedford's little jail was unknown until John Bunyan wrote "Pilgrim's Progress"—the place was great because the work was great.

I can tell a man's size by what he is doing. I know the size of the man who stole an umbrella the same as if I measured him for a suit of clothes.

I know the size of the young buck that goes out and hits the booze and rolls into the house at 4 a. m., the fellow that goes around with a cigarette hanging from his lower lip. I know the size of the sissy young girl that eats fudge, bangs her hair and plays bridge whist all day.

Show your grit. Show the George Washington in you; it was grit in Valley Forge, and crossing the icy waters of the Delaware; show the Abraham Lincoln in you which signs your declaration of independence and emancipation.

Look on the Bright Side

Listen to me: If I could just get you to look on the bright side and smile an hour a day during the six weeks these meetings last, when I would get through I would hardly know you, or your parents, either, like the street barker who stood on the street selling soap. He said: "Ladies and gentlemen, give me your attention; I got the finest brand of soap to offer for your consideration that was ever manufactured." An old former bought a cake of it and took a bath and his own dog bit him. Just remember, boys and girls, you can't have everything.

Somebody once said to me, "Say, Bill, I have had to battle my way through life and break out of sewers of poverty, squalor and want." So have I, boss; I've been through that school myself and I know what it is. You can't teach me anything along that line. I have taken a post-graduate course in that, but nobody ever lost out that had the determination to win.

Some fellow says he will never get married, but when he meets the right girl, when some girl crosses his path, he will fall so dead in love with her that his heart bone sticks out two inches abnormally; some girl with eyes like a raven, hair like the midnight, teeth like pearls behind lips of coral. And if some young fellow don't cut him out in six months he will be looking for a flat, and in less than a year he will be tacking down carpet and hanging pictures. When desire comes, he will build a tunnel through any mountain that impedes progress in this world.

You ask how am I going to get this. Well, you can ask a tack in a keg of nails how he feels. He would say, I am not going to continue to be a tack; I am going to become as big as the biggest spike in the keg. How can I become it?

By going with people bigger than yourself. Go to college, read good books. Growand develop and become something in this old world. When a boy drinks, swears, blasphemes, sneers at religion it is simply because he is going with company that makes him do it or his lobster of a father swears in his hearing.

A peasant boy went into the Louvre in Paris and looked upon a great painting and it incited the latent power in him and he became a world famous artist. So if you want to become a robber, sit around and read "Dead-Shot Dick," "Deadwood Dick" and stuff like that. That would make a robber out of any boy.

Wants to Jail Song Writers

Wish I could sentence fifty of the ponular writers of today to the penitentiary for the stuff they write. Of a gang in Chicago I knew of who read that stuff, four have hung for it and others are serving life sentences.

A girrl was once granted a wish by a genii, who told her to walk through a magic corn field and pluck the fullest and ripest ear of corn she could find, and her wish would be granted. The girl walked through rows of full eared corn, but hesitated to pluck one, hoping to find a better one further on. As she walked on the ears were less full grown, and finally she came to rows of nubbins. She scorned to pluck a nubbin and walked on. Soon she was up to her arms in weeds and had plucked no ear of corn.

So it is here, in Philadelphia. Some of you have walked on for fifty years, and you have nothing to show for it but a few straggling gray hairs, a ragged suit of clothes, a whiskey breath and a character murdered long ago. So you have got to have a definite aim in life.

If you find a man on top of the hills in this world's conflict, you can make up your mind he did not alight there; he had to climb. There are five things you need to make a ladder upon which to climb; first, blood; second, environment; third, sand; fourth, educatjon, and, above all, you need Christianity, if you want to be on the top of this heap.

IN SURROGATE'S COURT

The will of Clark Landers, late of Hastings, filed in Surrogate's Court yesterday disposes of an estate valued at $6,000 real and $6,000 personal. The estate, except for a horse called Dan Patch, and buggy which go to a son, is left to testator's widow, Mrs. Minnie Landers, who is also made executrix.

The will of Mrs. Margaret Smith, widow of former Mayor John K. Smith, who died in Oswego February 17, which was filed in Surrogate's Court late Thursday was made September 10, 1912. The residuary estate is bequeathed to the decendent's husband, John K. Smith, with the proviso that in case of his death before that of the testratrix the property is to go to her son, John Carroll Smith. The former mayor died in February, 1913. Carroll Smith is made executor without bonds. The bequests are $50 to St. Paul's church for masses, $50 to St. Paul's cemetery for perpetual carre and $50 to Mrs. Caroline Hutton of Buffalo, sister of Mr. Smith. William Grady and H. A. Jones were the witnesses. The value is given as more than $5,000 personal and $3,000 real.

BEARS GET SURPRISE

New York, March 12.—Bears were disappointed when stock today opened with prices virtually unchanged and speedily strengthened. They had confidently expected liquidation on publication of the news that the Prinz Eitel Friedrich had sunk an American vessel.

The market from first to last was exceedingly dull and closed with fractional net gains. The Mexican situation was, for the time being, dismissed as a market factor, and the prevailing view as to the American ship incident was that Germany would have to pay for the sunken vessel and its cargo, but that the incident would produce no serious international complication.

In the Chicago grain pit there was a sharp opening decline, succeeded by feverish changes.

DYE INVENTOR NOTED ATHLETE

Dr. Rittman Not the Pale Traditional Student.

HIS WIFE WAS A GREAT AID

Improved Processes For Making Smokeless Powder and Dyestuffs Will Render This Country Independent of Germany—Patents Will Be Turned Over to the American People.

Dr. Walter F. Rittman of the United States bureau of mines, whose improved processes for making gasoline, smokeless powder and dyestuffs are founded on some of the most revolutionary discoveries that ever originated in a government bureau, is only thirty-one years old. He got his Ph. D. from Columbia only seven months ago and went to work Ph. D.-ing before the ink on his license or the paint on his office door was dry. Some folks think that when you get a college sheepskin all you have to do is to look sheepish. But that isn't the Rittman idea.

Mrs. Rittman really ought to have gone in the first paragraph, but she begged for the background and this is the best that can be done. For she has worked side by side with her husband in the laboratory and has been an indispensable aid in helping to look up 3,000 separate articles bearing on his subjects. She has also acted as official translator from all languages, including Russian. The simple possession of a working knowledge of that language by anybody except a native is enough to make a whole family distinguished.

Dr. Rittman has been in Washington since the announcement of his great achievement. Nobody else will make any definite statement for him about the scientific aspects of the discovery. But a series of experimental questions fired off in the laboratories at Columbia drew out a few facts about the man and his work.

Scope of New Process.

According to the statement by Secretary Lane, the new process will render America independent of Germany in the production of dyes and smokeless powder.

"Were it not for this discovery," said Mr. Lane, "it is possible that in an emergency we might be compelled to rely largely on the greatly inferior explosives that were used in the time of our civil war, and this would spell national disaster."

Besides this, Dr. Rittman has found a method of increasing the supply of gasoline. Henceforward, in addition to dog fanciers, dramatists and campaign button manufacturers, several of the more common grades of business men, such as guards (national and subway), smiths (black and gold) and sauerkraut flavorers, will be able to run automobiles to San Francisco on their own gasoline.

To go back to the title page, Walter Frank Rittman was born in Sandusky, O., on Dec. 2, 1883. He got his first degree at Swarthmore college in 1908. He was a member of the famous football team that cleaned up everything in sight during that period. Walter Camp picked him for the ideal All American team. In other words, he was a born, predestined athlete, with incidental propensities for pausing in the serious business of sport to do a little thinking. He was intercollegiate wrestling champion too and a great swimmer on the side.

Practical Work In Shops.

But that didn't prevent him from spending three or four years in the shops around Cleveland. And he wasn't above serving as chemist of the United Gas Improvement company of Philadelphia. He was getting so old by this time that he felt life was too short to spend working for one company. So he hung out a shingle and let 'em all come and ask him. But he used to tell them what he thought of them.

Over in Germany, it may be recalled, the business man will plan his schedule for ten years ahead. Then he'll decide what he's likely to want, to begin to do about the beginning of the second decade, fit up a laboratory about twice as large as his factory and tell the chief chemist to take his time, with a year off for travel, hotel tips included. The American manufacturer turns over a converted hen coop to his chemist and says:

"Invent a new process for making China silk out of spider web. I shall begin work immediately. If you can give me a few specifications to look over so much the better."

Next Came to Columbia.

Now Dr. Rittman scolds about this habit; then he turns around and meets the demand. But after he had worked awhile as consulting chemist he decided he didn't know enough. So he came to Columbia for graduate work. He had added an A. M. and an M. E. to his titles. He is a great adder. A little over a year ago he added the wife already credited to his account. He lectured in the summer school just to get the things he was absorbing off.

The best of it is he's working for Uncle Sam, which is all of us. When the patents for the various processes are secured they will be turned over to the American people. Anybody that wants to can build a factory and make smokeless powder or dyes and will be able to use the Rittman discoveries.

DEATH RATE STATISTICS.

14.1 Per 1,000 in 1913 Compared With 13.9 in 1912.

Washington.—A death rate in 1913 of 14.1 per 1,000 of the estimated population in the registration area of the United States compared with 13.9 per 1,000 in 1912 is shown in a report by the census bureau. The number of deaths in the registration area, containing about two-thirds of the population, was approximately 890,948.

Washington state showed the lowest rate, being 8.5 per 1,000, while New Hampshire's was the highest, with 17.1. The lowest rate shown in 1913 by any of the fifty registration cities, with populations of 100,000 or over in 1910, was that for Seattle, which was 8.4, while Memphis showed the highest, with 29.8.

The average age at death for both sexes from all causes combined was 39.8; for males alone, 39.2; for females, 40.6. Nearly 18 per cent of all deaths were of infants under one year of age, and more than 25 per cent were of children under five years.

The death rate from tuberculosis declined from 149.5 per 100,000 population in 1912 to 147.0 in 1913. The rate from cancer rose from 63 per 100,000 in 1900 to 78.9 in 1913. The number of suicides was 9,998, the rate being 15.8 per 100,000 compared with 16 in 1912.

ANY SHAPE TRUNK CAN GO.

Washington.—The ladies triumph again and carry to victory with them the trunk makers, costumers, actors—everybody who uses those nonrectangled five sided trunks with conical protuberances, slant sides and unconventional tops.

The interstate commerce commission told the railroads they cannot exclude pentagonal trunks from the regular baggage service. The railroads wanted to charge excess rates on any trunk not cut on the square.

The commission's decision has filled the baggagemasters with despair. Lamented one in the Pennsylvania's service:

"Just imagine trying to fill a baggage car with conical trunks, trunks with slant sides and trunks cut in every shape from a doughnut to a starfish. What are you going to put on top of a trunk shaped like the pyramids, eh?"

COLORADO CONVICTS HAVE BASEBALL TEAM

Warden Rewards Good Prisoners by Allowing Them to Play.

Canon City, Colo.—Warden Tom J. Tynan of the Colorado penitentiary, described as "the man who put 'man' in humanity in prison reform," announces that he is organizing a baseball team among the convicts—his "wards," as he always calls them.

Tynan was the first penitentiary warden to install moving pictures and the first to try the system of rewards for good conduct by sending the best behaved convicts to build and improve the roads of the state. He proposes to have a baseball team to compete with teams of the state league and other teams from the surrounding towns and cities. Tynan is a baseball "fan" himself.

"I've got some crackerjack material down here," says Tynan, "and I'm going to utilize it. Got a housebreaker that can outrun Ty Cobb. Join the Feds? No chance. No bush leagues for us. We'll be in the AA class or none at all."

The convict team will go into training as soon as a wall is built around four acres of ground which the warden has laid out for the purpose. Teams throughout the state will be invited to play the convicts on the "home grounds." Later in the season the warden may take his team on two or three short trips. If possible he will arrange a game with the Denver Grizzlies of the Western league.

"I will use the prison baseball team to encourage good behavior among the men," he says. "To be permitted to play on the team or to watch its games will be a privilege bestowed only on the best behaved. The moment a player breaks a prison rule he no longer will be considered a member of the team, and the fan who is recalcitrant will be barred from the games.

"Since we have had moving picture shows for the prisoners there have been 470 less reports of bad behavior. For a slight infraction of the prison rules the privilege of attending the prison movie entertainments is taken away for a certain period. We have a houseful of movie fans, and most of them would rather suffer any kind of physical punishment than miss the pictures thrown on the screen in the chapel every two weeks."

Gets Letter From Wreck.

Fergus Falls, Minn.—Professor J. O. A. Larson of the Park Region college here received a letter recently that went down with the Empress of Ireland. The mucilage was gone from the envelope, but the letter was in a good state of preservation and easily read. It was rescued from the wreck by divers. Mr. Larson was a Rhodes scholar at Oxford, England, at the time the vessel sank, and the letter was addressed to him there and was forwarded to England and then to this city.

PRACTICAL PATRIOTISM

Patriotism, to be of any use, must be practical. Verbal patriotism never makes a soldier. Patriotism of the tongue, if limited to the tongue, never makes a good citizen. Sentiment, no matter how lofty, is of very little use unless converted into acts.

Have you ever seen a big locomotive resting on the track, fired up to the full measure of its steam capacity, fairly alive, trembling with the tremendous power with which it is invested—and yet, standing absolutely still? The power of movement is there; the giant's strength to draw the heavy train-load of freight is there, evidenced by the hiss of the surplus steam rushing through the exhaust valve. And yet, the locomotive does not move. Except as a mass of valuable metals, it is of no earthly use, so long as it remains immovable. All the puffings of steam, all the mighty show of power, all evidences of great and valuable possibilities amount to naught, just so long as the engine is motionless.

What is needed? The throttle must be thrown open. The steam instead of escaping idly must be put to work. Open the throttle. The puffing steam now has a definite meaning; the vibration of the machinery is full of significance. The show of power becomes actual power. The great, throbbing combination of iron and steam becomes a vital force. The dead and inert mass of metal is converted into an active agency of social and commercial value.

What has caused the transformation of uselessness into utility? What magic has suddenly transfused a powerful energy into what seemed to be a stationary pile of metal and boiling water? No legerdemain has been worked. The cause is very simple. The bubbling water instead of satisfying itself with mere noise of boiling, pours its steam into the cylinders of the engine. The practical turn of the steam into the proper chamber forces the big machine to labor. Valueless puffing and blowing cease for something better. The bluff of sound is transformed into the power of action. The boiling water has left off singing and set itself to work.

Such is the difference between sentimental and practical patriotism! The mere sentimentalist is like the motionless locomotive. The steam is there, but it is put to no practical use. The patriotic sentiment continuously breaks out noisily through the safty valve. The throttle is never opened. The cylinders are never filled with steam.

The business and professional man who is a practical, not a sentimental patriot, works for the good of Fulton as well as he talks for our city. The Chamber of Commerce is like the cylinders of the locomotive. Let the steam of our patriotic men be collected then, that that vast machine can move and be an active and practical agent of commercial and civic value, not merely a fine mechanism idle on the tracks that lead to a bigger and a better Fulton.—Bill Haynes.

THINK SHARK ATE A CLEVELAND MAN

The mystery surrounding the disappearance three years ago at St. Augustine, Fla., of John R. Mooney, of Mooney Brothers, Company, Cleveland, Ohio, was cleared up recently when his son, Edgar J. Mooney, received word from Miami, Fla., that the upper portion of a human skeleton, which is thought to be that of J. B. Mooney, had been found in the stomach of a shark caught near there.

The shark was caught by Henry Sanford, of Richfield, Conn., wintering at Miami. It was one of a catch of ten made off Soldiers' Key, fourteen miles below Miami, and was the largest of the lot. When the shark was cut open there was found in its stomach the skull, shoulder blades, thigh bone, upper arm bone and finger of a human being.

The whitened condition of the bones and their general appearance indicated to Miami physicians who examined them that their owner had been devoured several years ago. The shape of the skull left no doubt as to its bein gthat of a white man.

Miami undertakers to whom the bones were turned over recalled the circumstances of the elder Mooney's disappearance while bathing at St. Augustine almost three years before and the fruitless search for his body. Furthermore, physicians said that the head tallied with descriptions of that of Mr. Mooney, Sr.

Miami authorities communicated their theory to E. J. Mooney, with the result thattoday he sent them a diagram of the mouth of his father, showing the various dental fillings and description of his father's teeth.

Mr. Mooney early in May, 1912, went to St. Augustine. On May 6 he went bathing in the surf with a young nephew. Suddenly Mr. Mooney disappeared under the water and never rose again. The nephew concluded he had been carried out to sea by the strong undertow and drowned. Now it appears that a shark seized him and carried him off.

Hark, the Magic Name!

Ah, once we thought the world's worst spell
Was P-R-Z-E-M-Y-S-L.
We used to sing
That deadly thing
At readers daily suffering.
But worse by far is this one, P-R-Z-A-S-N-Y-S-Z!

That some one in the subway read.
I said: "Be gosh!
I'll write to Wash.
To see if this is but a josh—
This awful jumble reading, 'P-R-Z-A-S-N-Y-S-Z!'"

The haughty Russian minister
Wrote this reply: "Exalted Sir:
This name you chaps
May doubt, perhaps;
But, honestly, it's on the maps.
I'll take my oath there is a P-R-Z-A-S-N-Y-S-Z!"

How can we doubt it after that Assurance from a diplomat?
We might have guessed
The word was jest,
Or but a sharp typewriting test.
But, no! There is a town of P-R-Z-A-S-N-Y-S-Z.

My lips are chapped and so I'd pause
Before I exercise my jaws;
But, no; this word
That looks absurd
Allures me as a snake or bird!
Here goes again—confound it!—P-R-Z-A-S-N-Y-S-Z!

MANY CHANGES FOLLOW EXPIRATION OF CONGRESS.

Many changes in the personnel of both house and senate, in all parties, follow the expiration of the last congress and the coming in of the Sixty-fourth congress. Representatives Underwood of Alabama and Broussard of Louisiana move up into the senate. Charles Curtis of Kansas comes back to the senate after a campaign which retires from congress Representatives Murdock of Kansas, the Progressive leader of the house, and Neeley of Kansas, Democrat.

Representative Cannon of Illinois, for many years speaker of the house; McKinley of Illinois, ex-chairman of the Republican congress campaign committee and the Republican national committee; Foss of Illinois, who used to head the naval committee; Longworth of Ohio, Sulloway of New Hampshire, Rodenberg, Wilson and Sterling, all of Illinois, are among the more conspicuous representatives who again enter the lists of the house.

Among others prominent in national legislation who retire from congress now are Representatives Bartholdt of Missouri, Stevens and Manahan of Minnesota, Burke and Martin of South Dakota, Palmer and Temple of Pennsylvania, Bulkley of Ohio, Bartlett of Georgia, Korbly of Indiana, Floyd of Arkansas, McGuire of Oklahoma, Reed of New Hampshire and Samuel W. Smith of Michigan. Senator Root of New York and Senator Burton of Ohio are among the retiring senators.

Previously retired from the house to accept federal appointments during this congress are Clayton, Alabama; Covington, Maryland; McCoy, New Jersey, and Ansberry, Ohio, to become judges and Kinkead and Townsend, New Jersey, and Murray, Massachusetts, to become postmasters. Kinkead later was elected sheriff of Hudson county, N. J.

TALK OF END OF WORLD.

The mental condition caused among Americans by the war in Europe is interesting. One finds many persons in all places who believe the world is nearing its end. Such persons are by no means cranks. Many are careful students of history as well as of the Bible, and some of them have figured the prophecies of Daniel down to a point where they feel sure not only of the approach of the grand collapse, but of the identity of the principal characters who are to be conspicuous in the last days.

One meets persons holding such views on the trains, in the banks, everywhere, and if one considers them sensible in all other things he hardly can regard them as lunatics in this. The religious faith of many persons calls for a grand breakdown of the world.

"SIBERIA FOR SOUSES."

Horrible Punishment For "Second Offenders" In Russia.

"Siberia for the souses" is the watchword in Russia right now, according to M. L. von Clain, vice president of the Baldwin Locomotive works, who returned from a business trip to the czar's land aboard the Scandinavian-American line steamship United States.

"Of course they don't say it that way," was Mr. Von Clain's explanation, "but it goes. Second offenders caught loaded on vodka hit the long trail for Siberia. Russia is riding on a water wagon without springs."

Appeal For General Leman's Release.

The appeal, through the medium of the Swiss Red Cross, is Mlle. Leman, daughter of General Leman of the Belgian army, who defended Liege against the Germans in the early part of the war, has appealed to Emperor William of Germany to allow her father to return to his home in Belgium. Her argument is that the general, having lost the use of both legs, can no longer be regarded as fit for military duties.

NO CHANCE HERE FOR ANARCHISTS

Terrorist System Plainly a Misfit In United States.

"WORLD OWES ME A LIVING"

That Best Expresses Mental Attitude of Some of Youths Who Would Pose as "Reds"—Professor Robinson of Columbia University Blames "Idea Glimmerings" For Bomb Attempt.

"Foreigners with idea glimmerings not worked out, with a terrorist philosophy that is a misfit in this country—that is how I would describe the planters of the bombs in St. Patrick's cathedral and anarchists of their type," said John Harvey Robinson, professor of history in Columbia university and an authority on historical-philosophical subjects, in discussing the arrest and frustrated plot of Abarno and Carbone.

"There is no justification for the existence of anarchists in the social conditions of this country," he maintained. "It is hard to conceive the motives which impel such actions as theirs. One can understand the thoughts of a Russian nihilist, who is not a criminal in the true sense, but who is working along the lines of a definite philosophy toward a definite end, or of the terrorists of Paris who engaged in the fight for the Commune in 1871.

"But things are different in this country. I can trace no analogy between conditions before the commune of 1871 and the conditions in this country today which precede what the two Italian anarchists are said to have planned—a commune of anarchy and riot in New York. There is no parallel of cause, and there will be no parallel of effect.

Idea of Commune Absurd.

"The idea of a commune being established here by men of the type of Abarno and Carbone is absurd. Even the most disreputable, the most down and out of the hoboes and the unemployed in the city, would never follow such leaders to wholesale murder.

"The proof that conditions in this country do not justify the actions of the two men and their kind—that anarchy and anarchism are not natural outgrowths of existing society here—is simple enough. Think what would happen if anarchists tied up the subway for a day! The whole city would band together for their suppression. Our civilization is too complex, too delicate, too sensitive, to stand such shocks without retaliation. There are not enough anarchists in the country to succeed in terrorizing New York for any length of time, for the simple reason that the community is constructed in such an orderly manner that no disturbance would be tolerated by it.

"The case of the commune in Paris was different. The country and the city were already in a state of semi-anarchy. Police power and the more certain power of public opinion had vanished from Paris with the capture of the city, the death of her best citizens in the war with Germany and the starvation and suspension of business which followed. It can be said, in a general way, that the struggle of the commune in 1871, during which the Hotel de Ville, the Luxemburg and other public buildings were burned and thousands died before and behind the barricades of the anarchists, was the more or less natural result of conditions in the community.

Conditions Different Here.

"But that cannot be said of any attempted commune in New York nor of the acts of the anarchists later. These can be attributed to misapplication of half formed ideas and ideals, fitted, perhaps, to Russia or even to Italy, but not to conditions in the United States, which are totally different."

Speaking more definitely of the mental makeup of the Breeci anarchists, A. T. Poffenburger, engaged in laboratory research and experimental work with the department of psychology at Columbia university, spoke of the terrorist plans revealed by the recent arrests.

"There is no one positive type of mind that belongs to the 'red,'" he said. "It is always possible to trace the causes of his criminal bent or his anarchistic instincts, if the facts of his birth and his life are known. It resolves itself into a matter of heredity and environment. I have not yet seen Carbone and Abarno, but I have known men of their stamp. Their mental attitude may be best expressed by 'The world owes me a living.'

"It is not surprising that the two are so young. Tendencies which lead to crime usually show themselves between thirteen and twenty-five, or even earlier."

AN EASY GOING SENTINEL.

Very early in the morning, says the author, after several hours of heavy sleep in a hammock in an anteroom of Garnier college I descended into the street and ran into some people who, with tricolored shawls across their shoulders, were giving orders in the name of the committee of defense. They were trying to discipline the revolution. Falling into their hands, I was stationed as a sentinel at a useless barricade that shut off Via Durini from the Verziere. The commander, having inspected my pistols and perhaps having found them not murderous enough, placed in my hands a fencing foil. Then he gave me the countersign, "Papa Pio."

A little while afterward another chief came along, who re-enforced the post and gave me as a companion a good old man who was armed with an antique lance. I told him the countersign, and we soon became friends.

"Concordia, coraggio," replied the captain of the patrol.

"Truly," replied my companion, "the countersign is something else. However, we are all Italians, so pass on."

Anvils Date Back of History.

The anvil was known in the earliest times, being spoken of in the Bible, the prophet Isaiah saying (chapter 47, verse 7), "So the carpenter encouraged the goldsmith, and he that smooteth with the hammer him that smiteth the anvil." It is not known who first used it, but of course the anvil of antiquity was unlike that of today as perfected by modern workmanship. The anvil still used in the orient, however, is a boot shaped piece of metal inserted in a section of oak or walnut log. Larger or smaller it is used by tinsmiths, shoemakers, silversmiths and blacksmiths. The anvils used in this country are commonly made of cast iron faced with steel and are of parallelopiped form, with a steel cone or beak at one end and a "handy hole" for inserting chisel or other tools at the other end.—Boston Globe.

The Crimean War.

The Crimean war was in 1853-56 between Russia on one side and Turkey, France, Great Britain and Sardinia, as allies, on the other side. It was called the Crimean war because it was mainly fought in the Crimean peninsula. It arose through the demand of Russia for a protectorate over the Greek subjects of the sultan and was closed and its issues decided by the treaty of Paris March 30, 1856. By this treaty Sebastopol, which had been captured, was restored to Russia, Russia abandoned her claim as to Georgians in Turkey and the Black sea was neutralized.

Saved on the Gallows

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

Famous in English history is that Duke of Gloucester who murdered his two nephews in the Tower of London, one of whom was the rightful heir to the throne, and made himself king of England in the prince's stead.

At that time there lived in England Robert Percy, a young man of the most admirable qualities. It was some time before the secret of the murder of the young princes began to leak out, and when it did there were low mutterings on the part of the people. Percy, who was familiar with the king's treachery, was more loud spoken than others, and Richard, aware of the young man's influence with the masses and fearing that he would bring about a revolt, ordered his arrest on a charge of high treason.

On the day that Percy was conducted along a street leading to the Tower, surrounded by men at arms, the curbs were lined with sympathizers, who breathed prayers that he might escape the danger threatening him and muttered maledictions on the head of the tyrant.

At an upper window stood Lady Gwendolen Bickford, a younger daughter of the Earl of Charenton. She looked down on young Percy, walking erect between his guards, his bearing indicating that he was ready and willing to lay down his life in contending against crime. Every one believed that he was going to his death. His manly beauty, his noble bearing and the crown of martyrdom rendered him an object of pity to all. But to Lady Gwendolen he was more than this. Within those few minutes during which he was passing her heart left her bosom and settled upon him. Percy, happening to look in her direction, saw the lovelight in her eyes, and his load was lightened.

Richard, fearing to order Percy to execution without a trial, lest it excite the people to revolt, directed attorneys to prepare a case against him. Persons were bribed to swear that he had been heard advocating the king's assassination and placing the Duke of Richmond on the throne. Lady Gwendolen, hearing of this, begged her father to induce lawyers to defend the accused. The earl not only knew that the case was hopeless, but did not dare to oppose the king; consequently he refused to have anything to do with it.

One day Lady Gwendolen went to that quarter of London given over to lawyers and found Roger Moore, an old attorney who had served her father, and consulted him as to what might be done to save young Percy. After listening to what the girl had to say he replied that Percy's case was hopeless because the king had decreed that he should die. "He will surely be convicted," said the old man. "After his conviction there is but one way by which he may legally escape the gallows. But should he go free under this statute the king would doubtless find some other way to get rid of him."

Lady Gwendolen asked the attorney to what law he referred, and he replied that it was a decree of King Edward IV., naming a condition on which a man about to be hanged should go free. As soon as the girl heard the condition her face lighted with hope. To fulfill it was possible, but would it avail in the end?

Percy was convicted of high treason against the king and sentenced to be hanged and quartered on a certain date. At the time an army was gathering under the Duke of Richmond to depose the king, and Richard was gathering his forces to meet it. There had been a former attempt to put the duke on the throne in the king's place, but Richard was as bold and energetic as he was wicked and had defeated all attempts against his authority.

There was no one he feared to leave in his rear so much as Robert Percy, and when he had made all preparations to march against his opponents he delayed a day to make sure that this dangerous enemy was dead.

The day before the one set for the execution Lady Gwendolen Bickford was closeted with Roger Moore, and on the following morning, when the crowd went to Tyburn to witness the hanging, these two were of the number, and when the prisoner arrived they occupied seats near the scaffold. When all was ready and the condemned man was about to be swung off Roger Moore arose and said:

"Mr. Sheriff, as counsel for the prisoner I claim his body under an edict of King Edward IV., who decreed that whenever a man is convicted of crime and is about to be hanged, if there be a woman willing to marry him, he shall go free. This woman beside me is willing and ready to marry the prisoner."

This speech naturally disconcerted the sheriff, who had never heard of the statute. The judge who had convicted the prisoner was present at the hanging, and the matter was referred to him. He at once confirmed Roger Moore's statement, whereupon Percy was unbound, the black cap taken from his head, and he looked down upon the upturned face of Lady Gwendolen Bickford.

The king waited till the hour for the execution, then, supposing Percy to be dead, galloped off to Bosworth field, where a few days later he was defeated and killed. Robert Percy was in Richmond's army, and Richmond becoming king ennobled him, thus giving him equal rank with the girl who had saved his life by marrying him.

A Stonehenge Legend.

Friar's Heel is the name given to a large stone at Stonehenge, England. An interesting tale surrounds the placing of this stone in its present upright position. It is related that Geoffrey of Monmouth said that the devil bought some stones of an old woman in Ireland, wrapped them up in withies and took them to Salisbury plain. Before he got to Mount Ambre the withies broke and one of the stones fell into the Avon; the rest were carried to the plain. After the fiend had fixed them in the ground he cried out, "No man will ever find out how these stones came here." A friar replied, "That's more than thee can tell," whereupon the fiend threw one of the stones at him and struck him on the heel. The stone stuck in the ground and is said to remain there to the present hour.

A Remarkable Prediction.

Manasseh Cutler of Massachusetts, in a circular in 1787 "booming" the settlement which the New Englanders were about to plant on the Ohio at the mouth of the Muskingum, declared that "the current down the Ohio and the Mississippi" for produce and merchandise of all sorts would one day "be more crowded than any other streams on earth," which was a remarkable prediction considering that it was made twenty years before Fulton's Clermont was launched in the Hudson, which was the first steamboat in the world ever put in successful operation.

Family Fun.

They had been having a quarrel, and after Mrs. Gilson had spoken the last word, as usual, she felt that perhaps she had overdone the matter and, picking up the evening paper, began to read little items from it.

"Funny!" growled Gilson. "Yes; it's terribly funny. If he'd married you he'd have been darned glad to get a silent partner even if she didn't have a cent."—Philadelphia Record.

Comprehensive Advice.

It is probable that seldom has better advice been given than in the following condensed rules: Drink less, breathe more; eat less, chew more; ride less, walk more; clothe less, bathe more; worry less, work more; waste less, give more; write less, read more; talk less, think more; preach less, practice more. To follow these is to strive for better health, further popularity and greater success.

Explaining It.

GOT A SURPRISE.

He Expected to Be Quite Conspicuous, but Found Himself Ignored.

"Say," said the man who takes himself seriously, "I had a great surprise thrust upon me when I went down to get my marriage license last month. When I think it over I am ready to assert that it was a disagreeable surprise.

"I sneaked into the big office under the impression that everybody was watching me. But when I told the clerk at the window what I wanted he took the information with a coolness that was almost disgusting. When I gave him my name—which seemed to me to reverberate like thunder—not a solitary clerk raised his head. And nobody laughed while the inquisitor asked me how I spelled it. When I gave the lady's name and fancied everybody would titter the only sound I could hear was the turning of record leaves and the muddled clicking of a distant typewriter.

"Why, they couldn't have treated me with more indifference if I had been buying marriage license twice a day for ten years.

"I went into that office feeling shamed and sensitive and sneaking.

"I came out hurt, humiliated, humbled.

OUR GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Elisha Mitchell, Who Started It, Was a Martyr to His Science.

The first government geological survey in America was conducted by Elisha Mitchell, who was born in Washington, Conn., about the year 1794. He was a graduate of Yale and became professor of mathematics in the University of North Carolina. Afterward he became professor of chemistry, and in 1821 he was ordained a Presbyterian minister.

As state surveyor of North Carolina he made an extensive geological survey, and he was the first to ascertain that the mountains of North Carolina—are the highest east of the Rockies. He was a martyr to science, for to settle some disputed point about the altitude of these mountains he reascended them in 1857, lost his way at night, fell down a precipice and was killed. The geological survey of the United States, which has carried out on a large scale the work commenced by Mitchell, was created for the purpose of preparing a map of the United States, classifying the public lands, examining the geological structure, mineral resources and the products of the republic and investigating the extent to which the arid and semi-arid lands may be redeemed by irrigation.—New York World.

Salut Aux Morts

Beyond Varennes' wind swept plateau
The sinking sun hangs, faint and low,
Against the darkening sky.

And there, unstirred by bugle sounds,
At rest beneath swift shoveled mounds,
Unnumbered heroes lie—

Life's drama ended in a surge,
That self transcending, valiant urge
Which leads men on to die!

As shadows veil the wooden cross
That marks the graves and tells the loss,
How moving shapes draw nigh.

Two who still hear the din of war
Stand rigid, their "salut aux morts"
A phantom battlecry.

MILITARY HATS.

Everybody Is Wearing Them and Looking Pert and Pretty.

Would you desire fashion? Then adopt a hat which in shape at least resembles one worn by some person in military service in the armies of Europe.

It need not be a general officer. It is the private or the marine who gets the head covering which is jauntiest. These hats must be of the sort which best become a feminine face not too old for small hats, which are only convincing when partly posed a trifle toward one ear.

Among the new millinery there is not a model exactly like Tommy Atkins', but there is a tiny affair which covers no more of the hair than does his of scarlet cloth. Like the majority of the military hats not designed for service at the front, this one is of black velvet. A broad sided rever brim lies so flatly against the crown that its presence would be overlooked but for an edging of narrow silver ribbon. Tiny tassels in silver or gold are new among military trimmings, but they are not a surprise, for they accord perfectly with the tinsel braids and cordings.

Homemade Icebox.

Few people know that a very good icebox for summer use can be made by placing a small box inside a larger one and filling the space between with sawdust. Set on blocks, bore a hole in bottom of both. If kept tightly closed, twenty pounds of ice will keep in this box three or four days.

Air and Exercise.

Air is absolutely essential to the well being of every child. The mother should make it a part of her regular duties to see that her child has at least two hours' outdoor exercise every day. If school is over at 3 the child can come in at 5 to prepare his or her lessons for the following day.

THE ART OF SHOPPING

There is more in shopping than entering a department and buying certain articles. There is an art of successfully carrying out this necessary and delightful business that can easily be learned.

The shopper should remember that time is money and that salespeople are like herself, human, and equally deserving of courtesy and consideration.

There are one or two "Do's" that every shopper should lay to heart:

Do remember to have clearly in mind what it is that you require. Bring patterns if matching is to be done.

Do not forget that the saleswoman has to attend to many customers and cannot give an undue share of her time to any one. So do not indulge in long and unnecessary conversation.

Do remember that standing behind a counter all day is fatiguing and make allowances for human nature.

And Only Fools Himself.

Don't Mention It.

Sapphedd—You saved me from being killed by that auto. I owe my life to you. How shall I ever repay you?

England Thinks the Frye Incident Should Remove Objections

Przasnysz, along which the Germans hope to reach and pierce the Russian fortress line, still continues.

The weather having turned colder, the ground in North Poland has hardened, which will greatly facilitate the movements of troops. This is said to be the first time in history that the weather has favored an army attempting to invade Russia.

Reports from Tenedos say that the Turkish artillery in the Dardanelles grows weaker daily and that the last bombardment by the allied war ships greatly damaged the forts at Chanak Kalesi. Two big cruisers passed the night in the straits protecting the vessels engaged in mine sweeping.

Despatches from Rome indicate that the German Ambassador, Prince Von Buelow, has renewed his negotiations with the Italian government with the object of assuring the continued neutrality of that country in return for territorial concessions in Austria. Austria, however, is said to be opposed to making any such concessions as would satisfy Italy.

BRITAIN'S ORDER WILL CUT OFF GERMAN TRADE

London, March 12.—Now that Mr. Page, the American Ambassador, has communicated to the Foreign Office President Wilson's request for information concerning the methods to be employed by Great Britain and France in their retaliatory measures against Germany, it is safe to presume that Great Britain will reply in the same friendly and cordial spirit outlining the desired information as soon as the complex task of drawing up the Orded-in-Council is completed.

The delay probably is due to the Allies' desire to be as definite and frank as possible with American commerce and let it know where it stands. It is also highly important to emphasize that the arrangement will not be so severe on neutral commerce as would be an effective blockade, but this latter and far mored rastic course is necessarily the alternative to which the Allies might be forced to go in case the present more friendly arrangement is misunderstood in neutral countries.

The Allies' determination to cut off Germany's supplies is considered irrevocably necessary, but the method being adopted is one calculated to safeguard to a great extent American and neutral interests.

The American steamship Vitalia today was permitted to leave for Rotterdam after being detained since February 20. The trouble was that her Chicago packers' products were not all consigned to the Netherlands Oversea Trust, which is a simple and effective guarantee that they are not ultimately destined for Germany. This precaution has now been taken by the shippers and Great Britain at once let her proceed.

The notepresented by Mr. Page is identical with the one presented at Paris, as France and Great Britain jointly announced that they held themselves at liberty to make reprisals against Germany.

The Order-in-Council, which outlines the arrangement to be followed in attacking Germany's trade, was signed today by King George, but the date of its publication is still uncertain.

It is not known when Great Britain will forward her reply to the American identical note to Great Britain and Germany which seeks to end the submarine blockade and the holding up of food shipments for German civilians.

Officials of theForeign Office believe that since the opening of the war Great Britain only once has interfered with the supply of food destined for Germany and then only after the German government, by assuming control of all foodstuffs, had abolished the old distinction between the civil and the military population.

High German authorities have repeatedly denied the British assumption that to cut off supplies of food from civilians is a legitimate act of war. Great British, it is insisted, never adopted this view until the Germans by their own act made it impossible any longer to draw the line between non-combatants and armed forces. Furthermore, it is added, Great Britain is now invited by the United States to forego a clear belligerent right on the understanding that Germany will abstain from committing two—but only two—of many crimes against both law and humanity.

Authoritative spokesmen of the British view lay stress on the "inadequacy" of this proposal from two standpoints. They ask, first, what guarantee is forthcoming that Germany will keep to her agreement. Supposing, they urge, that an understanding were reached on the liens suggested by the United States, would the United States make sure of its strict observance?

It is asserted by them that Germany has violated so many compacts and conventions in this war that British statesmen are disinclined to trust her unsupported word.

Secondly, they urge that the tow offences specified in the American note—submarine warfare on merchant vessels and the mining of the high seas—are far from being the only or even the worst offences of which Germany has been guilty. The assertion is made that she has bombarded unfortified towns, dropped bombs on places inhabited solely by civilians and sunk both British and neutral ships, as though that were the ordinary legal way of disposing of them.

Great Brittain, it is declared, has indulged in none of these practices, and such mines as she has been compelled in self-defence to lay have been laid in strict occordance with the Hague conventions.

The policy of the Germans which arouses the most indignation among the directors of the Britishgovernment is her continued alleged persecution of the Belgians, millions of whom, it is declared, "would be at this moment in a state of semi-starvation but for American generostity and assistance."

The view therefore held in the most authoritative quarter of Great Britain is that if there is to be any question of Germany's conforming to the rules of civilized warfare with respect to all points, and not merely with respect to the two of them which she has been accused of departing from, it must come up for discussion, and that Great Britain could enter into no agreement on a subject which did not include a radical change in Germany's present proceedings in Belgium.

Finally, it is declared by the same authority thatthese being the factors that mainly influence British official opinion, it may be inferred that the natural sympathy of the British government with the American suggestion, both on its merits and from its source of origin, must to some extent be mitigated by other and wider considerations.

GERMANS PREPARING FOR NEW ATTACK

Petrograd, March 12. London, 12.45 P.M.—A regrouping of the German forces in northern Poland and the commencement of a new attempt upon Przasnysz has been noted by the General Staff of the Russian army.

This movement is being made in considerably greater strength than was the recent operation in the direction of Przasnysz, which terminated not only in local defat for the Germans but in the general retirement of all the German forees in the direction of their own frontier.

The discontinuance of operations along the Nieman river makes it possible for the Germans to send a large number of troops from this district to reinforce the men advancing from Korjile in the general direction of Mlawa and Przasnysz. This transfer, as usual, has been effected with lightning like speed by means of the German railroads, and the forces in this neighborhood have been further augmented by drafts of the new 1915 recruits.

One of the German motives for this new alignment of forces undoubtedly is to strengthen their position before Ossowetz. In the absence of official information concerning Ossowetz, it is assumed that this engagement still is going on without a decision having been reached. Furthermore, iti s not improbable that in the near future the battlefield in the vicinity of Przasnysz again will become the scene of new conflicts.

In the meanwhile, along the Pilica river there have been occurring daily engagements of secondary importance, in which the Russians would appear to have been successful, notwithstanding the German attacks and the fact that the Germans have taken many Russian prisoners.

Fighting near Gorlitza and Oujok, in the Carpathians, indicates that the Austrians, after their defeat in the Stanislau district, on their right flank, decided to transfer the center of operations to the left flank, where they have been successful in pushing forward slightly.

DOYLE'S JAY BIRDS WIN GIANTS' GAME

Harlem Catcher, "Lew" Wendell, Stars for Victors in Contest in Which Snodgrass' Outfit Loses.

Marlin, Texas, March 12.—John J. McGraw put the Gians through two long and busy sessions yesterday. The wind was light and the sun shone brightly. A seven inning game this afternoon was the feature, and it was the first game that the weather conditions have permitted the Giants to play in ten days. One of the teams was captained by "Fred" Snodgrass and the other by "Larry" Doyle. The victory went to the Doyle outfit, 6 to 4. By special design there was an even distribution of ability, but the winning side got some advantage in the pitching.

The game was started by Erickson and the Indian, Glass, and a goo degree of speed was produced by both. The "spit" ball delivery of the Indian gave the batters no little confusion. Perritt had a real workout and wielded an assortment of benders that pleased McGraw. The other pitchers lobbed the ball over and seemed to be interested in preserving their pitching wings.

A name for the teams was called for and a local wag suggested that the sides be called the Jay Birds and Peckerwoods. The batting orders follow:

SAYS FRENCH CAMPAIGN WAS 'COMPLETE DEFEAT'

Berlin, via London, March 12.—Major Morath, military expert of the Tageblatt, explaining the significance of the French campaign in Champagne, which, he says, closed with "a complete French defeat," declare the city of Vouziers (on [redacted] department of Ard[redacted] questionably the [redacted] French sought to take.

"This city," he says, "commands to a great degree the northern entrance to the Argonne, and this district would have been evacuated by the Germans if the French had taken it or else the German front there would have been forced into an angle toward the west, where it would have been exposed to attacks both from the west and south. Another result would have been the weakening of pressure on Verdun, which the Germans then would have been able to menace only from the east and southeast. To the material aspects of the victory must be added the physical and moral effect on the enemy and their heavy losses."

SAYS GERMANS SHOW NO SIGNS OF WEAKENING

London, March 12.—The official military observer at the British headquarters in the field says, in a report given out here today, that there is no truth in statements to the effect that the German ranks in the west have been depleted generally and to a marked extent.

"The plain truth is that, although the enemy's effectives in the west are much reduced and ours increased, he is still holding an enormous extent of front, as well as carrying out operations on a huge scale in the east," the report continues. "No signs of weakening are yet visible in the morale of the German troops as a whole. There is as yet no reason why an intensely brave, determined and well organized army like that of the Germans should feel discouraged.

"By reason of the news given to the German troops," the report continues, "their enemy appears to them to be exhausted and engaged in a last despairing effort to delay the inevitable decision.

"No doubt economic and other factors have had a great effect on the civilian population of Germany, and there is a marked difference between the expectations with which they entered upon th war and those they now cherish, but it is impossible to say that either they or the army have yet definitely lost confidence in their ultimate success. This confidence will only be overthrown and the morale of the troops will only be shaken by the consciousness of crushing defeat in the field, but this end can only be attained by ever increasing pressure of vast numbers of men and guns throughout the coming months.

"The Kaiser can choose at will a Russian, Belgian or French town wherein to make a triumphant appearance in the presence of his troops. They are fighting in the enemies' country, ruined and devastated by the passage of their armies."

Victor-Victrola

Enjoying the opera at home

With a Victor-Victrola and an easy chair you are in a better position to enjoy the gems of opera than the hosts of music-lovers who crowd to the big opera houses.

They can hear only the opera and the singers the management selects, but you can hear any or all of the world's greatest artists sing the principal arias from their most famous roles whenever and as often as you wish.

And besides the "big ones" of the operatic world, you also command the services of the foremost instrumentalists, the most celebrated bands and orchestras, and the leading comedians and fun-makers.

There's a Victor-Victrola for YOU. $15 to $200. Victors $10 to $100. Come in and hear them and let us explain how you can get one of these instruments right now and enjoy it while you are paying for it.

TAKE OFF THE BLINDERS

See Fulton with a Clear Vision and Realize Its Possibilities, Says Stevenson

Fulton is a giant of strength—not a weakling, either financially, industrially or in any other way.

What we need is a get-together movement that will take advantage of the possibilities which we have.

Now let's get together—300 or more. Actually do it—not talk about it nor question the way how.

Everybody knows that we want more factories, and more home patronage for bigger stores, and better transportation facilities, and efficient city administration, and all the other things that will go to bring out the real live features of our town.

Now, there are a lot of good fellows in Fulton, and a lot of live wires. What we've got to do is to wake up the dead ones. Why, they tell me that when Wilson spoke of $25.00 dues at the first luncheon, the soup turned cold and the meat actually froze to the plates.

Such a spirit as that has got to go. Every man's got to put his hand in his pocket and put this thing across. The trouble is that half the people in the town are wearing blinders. And here's a chance to get them off.

This reorganized Chamber of Commerce will be full of ginger. The icicles will be melted off. And if 300 or 400 men put their shoulders to the wheel, we will have something doing that will bring Fulton into public view through the very energy which it will display.

Remember now, the blinders have got to come off. This isn't any Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford scheme, but a straight-forward business proposition to benefit everybody in the community. And I want to say that I believe that now is the right time for everybody to quit the side-lines and bleachers and play the game.

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

THE U. S. A.

'M doggone glad I'm living in old Uncle Sam's domain—this land of milk and honey and the bumper crop of grain. I wouldn't live in Europe for the wages of a prince—to live across the water, why, a man must be a quince. They're busy dodging cannon balls and sabre thrusts, and such. Will I live where the aeroplanes are dropping bombs? Not much! I think too much of this old hide of mine to take a chance—and live in England, Germany—in Austria or France. Let all who will reside in London grand or may Paree. This good old land of Uncle Sam's is good edough for me. Let all who will eat wieners in Vienna or Berlin. I'd rather look from outside than peep outside from within. I'd rather live, my hearties, where the leaden pills don't whiz and scare you to a standstill as you go about your biz. I'd rather live, my brothers, where the cannon balls don't smash the prunes into the gravy and the milk into the hash. I sit within my cosey room and read about the war, and thank my stars I'm living where the leaden rain don't pour. We kick about the politics, the price of beef, and say that this old land of Uncle Sam's has surely had its day. But when we think of other folks across the briny deep, we're glad we're living here, you bet, and wake up from our sleep. Believe me, friends, the Stars and Stripes are good enough for me—I'm glad I'm separated from Dame Europe—by the sea.

Opinions

Potatoes in Place of Bread

If wheat remains at its present figure or continues to rise in price, and if there is a corresponding increase in the price of bread, scientists in the United States Department of Agriculture suggest, that the ordinary household will find it advantageous to eat more potatoes and less bread. With potatoes at 60c a bushel, 10 cents' worth, or 10 pounds, will give the consumer a little more actual nourishment than two one-pound loaves of bread at 5c each. The protein and fat are present in appreciably larger amounts in the bread, but the potatoes will be found to furnish more carbohydrates and more heat units.

Carbohydrates (starch) contribute greatly to the energy of any diet, and since potatoes are rich in these families that wish to expend their money to the best advantage are recommended to consider whether they can not make a more extended use of them. They are easy to cook and when prepared in different ways can be made to lend variety to the winter diet when green vegetables are hard to obtain. Like other foods relatively rich in carbohydrates, however, potatoes should be eaten with foods correspondingly rich in protein, such as milk, meat, eggs, etc., and with foods like butter, cream and meat fat to supply the fat that the body needs.

Under normal conditions in Europe and America the potato ranks next to bread as a carbohydrate food. If prices change sufficiently to make it desirable, from a financial point of view, there is no scientific reason why potatoes should not be substituted to a great extent for bread. In addition the potato, like many fruits and vegetables, helps to neutralize an acid condition in the body. This is another reason for its being eaten in combination with meat, fish and other animal foods.—Herald, Utica.

The Homes of the Nation.

That the people of a nation should own the roofs over their heads has been always recognized as desirable. It has been generally assumed that we in the United States have both the purpose and the opportunity to put that ideal into practice; but figures drawn from the census of 1910 go to show that as a matter of fact we are doing nothing of the sort.

The total number of homes in the United States, on farms, in cities, and in villages, is estimated at 20,255,555, and rather more than half of them are hired. The proportion of hired houses is naturally lowest in the country, but since 1880 the percentage of tenant farmers has increased from 25.6 to 37. In large cities the conditions are reversed. More than one-quarter of the 20,255,555 homes are in cities that contain 100,000 inhabitants or more, and here the percentage of hired houses, or rather dwelling places, reached 74—a figure that holds good also for the two great cities, Chicago and Philadelphia; in New York, the city of a million "homes," as the census uses the term, the percentage rises as high as 88. Spokane is the only one of fifty of the larger cities in which it falls below 50 per cent.

For the continued well-being of a democracy, it is essential that every voter have a sense of economic responsibility. The expenditure of the public money is a matter that comes up in some form at every election; but voters who have had little experience in controlling anything of their own are not the persons best fitted to say how the public money shall be spent. The participation of voters unfit in this respect for government is one of the great causes of the political ills that manifest themselves in our large cities and in our manufacturing and mining communities.

There is nothing that so naturally and effectively quickens the voter's sense of economic responsibility as owning his house. The need of keeping up and improving his property compels him to act soberly and intelligently, and the care of what is his own quickens his perception of the rights of others. Moreover, when a family has once struck its roots into the ground it is likely to hold; and nothing keeps the sense of responsibility alive in a man so surely as the consciousness that the family is united.—Youth's Companion.

HELP THE NEIGHBOR

It should be remembered that there are always people in every community who will oppose everything which they think will adversely affect their individual interests, and others who on general principles dislike anything which restrains them. For instance, some persons would figure that $25 is a big sum to pay towards city improvement. Some persons would expect the $25 accompanied by $25 more to return the next week to owner's purse as a reward for the exhibition of "public spirit."

It should be remembered too, that there are many in every community who are richly endowed with public spirit who have never been asked about it.

Ask your neighbor; help him along.

CO-OPERATION

There are two great benefits to be derived by a community through co-operation. The first of these is a common benefit for the whole city. The second is an individual benefit enjoyed only by the co-operators.

Our forefathers who laid the foundations of this nation were pioneers. They suffered hardships we can never know. They fought battles we can only read about. They had forced upon them a keen sense of the common good, and they co-operated in their labors and in their pleasures to a far greater extent than do we. We are not settlers; we are inhabitants. The division of labor, the genius of the inventor, the efforts of the tradesman, the well adjusted machinery of stable government, all these combine to make our life secure, easy, and independent. We have forgotten the need of co-operation.

Yet it needs no fine imagination to appreciate that many can easily do what is impossible for the individual, and in the stress of modern competition we see those communities forging to the front that have so awakened this slumbering force. This competition between cities grows fiercer, and it has come to that state where a city must pull its resources together or be beaten off the field.

Great as are the results that the citizens of a city banded together in a Chamber of Commerce can accomplish, the benefits to the individual who joins in this spirit of co-operation is even greater. Team work not only means a big score, but it means big men. The development of the community spirit, the put-your-shoulder-to-the-wheel spiritfi the great, vital, unselfish spirit is sure to make a man a better citzen, a better man.—A. C. B.

STRAIGHT TALK

Seven men out of every ten are on the wrong job. About one-third of a man's mental faculties are employed in his occupation. One man out of a possible one hundred does not make more than a good living.

Very few men can be called commercial successes—perhaps one in one thousand.

Now most men know these truths and know them well.

It would appear that what we want is some means to get men aroused—some way to improve themselves. When they get their minds centered on the idea of improving themselves, then is the time to hand them the blue-print on how.

You cannot educate a man until he is ready to receive the education. And if you do teach him how, and he refuses to enthus, what does it profit you, or profit him?—Silent Partner.

The Canal's Traffic

When the tolls receipts of the Panama Canal passed the $1,000,000 mark the big ditch had been collecting tolls for just six months. A summary of the origins and destinations of the vessels that had passed through suggests some important probabilities as to the directions of the more important traffic streams that may be expected to converge at the canal.

Of the first six months' business it is found that just a little less than half was coastwise commerce, moving from east to west or from west to east coast of the United States. There was rather more east bound than west bound coastwise business, in the ratio of eight tons eastbound to seven westbound, giving the eastbound business rather less preponderance than had commonly been expected.

The biggest single item being eastbound coastwise business, the second being westbound coastwise tonnage, it is found that the third was business from the Pacific coast of the United States destined to Europe. This, in fact, was very little less than the eastbound, coastwise movement.

Europe has started off to be a good patron of the Pacific Coast States, despite the fact it is not sending much business to them. Indeed, it took from them more than six times as great a tonnage as it sent to them during the period under discussion.

The west coast of South America sent through the canal, bound for either Europe or the eastern coast of the United States, a tonnage just about two-thirds as large as that which the west coast of the United States sent to our eastern coast. This seems to warrant expectation that the South American west coast will, in normal times, become one of the great patrons of the canal and its tonnage will be much more important than was anticipated by most of the prognosticators of a decade ago.

From the eastern seabound of the United States was sent a tonnage consigned to the Far East almost exactly half of that sent to our Pacific Coast States. This, again, suggests that the Far East is destined to be an important figure in making business for the canal.

Without much doubt the most nearly normal of all the traffic passing through the canal thus far is that between the eastern and western coasts of the United States.

There has been a disjointure of all the other traffic; in some instances the war has doubtless caused increase of the business, as in moving Pacific coast wheat to Europe in great quantities, but on the whole it is probable that the manal's traffic has suffered greatly by reason of the world conditions growing out of the war.—Press, New York.

Bitter Dregs in Canada

The number of business failures in Canada in 1914 was more than double the number of the year before. Her exports decreased $20,000,000 and her imports decreased $20,000,000 and $60,000,000. The building permits in four cities dwindled by $22,000,000. The loss in railroad earnings was greater relatively than the loss in the United States. The depression in Canada during the past two years has been much greater than in the United States and in some other countries. Canada's customs fell $26,000,000. Very large when it is considered that it costs only $190,000,000 to run the affairs of that country. In spite of a war tax which may produce $33,000,000, the country expects to face a deficit of $60,000,000. The percentage of unemployed is high, very much higher than in the United States.

Poor Canada! It hasn't a Democratic party for simple minds to lay it to. It hasn't even the vestige of a hope of securing a Republican President and a Republican House as a panacea. How could a country be so unfortunate?—Utica Press.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

"Who said that women didn't want to vote?" ejaculated County Clerk Kehoe, as he faced the registration list for the primary election in Butte, Montana. There were less than 9000 women eligible to vote in the whole city, yet he estimated that 7500 had registered. Nearly a thousand women had registered in one day.

There was at least one woman who voted at the Chicago primary who was not ashamed to tell her age. It was Mrs. Josephine Grant, age 105 years.

Analysis of the Chicago primary vote reveals the fact that, if the women alone had voted, Judge Olsen, head of the municpal court and one of the city's best citizens, would today be the Republican candidate for mayor. Republican women voters gave him a majority of over 7000 votes while Republican men voters gave William Hale Thomson a majority of almost 10,000.

A trifle over 70 per cent. of the registered women voted and a trifle less than 70 per cent. of the registered men. The woman's vote was larger than that polled by the men at the February primaries of 1914, 1913 and 1912.

The prohibitionists and the liquor interests are sometimes found united on one point and that is in their dread of woman suffrage. In an analysis of the Ohio election made by Mary Grey Peck in The Woman Voter, she estimates that half the prohibition vote in that state was cast in the recent election against woman suffrage. In the South Dakota Assembly the other day Representative Bielski opposed the woman suffrage amendment on the ground that it would hurt the prohibition amendment which would probably go to the voters next year.

Previous to last November it was the habit of the anti-suffragists to proclaim on the house tops that no woman suffrage state ever voted in prohibition. But at the last election Arizona, Colorado, Oregon and Washington went dry and they were one and all equal suffrage states. Since then a veritable epidemic of prohibition legislation has swept over states where the woman voter is unknown, and the sex line should seem to be abolished.

The suffragists claim that the near arrival of nation-wide prohibition presents problems that make woman suffrage imperative, namely—All the moral forces of the community will need to be directly back of the government to secure enforcement. The cheer that the saloon now alone offers the poor man must be replaced by places furnished by the city and it is right here that the co-operation of women in the city government will be invaluable.

In a playwrighting contest from which the students of Harvard and Radcliffe have just emerged, all three prizes went to Radcliffe girls. One Harvard man received "honorable mention."

It is suggested in the editorial column of the New York Tribune that the masculine self-confidence of Harvard students is due to the fact that they so seldom match scholastic wits with the other sex at Radcliffe.

The Building of a Healthy and Happy Community

In every pursuit of life we acknowledge the necessity of planning for the future. Preparedness is just as necessary for large groups of people as for an individual. City Planning simply means getting ready for the future in city growth. It is the guidance into proper channels of a community's impulses towards a larger and broader life. On the face it has to do with things physical—the laying out of streets and parks and rapid transit lines. But its real significance is far deeper; a proper city plan has a powerful influence for good upon the mental and moral development of the people. It is the firm base for the building of a healthy and happy community. GEORGE MCANENY.

VEGETABLE GROWERS

The State Association of Vegetable Growers will hold its next meeting with the Central New York Vegetable Growers' Association at Syracuse, March 20th. The Syracuse club has obtained at assembly hall in the court house for the meeting, an da large delegation from surrounding towns in central New York is expected to tax its capacity. The State College of Agriculture at Ithaca and the Onondaga Farm Bureau have joined with the local organization to make this meeting a success. All interested in the following program and in meeting others fellows of the trade should spend March 20th in Syracuse.

MAKING LETTUCE CRATES IN THE DISTIN ROAD

Making lettuce crates is one of the two or three occupations of the brothers Locke who live on the Distin road. Raising lettuce to fill the crates is another of the brothers' accomplishments, but in winter time when nearby truck land is snowed under they buy from farmers material for making about 150 crates a day. This is done in their sawmill, wherein is located a gasoline-driven traction engine, from which the rear wheels are removed, to insure stability.

Near the engine the brothers have a quantity of machinery, including a rip-saw which is used to cut large timbers into sides suitable for the capacity of the small saws, of which the shop has in number two. To complete their equipment for a variety of work the brothers operate a forge. Business does not lag at the Locke shop, as the men have orders for crates sufficient to keep them busy for the next six months.

SUNDAY SAYS FINAL REJECTION OF CHRIST IS UNPARDONABLE SIN

Billy Sunday's sermon on "The Unpardonable Sin," follows: His text:—

"Wherefore I say unto you, all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men, but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men.

"And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him; but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in the world, neither in the world to come."
—Matt. xii. 31-32.

I'd like to know where your Universadist gets any ground to stand on there. I'd believe God before I would any old blatherskite of a Universalist, you can bank on that.

"I say unto you, all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men, but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven, neither in this world, neither in the world to come."

I believe there were people in the days of Jesus that believed in future probation. "Neither in this world, neither in the world to come." Whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him, but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him."

"I have stretched out My hand; no man regarded."

"But ye have set at naught my counsel, and would have none of My reproof."

"I will also laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh."

"When your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind.

"Then shall they call upon Me, but I will not answer; they shall seek Me early, but they shall not find Me.

"For they that hated knowledge, and did not choose the fear of the Lord.

The Pharisees charged Jesus with being in league with the devil. They said to him: "You have a devil." They grew bolder in their denunciation and said "Why, you are a devil. You are not the Son of God. You are a devil; you do what you do through Beelzebub, the prince of devils."

Jesus said: "How is that so? If what I do I do through the devil, explain why it is I am overthrowing the works of the devil. If I am a devil, and if what I do I do through the devil, then I wouldn't be working to hurt the works of the devil."

"A house divided against itself can never stand. If I am a devil, and if what I am doing I am doing because of the devil in me, then I would not be working to destroy the works of the devil, but I would be working to destroy the works of God."

From that day forth they dared not ask Him any questions, for they could not answer His commonsense logic.

Sin Against the Holy Ghost

I know there are various opinions held by men as to what they believe or think constitutes the sin against the Holy Ghost. There are those who think it could have been committed only by those who heard Jesus Christ speak and saw Him in the flesh.

If that be true, then neither you nor I am in danger, for neither has ever seen Jesus in the flesh.

Another class thinks it has been committed since the days of Jesus, but at extremely rare intervals, and still a third class think they have committed it and they spend their life in gloom and dread and are perfectly useless to themselves or the community.

And yet I haven't the slightest doubt but that there are hundreds here today in this Tabernacle that come under the head of my message, who are never gloomy, never depressed, never downcase; their conscience is at ease; their spirits are light and gay; they eat three meals a day, and sleep as sound as a babe at night. Nothing seems to disturb them; life is all pleasure and song.

If you will do me this favor, for the good I might be to you by your so doiny, if you will lay aside any preconceived ideas or opinions which you may have had or still have as to what you imagine, think or believe constitutes the sin against the Holy Ghost, or the unpardonable sin, and if you will listen to me (for I hape read every sermon I could ever get my hands upon on the subject, and have listened to every man I have ever had the opportunity to hear preach, and have read everything the Bible has taught on the subject.)

I do not say that my views on the subject are infallible; but I will give you the result of what I have wept and prayed over and what I have read and studied, and if time will permit and my strength allow and your patience endure, I will try to ask and answer a few questions:—

What is it? Who can commit it? How can it show itself? How may I know if I have committed it? Why will not God forgive? He says He never will.

What It Is Not and What It Is

It is not swearing.

If swearing were the unpardonable sin lots of men in heaven would have to go to hell today, and there would are multitudes on earth, on their way to heaven, that would have to go to hell and I would love to go with them, because I am standing here to tell you that you never looked into the face of a man that could swear more than I could, and I think a man is a dirty-low-down dog that will cuss.

God never had anything but good, kind thoughts towards you, and for a man to cuss God because He wants to keep him out of hell is the limit.

It's not drunkenness.

There are multitudes in heaven that have crept or crawled out of the sewers of infamy and drunkenness. Some of the brightest lights that ever blazed for God have been men that God saved from hell.

It's not adultery.

Jesus said to the woman committing adultery: "Neither do I condemn thee; go and sin no more."

Out of Mary Magdalene He cast seven devils.

There are multitudes in heaven today that would have to turn for hell if adultery were the unpardonable sin, and there are multitudes on earth in their way to heaven who would have to stop and turn to hell.

It's not murder.

Men's hands have been red with blood and God has forgiven them. The Apostle Paul's hands were red with blood.

To me it is plain. It is constant and continual and final rejection of Jesus Christ as your Saviour.

God's offer of mercy and salvation comes to you, and you say "No" and push it aside. I do not know when the time takes place in the life of an individual when you can say "No" to God for the last time, but I do know that there is such a thing as a last call to every man and to every woman, and when a man or a woman says "No" to God's spirit strives within you in these days may forever seal your doom.

You hear the call; you go about your business; go about the cares of home, about the requirements and demands of society, and God will keep on calling and youw ill keep on saying "No" until there will come a time in every man's life when God will call for the last time.

It is no special form of sin. It might be swearing, it might be drunkenness, it might bea dultery or theft.

Anyone becomes unpardonable if God keps calling on you to forsake that sin and you keep on refusing to forsake it for the last time, and if you don't then He will withdraw and let you alone and that sin will become unpardonable, for God don't ask you again to forsake it.

Constant Rejection of Jesus Christ

Some people are too proud to be Christians.

I know people in Philadelphia too proud to walk down these aisles and asknowledge themselves sinners. God spirit keeps calling on you to stand up before the people and acknowledge your sins, and you keep refusing.

God will keep on asking, you keep on saying "No", and God will ask you for the last time and then let you alone.

God has been asking some of you men for ten or fifteen years to give up whiskey, and over every sermon and better nature of your life you keep saying "No."

God will ask you for the last time, and if you say "No," God will say: "All right; if you think more of your whiskey bottle than you do of me, take it and go." He will never ask you again.

It may be your adultery. You will keep refusing and God will say: "Very well; if you think more of that than Me and My salvation, take it and go."

It is no one glaring act, but the constant repetition of the same thing.

They fasten a rope to a tree, also to themselves, then swing back and forth and in upon the ledge of the rock.

When a man was doing that same thing years ago the rope beneath his arms became untied, and the protruding rock caused the rope to hang many feet beyond his reach.

The man waited for help to come, but none came. Darkness came, the light dawned, and he gave himself up to the fate of starvation which he felt inevitably awaiting him, when a breeze, freshened from the sea, as the rope started to vibrate, and as the wind increased in velocity it increased the vibration of the rope, and as it would strike the edge of the rock it would bend it.

He said: "If I miss it, I die; if I seize it it's my only chance," and with a prayer to God as the rope bent in he leaped out over the chasm and seized it, and made his way hand over hand to the top, and when he reached it his hair was as white as the snow.

There is one cord that swings through this old world today, my friends, the Holy Spirit, and with every vibration and the rising and the setting of the sun it gets less, until I think it is far beyond the reach of some.

I believe there are men in Philadelphia who have just as truly sealed their doom as if they were in hell today. I believe that through every sermon that is preached, if it be a true sermon, God calls men and women for the last time, and I believe God is giving some in Philadelphia, by and through this revival meeting, the last opportunity to forsake their sins and accept Jesus Christ as their Saviour.

I believe if these meetings close and if you people are still outside the pale of God's mercy, I believe you have forever sealed your doom.

By every known law of the mind, conversion must be effected by the influence of the truth on the mind.

It is also a known law of them ind that truth resisted loses its power on the mind that resists and each resistance weakens the truth. Every time you resist the truth the next time you hear it it loses its force on your mind. And very time you hear a truth and resist the truth, then you become stronger in your power to resist the truth.

We all know this, that each resistance strengthens you against the truth. When a man hears the truth and resists it, the truth grows weaker and he grows stronger.

Supposing I should say to you that electricity will produce heat and light but you say: "I don't believe it."

To demonstrate it I point to these lights and you will say you don't believe it. What more could I do?

The Jews refused to receive Him as their Messiah or acknowledge Him as the Son of God, until their enmity culminated in His curcifixion.

He stood one day by the grave of Lazarus and cried to the dead: "Come forth!" and he that was dead came forth, and Jesus turned to the Jews and said: "Is that enough to prove that I am the Son of God?" And they said: "Away with Him!"

No matter what He said or did they refused to accept Him.

But as He walked into the city of Nain, and they were bearing out that young man to his grave, and his mother was following, weeping. Jesus said to those that bore the boy. "Stop!" and they did. He took him by the hand and said: "Young man, I say unto thee arise!" and he that was dead arose and stood upright and Jesus gave him to his mother.

Turning to the Pharisees, He said: "Is that enough to prove that I am the Son of God?" And they said: "Away with Him!"

No matter what He said or did, they refused to believe Him.

No matter what sermon you hear or what evidence you see, a great many men and women and any man or womant hat can look upon the movements of God's spirit in Philadelphia in these days and stell their hearts against God must be like adamant.

There is no hope that God can reach you if, after a manifestation of His power such as this, you say "No."

You haven't had to use your handkerchiefs very much since I've been here. I don't picture deathbed scenes; I try to appeal to your reason, to show you that you are only reasonable when you are righteous, and are a fool when you are not, and the only reasonable person on earth is a Christian.

You never did a more reasonable thing in your life than to be a Christian, nor a more unreasonable thing than to refuse to serve God and keep His commandments.

Years ago a lady wasp reaching in a town in Indiana, a lady named Mrs. Robinson. She came to the last night of the meetings, and there was a young lady in the meeting who was a leader in society and who had a great influence in her set.

They tried to get her to give her heart to God, but she spurned them. My friend left the platform and went down to speak to her, but she still refused.

Mrs. Robinson returned to the platform and repeated the appeal, and she saw this young lady turn to her companion, borrow his lead pencil, reach down in the rack of the pew, take out a hymn book, write something on the uy leaf, drop the hymn book back in the rack, give the lead pencil to her companion, fold her arms and look carelessly around.

My friend even went another time and urged her, but she wouldn't go, so returned to the platform and the meeting was dismissed.

Seven months later Mrs. Robinson went back to that town. When she stepped from the train some one said:—

"It's you, Mrs. Robinson? You remember Miss B., the young lady you tried to win to Christ?"

"Yes"'

"She is very ill. The doctors have had a consultation and they say she will not live long. Maybe you had beeter go and see her. Possibly you can help her."

Mrs. Robinson hurried to the home and to the bedside of the girl, and when the young lady saw her she turned her face to the wall and said:

"I didn't send for you; you are too late. If you will go to the church and look through the hymn books you will find the reason for I wrote a sentense in one of them."

My friend hurried to the church, accompanied by others, looked through the hymn book, and on the fly leaf of one they found written:—

"I will run the risk; I'll take my chances."

She had signed her name and dropped the book and God never gave her another chance. That was her funeral sermon she was listening to.

I believe that God Almighty is giving men and women the last chance, for everybody knows there is a last call. God say: "My Spirit sholl nat always strive with man." That does not mean that God's Spirit will be withdrawn from the world in general, but when that takes place time will end. "My Spirit shall not always strive with you and you and you." "I will not alway keep begging you and you and you to turn from your sins." No.

ADVERTISING SENSE

The proprietor of a large store in London says:

¶ "When war broke out our firm ceased advertising and the employes went on short time. Noting that our competitors were also not advertising, two months before Christmas our firm launched out once more. Orders rolled in, the staff were put on overtime and the last two months of 1914 were record ones for business."

TIMES' RURAL TRAVELER TALKS

Battle Island School Pupils Listen to John F. Smith, Writer, etc.

John F. Smith, lecturer, and for the time being, rural solicitor and writer for The Evening Times, gave an interesting, instructive talk to the pupils of the Battle Island school Thursday afternoon.

The grades represented there are the 4th, 5th and 6th and when the genial traveler of suburban roads propounded a number of questions upon geographical subjects, including the Star Spangled Banner, Miss Lillian Cahill almost took the stump from under John by her ready answers. The young lady, says The Times' traveler, is a credit to herself and her teacher, Miss Whitcombe.

Mr. Smith in the course of the lecture dwelt upon the advantages to be obtained by education. He said that many of the men who today are doing work for a livelihood of a menial nature are simply the victims of lost or neglected opportunities.

"There is no better time to store the mind with knowledge than when you are young" said Mr. Smith, to which he added: "This, or any other public school is the fountain head from which springs the knowledge that will make you a success in the world."

In admonishing the school pupils to at all times remain honest, Mr. Smith cited instances of men who have held positions of trust, but who, at the sign of temptation fell from the pinnacle they formerly occupied.

Mr. Smith's talk did not occupy more than a space of twenty minutes, but in that time he said many witty things to enliven and keep his audience keyed up for the moral side of the lecture. That the pupils enjoyed thoroughly the talk was evidenced by the expressions of keen delight that appeared on every face in the room.

CLARK'S BILL; CHEAPER FOOD

Canal System of State Would Be the Means to a Desirable End

Albany, March 13.—One of the most eccentric and well known characters in the State has just introduced through the medium of a friendly legislator, a bill which aims to provide cheaper bread, coal and other necessary commodities. The measure, oddly drafted may be passed, but unfortunately for its enthusiastic sponsor, it also may not.

Captain Clark has been a regular devotee of the legislative halls and chambers for many years. At one time a canaler of ability and influence he still retains a keen interest in canal affairs and believes that he has the solution of the canal problem of the State at his fingers ends. While this may be true, there have not been a sufficient number of legislators to share his conviction to the extent that his previous ideas relative to the canals were enacted into law.

It has been a long time since such a bill as Captain Clark is backing has been introduced. In the first place its captain is "Captain Clark's Bill Providing for Cheaper Bread, Coal, etc. All legislative bills begin with the name of the introducer, by Mr. So and So. And then again, the introduction is generally brief; the introduction of the Clark measure is quite substantial. Clark thinks it is a modest little bit of legislation; this is what it provides:

"Making provisions for the issuance of noninterest bearing State scripts to the amount of not exceeding one hundred and ninety-eight million dollars' worth to be used by the State of New York for the purpose of the improvement of the Chemung River, the Genesee River, the Chenango River, the Oswegatchie River, the Regrass River, the Racquette River, the Black River and the improvement and extension of the Black River Canal and the improvement of the lockage capacity of the present Erie canal, and the improvement of its Mohawk Harbor or West Troy harbor to Waterford and the extension and improvement of the lateral barge canals, namely, the Delaware and Hudson Canal, the Chemung Canal and River, the Chenango Canal, the Oneida Creek, the Scriba Creek, the Indian Creek, the Lyons and Sodus Bay Canal, the Crooked Lake Canal and the Glens Falls Feeder Canal and the terminal facilities thereof and providing for the submission of the same to the electors of this State to be voted upon at the next general election to be held in the State in this year, 1915."

When the bill made its appearance, the legislative leaders shook their heads dolefully. So did General Wotherspoon of the State Department of public works; likewise did State Engineer Williams. This, however, did not seriously interfere with the optimism of Captain Clark, who still believes that his bill will go through the legislature with flying colors.

There is no saying what might have happened if the slogan of the present administration had not been one of rigid economy, but since it is, the opinion prevails that the one hundred and odd millions will not be appropriated this session.

There never was a more persistent man than Captain Clark and he has already begun his work of explaining his bill. He points out to the members of the legislature, with whom he converses in many places, that no man knows more about the canals of the State than he and there is considerable truth in what he says. When he is told that he is too ambitious in his legislation, he is ready with an argument which is to the effect that until his scheme is carried out the canal system will never be completed

The idea that a woman has not a sense of humor is more than disproven by Margaret Mayo, who several years ago wrote the laughing success of the season, "Baby Mine." This farce ran for a year in New York and was played on the road by several companies, to the intense joy of the large audiences which greeted it everywhere.

And now Miss Mayo has repeated with "Twin Beds," now in its sixth month of successful merriment at the Fulton theatre, New York. This piece is a farce comedy of much naturalness, ludicrous situations are constantly occurring in everyday life, particularly in the large apartment house.

Given a flighty young wife, who likes excitement and to entertain, whose husband is quite content to sit by the fireside and enjoy his evening paper after a day at the office, and you have one situation. But when the wife has a penchant for forming new acquaintances, likewise in flirting with a famous Italian tenor, and you add to the complications.

Furnish the singer with a raw boned wife, who is alternately torn by emotions which one instant cause her to be jealous of him and the next ready to thrash him within an inch of his life, and to be unconscious of her husband's flirtation with the childlike Mrs. Hawkins, and you add to complications.

Have an almost bride catch her fiance trying her wedding ring on the fingers of Mrs. Hawkins, where it unfortunately sticks, just as the near bride enters the room, and the growing trouble is apparent.

"Twin Beds" is coming to Fulton on Monday, March 15th, and will be seen at The Quirk for matinee and night performances only.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

By Frederic T. Cardoze

Albany, March 13.—When the members of the new Court of Claims sit for the first time at Utica for a term beginning March 22, the three members of that body will face a calendar containing 169 cases.

The Court of Claims, which by law has been substituted for the Board of Claims which was legislated out of office, is composed of Adolph J. Rodenbeck, of Rochester; Fred M. Ackerson, of Niagara Falls, and Thomas F. Fennell of Elmira. It has jurisdiction over all claims against the State filed because of injuries received or damages sustained as the result of negligence, condemnation proceedings or abrogation of contracts.

When the law creating the new Court of Claims was signed, it was stipulated that the members of the Board of Claims should have sixty days in which to clear their calendar of the cases which had been partially considered by them. In the interim one hundred and sixty-nine claims have been presented for the consideration of the judges of the new court.

Of the cases which are to be considered during the March term at Utica several are worthy of mention. Duncan W. Peck of Syracuse, formerly State superintendent of public works, has a claim for $14,713.92 based upon alleged damage to land at Brewerton caused by the erection of a dam at Caughdenoy. Mr. Peck claims that the dam caused the waters of Oneida lake set back and flood his premises.

Another claim is that of the Burt Olney Canning Co. and is for $17,126.84 and is based upon damage resulting from the rising of of the waters of Oneida creek at Rome.

One of the largest claims on the calendar is that of he Fort Orange Construction Co. and totals $430,020.05. This claim is based upon an unfulfilled contract with the State for construction work. Another calim based upon a similar condition of affairs, is that of H. S. Kerbaukh Inc., which is for $380,540.

Another big claim is that of H. S. Kerbaugh also. It is based upon a barge canal contract and the amount is $101,196. There are also several claims brought by the Rochester, Syracuse and Eastern railroad and one by the Empire United Railways Inc.

A large majority of the claims which are on the March calendar are for the appropriation of property by the State for barge canal purposes. These cases have already been the most numerous since the work of construction on the barge canal began.

The law legislating out of office the members of the Board of Claims was one of the first created as the result of the present session of the legislature. In his annual message to the law-makers Governor Whitman suggested that it might be well to restore the old court. In this relation he said:

"The present Board of Claims, created in 1911, has utterly failed to accompish the purposes of its organization. It has been inefficient and the tremendous calendar which has accumulated suggests a change of system. The old Court of Claims, composed of competent judges, was legislated out of office four years ago for partisan purposes only. The function is a judicial one and it has been suggested that that Court should be restored with the powers and jurisdiction which it formerly exercised.

The members of the old Board of Claims who will shortly cease to be identified with the State are John J. Rooney, New York; William A. Gardner, Amsterdam, and James C. McDonald, Schenectady.

Decisive Movement Expected by Russians Along Polish Front

London, March 13.—The Daily chronicle's correspondent telegraphs from Petrograd:

"Events as they continue to develop at the front in Poland take on more and more the character of preparation by the Germans for a decisive action. Military critics consider that the new German offensive is not favorably circumstanced, the initiative of attack in general not really belonging to the Germans, who are being forced to concentrate in much greater numbers than before on the same front.

"The composition of the German troops is now very mixed, corps being formed with groups taken from five to six different corps. Members of the commanding staff also are unused to one another.

"The Russians, in a timely counter attack in the Pilitza region, have paralyzed that part of the German offensive plan, forcing the Germans to act on the defensive."

LA BASSEE REGION GETS 3 GERMAN DIVISIONS

On Blegian Frontier, March 13.—The Germans in Belgium admit the seriousness of their reverse at the hands of the British in the region of La Bassee. The dispatch to that district yesterday of additional intantry just arrived from Germany, estimated to amount to three divisions, shows it is not their intention to accept defat without further sacrifices.

More howitzers also have been sent to the south frrom the artillery park at Ghent, and the entire area from Knocke to Westende is full of infantry, awaiting the order rto attempt to overwhelm the Allies below the great dune by an avalanche of troops.

The Germans are trying in every way possible to prevent the details of the La Bassee reverse reaching Holland through civilians, three of whom were shot last night at various frontier posts while trying to crorss with messages.

Germans fears of a landing of enemy troops north of Ostend again is apparent in the massing of several divisions around Bruges. It appears to be accpted as conclusive by the Germans taht the Allies will invade Flanders between Knocke and Ostend and some of their best troops are held in readiness to repel such a movement.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

The British Admiralty announces this morning the destruction of the auxiliary cruiser Bayano with a loss of about two hundred lives as she was engaged in patrol duty in the Irish sea. The Admiralty's statement follows:

"On March 11 wreckage of the Bayano and bodies were discovered, and circumstances point to her having been sunk by an enemy torpedo.

"Eight officers and eighteen men were rescued, but it is feared that the rest of the crew were lost.

"The captain of the Belfast steamship Castlereagh reports passing on Thursday morning a quantity of wreckage and dead bodies floating in life belts. He attempted to search for possible survivors but was prevented by the appearraince of an enemy submarine, which gave chase for twenty minutes."

The Belfast correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says the Bayano was torpedoed on Thursday morning at nine o'clock, off Corsewell Point, Wigtownshire, Scotland, and that nearly two hundred lives were lost, as the cruiser sank almost immediately. The vessel had a crew of about 216 men on board.

FRENCH

The War Office made public the following official communication:

"To the east of Lombaertzyde, in Belgium, we have taken a German fort about 100 metres in front of our line of trenches.

"Threre kilometres (about two miles) east of Armentieres (nine miles northwest of Lille) the British troops have occupied the village og Ephette. In the sector of Neuve Chapelle the progress of the British army has been followed up. After repulsing two strong coutner attacks this army took possession of that part of the German linew hich was situted between the hamlet of Pietre and the mill of the same name, and captured about 400 prisoners, including five officers.

"On Friday we made some slight progress in the same region.

"Further west, parallel with the Tahure road (northwest of Souain, we have occupied several German trenches.

"On the heights of the Meuse parts of a trench in which the German had succeeded in gaining a footing yesterday morning.

"At Reich Ackerkopf we repulsed nights attacks and advanced 200 metres (about 600 feet).

"In Belgium two divisions of the Belgian army advanced between 400 and 500 metres, notably in the direction of Schoorbakke, to the southeast of Nieport.

GERMAN

The General Staff of the German Army today gave out a report on the progress ofthe war reading as follows:

"In the western arena. Two battleships of teh enemy, accompanied by two torpedo boats, fired on Westende, on the Belgian coast to the north of Nieuport, yesterday. Seventy shots were fired without doing any damage. When our batteries became active the war ships of the enemy retreated.

QUIET OSWEGO, TOO, HAS BLACKHANDERS

Not to be outclassed or outdone by Fulton with its former band of al- Times of March 11 prints the following:

"An alleged attempt at extorting money from Mrs. R. A. Downey was made yesterday through the medium of a letter which purported to be of black hand origin. The whole affair, on the face of it, was so preposterous and so obviously fishy that it even failed to worry Mrs. Downey. Threats of dynamiting the Downey residence last evening unless a thousand dollars in cash was put up and various other behests and commands were contained but failed to convey proper terror. Nothing scheduled to happen, as per the letters, has occurred and it is strongly believed that the entire matter is a fake purè and simple, calculated to cause annoyance and to form a basis for some unpleasant notoriety in big city papers.

"The letter directed Mrs. Downey to drive out East Bridge st. in her runabout at 6:30 last evening, accompanied by no one execpt her chauffeur or her maid, turn south at Ninth street and drive slowly until she heard a whistle when she was to throw out a package containing $1,000 in bills. If she consulted with or told anybody or took any steps to have the perpetrator apprehended it was announced that the home would be blown up last night. She was also cautioned not to glance back after throwing out the money or she would be shot.

"The Downey runabout performed the services above mentioned at the proper time last evening, manned by a person who seemed to be a perfect lady and the chaffeur. No whistle was heard so no package was thrown out. Incidentally the Downey home was not molested last night and nothing further has been heard from the letter or threats.

"The letter was couched in excellent English, the sentences being long and involved, but good, grammatically. The writing is in a rather unformed hand, such as might be used by a high school boy."

JUDGE EMERSON MAY REMIT CAHILL CASE

Oswego, March 13.—The case of Attorney Frederick T. Cahill, indicted on charges of grand larceny and malpractice, will not be remitted to the County Court for trial as is customary in criminal cases. It will remain in Supreme Court but be remitted by Justice Emerson to the May term for trial. Justice Hubbs will preside at this term.

A verdict of $500 for the plaintiff was returned in Supreme Court late Thursday in the case of William A. Winden against Charles Davis. The plaintiff sued to recover $5,000 damages for alleged assault.

The assault was claimed to have been commited in Hannibal several months ago. The plaintiff claimed his jaw bone was fractured and that he was otherwise injured. Dr. H. S. Albertson, the plaintiff's physician, who testified, used a human skull and an imitation skull in his explanation to the jury. Dr. W. J. Bulger of Oswego was equally positive that the jaw was not fractured.

The defendant admitted a quarrel with Winden at Hannibal in December in which he hit the plaintiff. He denied, however, that the blow was hard enough to cause a fracture or cause serious injury.

A jury was impaneled to hear the case of Gerald B. Owens against C. Gilsman Falk and H. Raymond Menzies to recover $4000 growing out of an alleged breach of contract. The defendants were contractors on a state highway in Volney, and Owens claims that he was a foreman in their employ. He claims that he worked under a contract and that he was discharged.

The record in the case of Franklin D'Olier Company of New York vs. Hayes Knitting Company, to recover $5,000 for cotton and yarn claimed to have been sold to the defendant, was certified from New York to Oswego county yesterday. The defendant has a counter claim amounting to $892.50, claiming that the goods were not satisfactbry, the defects appearing in the manufacture. A change of venue from New York to Oswego county has been granted. The record is very voluminous, including a large number of motions and other proceedings. An order by Justice John W. Goff, vacating an order by County Judge Coville for security for costs, is contained in the record. Justice Nathan Bijur signed the order for a change of venue.

The defendant in the action of Benjamin F. Hull vs. Camden Water Wheel Works, has appealed from the judgment of the January Supreme Court term of $200 and costs for the plaintiff. The plaintiff was not satisfied with the verdict and moved for a new trial, which was denied. The total judgment is $332.39.

HAWAII HEARS WAR THREAT

Report That Armies Were Ordered to Move; Likely Proposals Have Been Modified

Honolulu, March 13. — Immediate acceptance of Japan's demands in full or immediate war, this is the choice of the Japanese goyernment has given to the Republic of China, according to advices received from Tokio today. These advices have come to leading members of the Japanese colony here. It is announced that the Emperor has given his sanction to the sending of an ultimatum to China, and that others have been issued for the sending of three full army divisions to the continent at once.

One of these divisions is to go to Manchuria, another to Tsingtao. The third according to Tokio despatches, is headed for "a secret destination."

Japanese here interpret these announcements as indicating a closing in upon Peking. They believe the "secret destination" of the third division is that portion of western Mongolia which Japan is claiming as her new "sphere." This would place this contingent as near to Peking as the old Manchu capital, Jehol, from whish there is easy approach to the Chinese capital.

This information concerning the army movements is supplemented by news that the Japanese navy is being rapidly prepared for action.

Japanese here express the belief that it is Japan's purpose to take full advantage of her present opportunities and that the outcome must be either a complete backing down on China's part or that Japan will proceed to take control at Peking.

JAPAN MODIFIES HER DEMANDS ON CHINA

Peking, Friday—Japan has definitely modified her attitued toward China in the matter of insisting upon compliance with the demands she made upon the Chinese Republic soon after the occupation by Japan of the German concession of Kiaochou. These demands for some two months have been the subject of negotiations at Peking.

Having already agreed to the Chinese counter proposals to discuss Manchuria and Mongolia separately, the Japanese representatives have now verbally informed China that they will forego completely several of their demands. Furthermore, Japan is prepared to modify the proposed clauses concerning the Hanan, Tayeh and Ping-siang mining concessions and revise her requirements concerning Japanese residents and traders in Manchuria and Mongolia.

The conferences are still proceeding. The demands as now presented have been drafted in the form of a treaty or agreement between China and Japan.

Soon after Japanese forces were successful in wresting the possession of Kiaochou, the German concession in Shantung Province, China, from its defenders, Tokio announced the beginning of negotiations at Peking, the purpose of which was to "determine the future status of Japanese relations with China and to decide certain questions concerning the future development of the Chinese Republic."

Japan presented to China a total of twenty-one demands, which have been described as far reaching, both in their political and commercial aspects. Soon afterward Japan handed to the legations at Tokio of the great Powers a memorandum concerning these negotiations, but in this document only eleven demands were mentioned. Explaining this discrepancy, Japan later declared that certain matters which had been long pending between the two countries had not been included.

China was much concerned over the demands made upon her by Japan. She protested against them on the ground that they infringed upon her sovereignty and conflicted with existing treaties between China and other Powers. The course of these diplomatic conferences at Peking—sessions have been held twice and three times a week for nearly two months in an effort to reach an understanding—was watched with deep interest in Washington, London, Berlin and Petrograd. It was realized that important political developments might come from them. On several occasions the significance and the actual status of the negotiations between Japan and China have been mentioned in the British House of Commons.

Dispatches from Peking a few days ago said that Japane had virtually threatened China with force unless she accepted her demands, and these were followed by messages from Tokio and Yokohama yesterday saying Japan was sending fresh troops to Manchuria to strengthen the existing garrisons there. These movements were interpeeted in Japan as being in preparation for eventualities.

The demand of Japan mentioned specifically in the foregoing dispatch, concerns mining concessions. It provided that mining concessions conflicting with existing concessions at Hanang, Tayeh and Ping-siang should not be granted to other foreigners if a Chino-Japanese company hereafter to be formed should disapprove.

LAST CONGRESS GENEROUS IN PROVIDING FOR GREATER NAVY

Five Dreadnoughts, Three Seagoing Submarines, Twenty-three Submarines, Twelve Torpedo Boat Destroyers.

Fuel Ship to Cost $1,000,000. Also $1,000,000 For Aviation—Praise From Secretary Daniels.

"THE naval appropriation bill for 1916 is the most liberal measure for the increase and support of the navy, carrying more valuable legislation than any naval appropriation bill ever enacted by congress," said Secretary Daniels in answer to a request for his views upon the naval appropriation act. "The wisdom of the congress just ended is shown particularly in its resistance to attempts to discredit the navy's material and personnel; in its adherence to the fundamental types of fighting vessels — battleships, destroyers and submarines; in its recognition of aircraft and submarines as important auxiliaries of warfare, and of the latter's increased efficiency; in its creation of a naval reserve; in the establishment of the office of chief of naval operations and the ranks of admirals and vice admirals; in the abolition of the plucking board; in equipping navy yards for the construction of ships and the increase in the manufacture of munitions of war; in well considered and liberal appropriations for the needs of the service in every line."

The Sixty-third congress has been more generous than any other in providing for the navy, having authorized in the two naval appropriation bills an entire division of five Dreadnoughts which will each cost in the neighborhood of $15,000,000; three seagoing submarines, which will cost $1,500,000 each; twenty-three submarines, which will cost about $500,000 each; twelve torpedo boat destroyers, averaging in cost about $900,000 each, and a fuel ship to cost $1,000,000.

The total appropriation for increase of the navy authorized by the Sixty-third congress is $86,145,535, showing an increase over the Sixty-second congress by the Sixty-third of $30,250,466.52 for additional ships for the navy. To this should be added $1,000,000 for aviation and $800,000 for submarines reappropriated from savings effected in expenditures ashore over the last fiscal year. This $1,960,000 of money reappropriated by reason of economies effected should be added to the $86,145,535, making $87,945,535 for new construction.

The real progress that will be made by the navy as a result of its liberal and intelligent treatment by this congress cannot be expressed by dollars and cents. Any person or any congress can spend money, but no other congress has gone so far to see that its appropriation was applied where most vitally needed and without regard to merely political considerations. Everything has been subordinated to the battle fleet and its efficiency. The haphazard and sometimes prodigal appropriations of previous congresses for unnecessarily costly buildings at navy yards, which have been so justly criticised by former Secretary of the Navy Meyer in the public press, have been done away with. Expenditures ashore have been reduced to an absolute minimum, and in this connection it is pleasant to record the cheerful co-operation of the Democratic members of congress from navy yard districts who have patriotically risen to the occasion and cheerfully acquiesced in the desire of the department first of all to increase the strength and efficiency of the fleet. Of perhaps even greater eventual importance than the mere physical additions to the fleet are the steps which have been taken toward increasing the personnel and modernizing the military organization of the navy. The "plucking board," which had outlived its usefulness, has been abolished, and a system of promotion to take its place will be one of the first things taken up by the new congress when it assembles.

Comparison of Appropriations.

A comparison of the provisions of the bill with the recommendations in the annual report of the secretary of the navy for the fiscal year 1914 and the accompanying estimates for the fiscal year 1915-16 shows how closely congress followed the thought and reasoning of this report. The building program recommended by the secretary was:

Two Dreadnoughts, six destroyers, eight submarines or more, one to be of seagoing and seven or more of coast defense type, with a supplementary recommendation for a larger increase in submarine craft, "appropriating generously therefor without reducing the appropriation for other classes," and $1,000,000 for aviation; one gunboat, one oiler.

The building program passed by congress is as follows: Two Dreadnoughts, six destroyers, two seagoing submarines, sixteen smaller submarines, one oiler and $1,000,000 for aviation.

Naval Reserve Provision.

Perhaps the best piece of legislation for the navy passed in a decade is the provision in the present bill authorizing a naval reserve. It creates a naval reserve composed of only honorably discharged men from the navy, on graded pay according to the length of time they have served. This not only provides a reserve of trained and experienced men, ready upon a day's notice to man our reserve ships and to supplement the war complements of ships of the battle fleet, but perhaps its most important feature is that which permits men to enter the reserve on graded rates of pay according to the length of service in the navy. This feature will greatly increase the efficiency of the enlisted personnel by inducing the experienced men to remain in the service for longer periods and thus cause the bulk of the enlisted personnel to be composed of trained and experienced men. Under the conditions of today only one-third of the entire enlisted force of the navy are men who have had more than four years' service. The other two-thirds are now serving in their first enlistment. This has been the case for many years. It is believed that this feature of the bill will place our enlisted force on a better status than that of any other navy in the world.

The bill provides for a new position in the navy, to be known as the chief of operations, who, under the direction of the secretary of the navy, will be in charge of the operations of the fleet and preparation of plans for its use in war. This new position, it is believed, will co-ordinate more perfectly the work of the war college, the general board, the office of naval intelligence and the carrying out of maneuvers by the fleet. The wisest men in the navy believe this provision will make the organization as perfect as it is possible to make any organization and will centralize in the navy department all the utilities which go to make for the preparation for war.

Admirals and Vice Admirals.

For a long time it has been felt whenever there were any joint operations between the navies of this country and of other countries that the American navy has not had the position to which it is entitled because other countries, some of them with much smaller navies, have given higher rank to the commanding officers. We have now in the American navy in command of fleets no admiral. The only admiral we have is Admiral Dewey, who is at the head of the general board and does not go to sea. The conference committee has agreed upon a provision which will remove this handicap under which our navy has been compelled to operate. It is provided that the commanders in chief of the fleet on the Atlantic, Pacific and Asiatic waters shall rank as admirals and vice admirals. This rank is not created to be conferred upon any officer permanently, but he occupies it only so long as he is in command afloat.

Pay Clerks.

The position of pay clerk in the navy has up to this time been a most unsatisfactory one. Every paymaster upon being detailed to a ship was allowed to appoint his own clerk, and upon his detachment the appointment of the clerk was automatically revoked. This gave no permanent status to the pay clerks and caused a great deal of confusion in the changing of duties of paymasters. The measure providing for a permanent corps of pay clerks is an excellent one for the general duties to be performed, and it at the same time gives an opportunity to the clerical force of the enlisted personnel to receive advancement. This provision, therefore, will promote the efficiency of the corps having charge of supplying the navy in peace and war.

Naval Constructors.

The steady increase of the building program and the constant developments in naval architecture call for more naval constructors, and the secretary of the navy is given authority to transfer an additional number of ensigns to the naval construction corps, not exceeding five in any one calendar year, up to a total not exceeding twenty-four. The necessity for this has been heightened by reason of the changed methods of construction that will be learned as the result of the present European war.

Medals.

Heretofore there has been a provision of law by which an enlisted man who showed distinguished conduct in battle or extraordinary heroism could be given a medal of honor, but there has been no such provision for an officer. The bill provides that the president may give such medal of honor to an officer who deserves it.

Radio.

The development that has been made in the radio during the past year has demonstrated the great value that the service can render in war and its prime importance as a means of communication. Communication is now readily had between the radio station at Arlington and the small radio station at San Diego, and the erection of the high power stations at San Diego, Pearl Harbor and Cavite will, it is believed, insure communication between the department and the government's most distant possessions at all times of the day and at all seasons of the year.

The Sixty-first congress appropriated $400,000 for the construction of marine barracks in Panama. In view of the fact that the forces of the army will occupy the canal zone, the secretary of the navy did not authorize the construction of the barracks provided for at Panama, and this bill authorizes the use of the $400,000 appropriated at Panama to be spent, $200,000 each, for barracks at Mare Island and Norfolk.

Shipbuilding at Navy Yards.

Until a year ago none of our navy yards was prepared to build ships except New York and Mare Island. The naval bill passed at the first session of this congress carried an appropriation for a building slip that would enable Boston and Philadelphia to build ships for the navy. The present bill carries an appropriation to enable Norfolk and Charleston to construct ships in these yards, and during the year the secretary has arranged to build submarines at the Portsmouth (N. H.) yard. It is believed that if all the navy yards are equipped to do construction of some character the investment in the yards will yield a better return and that the competition between the yards and the private contractors will insure that the government will secure the construction of new ships at the lowest possible price.

Aeronautics.

During the past year the secretary of the navy has established an aviation school at Pensacola, utilizing the grounds and buildings which had been abandoned when the Pensacola navy yard was abolished. For the first time in the history of the navy air craft were used abroad during the occupation of Vera Cruz, and the navy aviators were able to render valuable service. The war in Europe has shown the great importance of air craft. The conference report makes a new departure in aeronautics in the navy and appropriates $1,000,000 for the development of aeronautics and the purchase of modern air craft. Heretofore the appropriations for aeronautics have been divided among the several bureaus. It is now concentrated, and with the school at Pensacola and the larger appropriations navy aeronautics will become a much more effective agency.

In addition, the bill provides for an advisory committee for aeronautics. It is believed that this advisory committee, with the authority given, composed of officers of the army and navy and men skilled in aeronautical engineering and its allied sciences, will bring together the aeronautic services of the government and give to each branch the valued results of study and investigation.

The aeronautic service is particularly hazardous and calls for men of enterprise and daring. The bill provides proper compensation for the courageous men who undertake this dangerous service for the navy and permits the secretary of the navy to assign to this service officers of higher rank than have heretofore been available.

The conferees have voiced public sentiment in favoring a large increase in the fighting power of the navy and limited new construction to ships deemed the most effective in time of war.

The European conflict has demonstrated the use of submarines with a speed of twenty-five knots or more, if possible, but not less than twenty knots each, to cost not to exceed $1,500,000 each. The first session of this congress authorized the first submarine of this character which had heretofore been authorized. Up to the present war the largest submarine has been of 800 tons displacement. These three seagoing submarines will have a displacement of not less than 1,100 tons and as far as is reliably known are the largest projected by any country. Provision is also made for the construction of sixteen more submarines, to cost not to exceed $550,000 each. Six destroyers are authorized, to cost not to exceed $925,000 each, and one oiler, to cost not to exceed $1,100,000. The regular program of two Dreadnoughts a year, originally recommended by the general board, is carried out in this bill. These mighty ships, exclusive of armor and armament, will cost not to exceed $7,800,000 each. It is estimated that fully equipped they will each cost between $14,000,000 and $15,000,000. The first session of the present congress authorized three Dreadnoughts, thus making the record of the Sixty-third congress five of these most powerful fighting ships.

The total appropriations carried by this bill reported by the conferees is $87,538,981.88, of which $45,053,801 is for increase of the navy, exclusive of $1,000,000 for aeronautics, which should be added, making $46,053,801 for increase of the navy in this bill. If to the new construction carried in this bill is added the amount for new construction authorized at the last session of this congress, which was $41,091,734, it will be seen that the increase of the navy authorized by the Sixty-third congress is $87,945,535, which is $31,260,466.52 more than was carried in the appropriation bills of the Sixty-second congress for increase of the navy. The total appropriations for the navy in this bill are $147,538,981.88. It should be borne in mind, however, that the last session of this congress authorized the sale of the Idaho and Mississippi for $12,535,275.96 and the construction of the powerful Dreadnought California. Therefore the total naval appropriation in said bill should be reduced $4,033,000, the amount authorized for the construction of the California by the last session out of the proceeds of the sale of the Mississippi and Idaho, and the total naval expenditures of the present session of this congress should be reduced $5,827,410, the sum to be expended on the California. These amounts came from the proceeds of the sale of the Idaho and Mississippi and therefore do not come out of the regular funds in the treasury derived from taxation.

She Found Her Vocation

By EUNICE BLAKE

Helen Warfield when nineteen years of age, by the death of first her father and a few months later her mother, found herself responsible for the support of herself and several brothers and sisters very much younger than herself. What should she do to feed and clothe her little ones? She had shown some talent in private theatricals for histrionics and had been told that she would achieve success on the stage. An old friend of her mother offered to advance a certain sum by which she might receive some education as an actress, and Helen availed herself of it, taking lessons of an elocutionist.

Her instructor did not encourage her. He told her that her enunciation was peculiar to herself and that it was unattractive. As for her action, especially her facial expression, it was all that could be desired. But she could not hope to please with that alone, and her enunciation would so repel an audience that her valuable qualities would not be appreciated.

Helen's friends told her that this was rubbish. She had pleased private audiences and she would with the same gifts please the public. Helen believed them because she preferred to believe them. She did not know that intimate friends, even if competent critics, will seldom give an unbiased criticism. As for professional critics, while they may judge as to what is artistic, when it comes to judging what the public will fancy they are as much at sea as any one else.

Helen, encouraged by her friends, persevered. After a hasty preparation she attempted, with the assistance of friends, to get an engagement. She was offered parts in which she would have but a few words to say, but she felt that they would give her no opportunity to show what she could do, and she pushed on for something better. Finally, at the earnest solicitation of a friend, she was given a trial. It was arranged that she should understudy for a part that would test her powers, and the person whom she was understudying agreed to give way to her as soon as she was ready to make the trial.

In due time she appeared in the role she had been preparing for. She made a dismal failure. She felt her part, acted her part, but she could not speak her part. As her preceptor had warned her, her enunciation spoiled the whole.

"What shall I do?" she moaned. "I have spent the money furnished me to study and have failed."

"I have heard," said her instructor, "that these men who show moving photographs are beginning to give little plays. If you are in need of money you might make something in that way."

Helen's heart sank within her. What—give up her dreams of having her name posted in enormous letters as a famous actress, to be photographed for a ten cent show! Horrible! Nevertheless, going home to a lot of hungry children, with nothing to buy food for them, sent her the next day to a studio where a picture play was just beginning to be made ready for presentation to the public. Although the manager had no experience at that early date in producing such plays, it occurred to him that the chief feature in them was the acting, especially the facial expression. Beauty was also an advantage, and Helen was comely.

"Let me see you look like a thief caught red handed," he said.

Helen obeyed.

"Good! Now laugh. Good again! Look at me with haughty contempt. Excellent! You are condemned to death. You are an innocent girl listening to the first words of love. That will do. You have the power of expressing by your face what you feel. In your case words are not needed. What salary do you expect?"

"Whatever you choose to pay."

"I will start you at $25 a week, but I am sure you will soon be worth more than that."

Helen was surprised. How easy was the getting of this situation compared with her efforts to secure a trial at which she had failed! The manager advanced a week's salary, anxious to bind the bargain and fearing some other manager would get her away from him.

He gave her a part in the play that he was about making photographs for, and it was at once evident that she would make a great success. And she did.

Helen Warfield within a few months was receiving $100 a week and is now a prime movie favorite. She has seen the day when famous actors and actresses are proud to perform by photograph. She has a genius for interpreting humanity by expression, though she has no gift whatever for rendering it in speech. The plays selected for her are such as may be rendered in this way. She has acted the title role in some of the famous plays, but they are those in which the strength lies in the acting rather than the speech.

It is needless to add that Helen Warfield is making money, and feeding, clothing and educating her charges is a very simple matter. When she has acted her parts sufficiently to be photographed successfully in them her work is done, while her competitors on the stage are obliged to work on for every cent they receive.

A Motor Car Democracy

By F. M. HUGO

Although the illusion still exists in some quarters, that to possess a motor car or even a motorcycle is a sign of wealth, there is abundant evidence that there are hundreds of thousands of motorists whose means are very moderate. It is true that in the early days of automobilism there was no such thing as motoring for the comparatively poor man, as cars and summary costs were expensive and the pioneer work was naturally borne by comparatively rich men on the one hand and by some enthusiasts, by no means rich men, on the other. Their varied experiences and the tests they made over many millions of miles of running, however, helped to perfect and evolve that marvelous machine, the motor car, and everyone today, from the owner of a secondhand motorcycle to the owner of the most luxurious limousine, is benefiting from the labors and experience of these pioneers. Nowadays, there are motor vehicles to suit all purses and as the spread of automobilism amongst all classes has been wonderful, it may be interesting to trace the gradual stages by which the smallest and cheapest type of car was evolved.

Two or three years ago the side car in connection with the motorcycles began to be used and today nearly one-half of the motorcycles have this kind of attachment which can be used at will. This makes motorcycling, originally a lonesome pastime, much more attractive as congenial companionship is everything when touring. Those who do not realize how inexpensive motoring of this kind has become, wonder how the class to which many of these motorcyclists belong can afford to indulge in it. But a motorcycle with side car attachments or a good secondhand motorcycle can be purchased at a price which enables the man of very moderate means, who has never imagnied he would be able to afford motoring, to enjoy the pleasures of the open country.

But a further devolpment has taken place lately. A year or so ago, the light car came to the front and already they are being manufactured rapidly. The natural evolution of these vehicles has produced a large and inexpensive secondhand market for the older types and automobilism has in this way become democratized to a wonderful extent. The limousine is not quite so numerous on the road as compared with motorcycles and cars whose first initial cost musth ave been under $600. One effect of this is that the work of the local highway authorities and the appropriations towards making good roads is much more important to an inceasingly large number of persons than formerly. Moreover, the smaller vehicles feel the difference between a good and bad road much more acutely. The idea of automobiling being only a rich man's pastime and the old and wornout criticism that taxes are being raised from poor people to pay for roads for the rich has become absolutely untrue. Automobiling has thus become the pastime of nearly all classes, and in year sto come it is safe to prophesy that the number of individuals in this State possessing their own means of locomotion will probably run upwards to three hundred thousand.

There is another devolpment also which has led to the education of the public in automobilism. Nothing will do more to remove the prejudice and to convert the masses to the advantages of the motor vehicles than the success of the bues. In New York city and throughout the State the effect upon millions of its inhabitants may be imagined when it is remembered that hundreds of fthousands of people will this year be conveyed to and from their work and business. In connection with the popular use of the motor buses, there are springing up all over the country companies who make passenger transport at a cheap rate their object, as developed now in the so-called "jitney buses." It thus comes about that considered from a broad standpoint, automobilism is now resting on a securer basis than ever before, and any legislation which aimed at increasing restrictions or penalties would be opposed by a widespread and powerful public protest.

Sometime ago the various automobile organizations began to realize the importance of basing their influence on the support of all classes of motorists and different means have been adopted to bring membership full or partial within the reach of all persons. Moreover, there is also increasing evidence of the desire to cater for the non-rich motorists in hotels and garages all over the State and country and the spreading of automobilism to the non-rich classes has become one of the features of modern road locomotion.

THE CURSE OF BEING SATISFIED

God pity that city made of men and women satisfied with any given status! No citizenship should ever be satisfied. It matters not how splendid the present status may be, and enterprising citizenship is always planning for something better. A wide-awake citizenship never throws out an anchor. Persistent pushing onward and forward is their characteristic. Such a citizenship, behind a city with good natural potentialties, is bound to make that city a leader in the business world.

What makes a city great? Not merchandising alone, nor yet its industrial activities. It takes brains and energy and money to build up trade and manufactories. It is the men that make the city great.

If a city consumes or sells enough of any given commodity to warrent the establishment of a local industry to produce this commodity, is it not idiotic to go elsewhere to get that same commodity where it can be as easily made and bought here? What advantage is there of having a fertile industrial or commercial field, if we do not scientifically cultivate. The Chamber of Commerce in wide-awake cities studies these problems, and a little self-study is a capital cure for the curse of being self satisfied. It is well to be proud of your city, and who here is not proud of Fulton; but it is a very different thing to be self comlacent, and alas! how many of us under the ban of being self satisfied.—A. C. WILL CELEBRATE ONE HUNDREDTH BIRTHDAY OF PRINCE BISMARCK

Coincidence That Empire, on Centenary, Should Be Fighting to Perpetuate His Principles.

In Great Speech to Reichstag Famous German Statesmarr Defended Increased Military Armament.

ON April 1 will fall the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Otto von Bismarck - Schoenhausen, Prince and Duke of Lauenburg, and German societies and clubs all over the United States are preparing to celebrate the event. It is a striking instance of the coincidences of history that the Germany which Bismarck united in a great empire should on the centenary of his birth be fighting for the perpetuation of the principles of government which he held.

That Germany's international situation has changed but little during the last quarter of a century becomes evident when we glance back at Prince Bismarck's address to the reichstag, on Feb. 6, 1888—perhaps the most famous he ever delivered before that body—in which he proposed and defended an increase in the military armament of the German empire. In that address Bismarck said:

"The very strength which we are seeking to acquire through a legitimate preparation for the eventualities of war necessarily contributes to making us a peaceful people. That sounds paradoxical, and yet it is true. The military machine which we are seeking to develop is too powerful, too mighty a weapon to be heedlessly employed in a war of aggression.

"If we in Germany are to wage a successful war, a war in which we develop the full power of our national strength, it must be a war to which every one who participates and every one who makes sacrifices for it brings the conviction that it was unavoidable. It must be a war of the people, a war which can be carried on with the same unanimous enthusiasm that brought the war of 1870 to a successful issue.

"We cannot forego this advantage, even though it be assumed by many competent military observers, foreign as well as German, that we are superior to our opponents. Assuredly it is not the fear of the results of a war that has persuaded us to keep the peace. On the contrary, it is the consciousness of our strength, the consciousness that, even though we may be attacked at an unfavorable time, we will be strong enough to fight back and that we may well trust Providence to continue the blessings of peace.

Not Easily Frightened.

"We Germans are easily bribed, perhaps too easily, by friendship and good will, but we are certainly not accessible to the influence of threats. We Germans fear God, but naught else in the world, and it is our fear of God that teaches us to revere and conserve the peace. But whoever breaks that peace can rest assured that the patriotic fighting spirit which called the entire people of weak, worn out Prussia to the colors in 1813 is today the common property of the entire German nation. Whoever attacks the German nation will find it united and unanimous in the face of danger and will find every man in the ranks stepping forward firm in the belief that Providence is with him. * * *

"There is today no occasion, no excuse which would justify the irruption of one European power upon another's territory. I will go so far as to say that if, as the result of some untoward explosion, we should become involved in a war with France, a war with Russia would not inevitably follow, whereas if we should become involved in a war with Russia a war with France would be absolutely certain. No French administration would be strong enough to stop it even if it wanted to. * * *

"When I say that we must strive permanently to be prepared for all eventualities I mean to indicate that we must make greater efforts than any other power by reason of our unhappy geographical position. We are situated in the very center of Europe. We have on both three frontiers open to attack. Which has only its eastern frontier,

Russia its western, upon which it can be attacked. Moreover, we are more menaced by the danger of a hostile condition, a danger arising from historical developments, our geographical position and our lack of historic unity, than any other people. God has placed us in a situation in which our neighbors prevent us from falling into any state of lassitude or desuetude. He has placed alongside of us the most warlike and volatile nation, the French, and in Russia there have been developed warlike proclivities unknown to previous centuries. Thus we are being spurred on from two sides and are forced to undertake exertions which would certainly not arise from any spontaneous initiative. It is the pricks which we are feeling upon both flanks that oblige us to an effort which we would never undertake voluntarily. They force us to preserve a unity among ourselves that is at variance with the separatist tendencies of our inner natures. But since Providence has placed us in this position it is essential that we make ourselves safe against attack."

Reminiscence of Bismarck.

A French army surgeon named Czernicki in a supplement to the Gaulois gives a very interesting and pleasing reminiscence of Bismarck, placing the Iron Chancellor in an unaccustomed light. Dr. Czernicki had been left in charge of an ambulance at Resonville before the siege of Metz, and when Bazaine ordered the retreat of the Second corps d'armee into Metz on the night of August 16-17 the ambulance, with some 600 wounded, was left behind and found itself within the Prussian lines. On the morning of the 19th Dr. Czernicki was accosted by an officer, who informed him that the king of Prussia, with his suit, was in Resonville and that he would introduce him to Count Bismarck. The rest may be told in his own words:

"There on a stone bench, close to the door of a rustic cottage, at 7 in the morning was seated alone the celebrated Prussian minister at breakfast. He had spread a sheet of paper on his knees, upon which lay cold meat, sausages and bread. Beside him on the bench was a bottle, from which he was drinking. When he saw us he left off eating and, rising to his full height, saluted with a kindly laugh. The following conversation, which I wrote out the same evening in my notebook, then took place in French:

"'You are taking part, sir, in a terrible war for a start in your career,' he said. 'What a sight, what suffering! It is not you or these poor mutilated fellows that I should like to see here, but your senators and deputies. They would see what war is! Look at it! Have you many wounded?'

"In reply to his question, whether the Germans had also lost many, Bismarck said: 'Six times as many as in 1806. But do you believe, sir, and does the French army believe that it was I who wanted war?' Taking off his helmet, he went on: 'Look at me. I am threatened with an apoplectic stroke and was quietly going through a cure and never thought I should have to interrupt and change it for the life of the camp.'

Always Ready For War.

"Just then the chaplain of the ambulance, the Abbe Bolard, came up and asked, 'But, M. le Comte, if you did not want war what was the meaning of the Hohenzollern candidature?' to which Bismarck replied textually: 'Upon my word! Did anybody really swallow that? M. de Grammont is too refined a gentleman and too good a sportsman to be a good politician. That was invented to force on war. We were challenged, not to retreat any further. Already, four years ago, we had shown great patience in the Luxemburg affair, and you were less ready then than you are today. You only forget one thing, and that is that we are always ready for war, and that if we are forced to fight we carry on war in the severest sense. You have had proof of this.' And with a gesture of satisfaction he haughtily and coldly pointed to the battlefield, which had called forth his deep emotion.

"Here truth compels me to say," proceeds Dr. Czernicki, "that nothing can describe the solicitude and interest shown by the minister of war, without exception, to all. To each one he addressed some intimate and personal remark.

Battlefield Incident.

"Out of this long visit to the battlefield I will only tell one episode, which places Bismarck in a new light. Seated on some straw and propped up against a pillar of the church of Resonville was one of our poor soldiers, a quite young man named Rossignol. A shell, striking him like the lash of a whip, had carried away both eyes and the bridge of his nose, leaving the front of the skull bare. This fearful wound was covered with a dressing. He lay there calm, silent and motionless, in quiet resignation. Bismarck stopped in front of him and asked me what was his case. He seemed really touched. 'There is war for you, messieurs, the senators and deputies!' Then, turning to one of his suit, he said, 'Please bring me some wine and a glass.' He filled the glass to the brim, took a sip and then, gently tapping the shoulder of the poor martyr, said, 'My friend, will you not drink something?' Rousing himself from the deathlike stupor that was creeping over him, the man assented.

"We then saw Bismarck stoop and very softly and slowly give the wounded soldier the wine. Rising again, he drank what was left in the glass and said, 'What is your name, my boy, and where do you come from?' 'Rossignol, from Brittany.' The count then took his hand and said, 'I am Bismarck, my comrade, and I am very proud to have drunk out of the same glass as a brave man like you,' and, stretching his hand over the horribly mutilated head, he seemed to give him a mute benediction."

It only remains to add to this touching and pleasing anecdote that at the request of Dr. Czernicki the two Prussian ministers gave every facility for having the ambulance full of wounded transported into the French lines of Metz.

THE NEW STATE CONSTITUTION—1.

Is New York to Be a Short Ballot State?

In 1916 the voters of this state will go to the polls for the regular state election and will find on their ballots the names of candidates for Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, State Senator, Assemblyman—and that's all so far as the state ticket is concerned, for the Secretary of State, State Treasurer, Comptroller, Attorney-General and State Engineer and Surveyor will be appointive by the Governor under the new constitution and will be footballs of partisan politics no longer! And the state machines will lose their ancient and easy control over those minor offices and will no longer be able to make feeding troughs of patronage out of them except on those rare, though not unheard of occasions when they find a very weak man in the Governor's chair.

Governor Hughes Favored Short Ballot.

When Governor Hughes first proposed this shortening of the ballot in 1909 message, he said:

"There should be a reduction in the number of elective offices. The ends of democracy will be better attained to the extent that the attention of the voters may be focussed upon comparatively few offices, the incumbents of which can be held entirely accountable for administration. This will tend to promote efficiency in public office by increasing the effectiveness of the voter and by diminishing the opportunities of political manipulators who take advantage of the multiplicity of elective offices to perfect their schemes at the public expense. I am in favor of as few elective offices as may be consistent with proper accountability to the people and a Short Ballot.

"It would be an improvement, I believe, in State administration if the executive responsibility were centered in the Governor, who should appoint a cabinet of administrative heads accountable to him and charged with the duties now imposed upon elective state offices."

At that time many people at Albany and elsewhere received the idea with honest surprise. It seemed like taking power away from the people. It seemed undemocratic. It seemed to curtail the franchise. It seemed to confer too great power upon the Governor. (It would as a matter of fact add only 10% to his power and leave him still only one quarter as powerful as the Mayor of New York.) There was a good debate on the proposal in the Assembly that year but it hadn't a ghost of a show to pass and probably the people of the state wouldn't have stood for it then.

Party Leaders Convinced.

Yet now after only five years it has passed the Assembly by an overwhelming vote, its general principle has been approved by the Republican, Democratic and Progressive platforms, and under the leadership of men like Elihu Root, Henry L. Stimson, Jacob G. Shurman and Seth Low, it is expected to pass the Constitutional Convention rather easily! Governor Hughes was the only Governor in the country to preach Short Ballot in 1909, whereas fourteen Governors, including Governor Whitman, are demanding it this year.

Will the Short Ballot really take power away from the people?

That, after all, is still the real question. For no matter how much better it will be to have a single-headed instead of a six-headed administration, no matter how devious has been the history of these minor elective offices in the past, no matter how ineffective and inefficient the present system can be proved to be, the big point is—will the Short Ballot take power from the people?

Woodrow Wilson, who founded the Short Ballot movement and is President of the National Short Ballot Organization, says: "I believe the Short Ballot is the key to the whole question of the restoration of popular government in this country." Instead of taking power away from, it will restore power TO the people, in his estimation. Roosevelt and Taft make similar statements (which indicates, by the way, how wholly non-partisan the movement is!) The whole Short Ballot philosophy—and a rich and encouraging philosophy it is—is based on the contention that to have a multitude of little elective offices is not as democratic as it looks but on the contrary actually is undemocratic. Their slogan is "The long ballot is the politicians' ballot, the short Ballot is the people's ballot."

[This is the first of a series of nine articles prepared jointly by the Municipal Government Association, the County Government Association and the New York Short Ballot Organization on questions to come before the Constitutional Convention.]

CITIES WANT MANAGERS.

In Tucson, Ariz., the Republican ticket was pledged if elected to employ a city manager and to follow as far as the law allowed the general plan which goes with that office. Success attended the party, and C. K. Clark, a nonresident of the city and the state, was appointed to the position. Although the mayor and council retain the legal right to make appointments, they promise not to exercise it except upon recommendations of the city manager.

The charter commission of Ypsilanti, Mich., has reported a document which makes provision for a board or council of three members elected at large and a city manager having the usual powers. This charter will be voted upon on March 2.

WIRE NETTING ON PALACE.

Royal London Home Protected From Aerial Attack.

London.—The north wing of Buckingham palace is now being covered with a wire netting about twenty feet above the roof. This is the wing containing the living apartments of the royal family.

Additional anti-air craft guns have been placed in the neighborhood of the palace, one having been set up in the center of Green park in the last week.

If a Zeppelin should be seen hovering over the palace there are at least a half dozen guns which would open fire upon it.

Additional preparations are being made almost every day to fight air-ships over London.

While many of the art treasures in the museums have been removed to places of greater safety, there have been vigorous complaints in some newspapers that valuable pictures, sculptures or objects of art should still remain exposed to the possibility of aerial attack on the galleries.

WHO SWALLOWS DICTIONARY?

Question Disturbing Missouri Legislators—Have Already Lost Three.

Jefferson City, Mo.—The house discovered recently that it was struggling along without a dictionary when a resolution was introduced to buy a new one for use of members.

"I'd like to know what became of the big dictionary we bought two years ago?" Representative J. M. Bowers asked.

No member volunteered information.

"I'd like to know what became of the dictionary we had four years ago," Bowers persisted.

Silence.

"I'd like to know who took the dictionary we bought six years ago," he demanded.

More silence.

Whereupon the house bought another dictionary.

Albinos.

Albino is a term first applied by the Portuguese to the white negroes of West Africa and is now applied to any individual in whom there is congenital deficiency of pigment in skin, hair, iris and choroid of the eye. The skin is abnormally pale, the hair is white or pale flaxen, and the iris is pink. The absence of pigment in the iris renders an albino's eyes sensitive and partially blind in the sunlight. The chief predisposing cause is heredity. It may also be due to congenital arrest of development and is sometimes associated with other malformations, but it often occurs in persons who are otherwise normal. White mice, white rabbits, white elephants, etc., are albinos.

WHEN SORROW COMES.

Life no doubt is paved with enjoyments, but we must all expect times of anxiety, of suffering and of sorrow, and when these come it is an inestimable comfort to have some deep interest which will, at any rate, to some extent, enable us to escape from ourselves and keep us from brooding.—Sir John Lubbock.

N. L. Whitaker Advises Strong Central Organization Having for its Main Object Not Only the Commercial, But the Civic Advancement of Fulton.

All Civic Bodies Will Be Strengthened by Development of Fulton Chamber of Commerce.

During this week luncheons have been held at the Clark Hotel to prepare for the work of building up a strong Chamber of Commerce. This work will be started in earnest on Monday, and when it is through, this city will have a strong central organization representative of the entire citizenship.

It will have three hundred or more members, paying annual dues of $25, enabling it to accomplish the work that lack of funds has hitherto prevented.

It will take effective action upon matters for the good of Fulton. It will take up matters that have heretofore gone by the board. It will work for the best interests of the city in every way.

The Chamber of Commerce is going to organize, and Fulton is going to organize with it.

It will have a general committee, consisting of the heads of all committees. There will be an industrial committee, traffic committee, legislative committee, farm development committee, publicity committee, retail affairs and municipal affairs committee.

During next week luncheons will be held each noon at Hotel Clark. Lunch will be served promptly at 12:15, and the luncheon each day will end at 1:30 sharp. Team workers and business and professional men and women interested in community development will be welcome.

The week's luncheons at Hotel Clark will be addressed by Lucius E. Wilson, formerly secretary of the Detroit Board of Commerce and the Greater Des Moines Committee, former president of the American Association of Commercial Executives, and at present Campaign Director of the American City Bureau. Mr. Wilson came into national prominence last year as advisor to John H. Patterson and the men of Dayton who gave the city-manager form of government to that city.

IMPORTANT MEMBERSHIP COMMITTEE

Each day sees additional names added to the list of business and professional men who have offered to take part in the movement and have asked to have work assigned to them.

What this movement means and what can be done for the city is set forth by N. L. Whitaker, chairman of the general organization committee, as follows:

The greatest asset of a city is a strong central organization having for its main object not only the commercial, but the civic advancement of the commuunity.

"Fulton has had for a number of years several active and effective civic and commercial bodies. These will be strenghthened by the increase in strength of the Chamber of Commerce. Before the end of next week the city will be able to boast of a strong, virile, efficient organization, insistent and persistent for the advancement and welfare of the community in all of its relations, civic, commercial and industrial.

"Nor will the activities of the Chamber be confined exclusively to Fulton. Although designed primarily for that purpose, it will interest itself in all matters that make for the upbuilding and progress, not only of the surrounding country, but of the States itself, thus fulfilling in the broadest extent, the purposes and objects for which it organized.

"The Chamber of Commerce is conducting a campaign for membership at this time, and every merchant and business man, every citizen interested in civic betterment who is not now a member, should embrace this opportunity to give his personal support to the splendid work that Chamber is conducting.

"'A careful canvass of the situation indicates that at least 300 corporations, firms, or individuals are eligible for membership in the Chamber, and should be identified with the organization.

"'With this membership, considering the importance of the work which will be conducted, the Chamber will wield a great influence for the good of the community. There is no work for the betterment of Fulton and the advancement of its interests, that the Chamber will not undertake.

"It is obvious, therefore, that every merchant, manufacturer, professional man and property owner in Fulton should be interested in the Chamber of Commerce, for there is not a person engaged in business here, there is hardly a citizen, whose interest in not affected beneficially at some angle of its work.

"Such an organization merits active support, and the best way to accord that support is through membership. It is the duty of every person having the welfare of Fulton at heart to become a member of the Chamber, thus furthering the work that means so much to the prosperity and advancement of the community."

Mr. J. H. Braddock, executive secretary of the American Gity Bureau, is confident of the success of the movement.

"The Chamber of Commerce," he said yesterday afternoon, "is entering upon a campaign that will largely determine the effectiveness of the organization for the good of the city. There is no doubt about the success of the quest for members, the indications being that at least 300 men will join the reorganized body and lend to it the support of their efforts in the fight for a better known Fulton.

"But not too much must be taken for granted. Business men and professional men must get into the Chamber, and they must not be satisfied when they have paid their dues, and their names have been enrolled."

"That is but the start. The work is then to be done, and while a competent secretary engineers the activities of the body, the men who compose it must do their share. Then we may see the Chamber of Commerce a power for good in the community, not alone a power for commercial good, but civic good, for the good of the citizen as well as for the good of Fulton."

As Mr. E. J. Penfield recently expressed it:

"People are becoming very much more sensible to the ugly side of citizenship shown by those who, while willing to accept and profit by the growth and wealth promoted and created by their enterprising, public spirited and open-pursed neighbors, yet themselves refuse to contribute a cent to help in the cause. Such men are parasites, hiding away the profits brought to them by other men's labor and industry, and themseives stolidly refusing to aid either with their brains, their time or their means in producing the general wealth in which they expect to share."

"Fulton has few such citizens. We do not lack men. We lack chiefly leadership and a program of work. This will be furnished by the new Chamber of Commerce.

"The Chamber of Commerce is the agency through which every citizen has an opportunity to show his loyalty to Fulton and his public spirited interest in its growth.

"The Chamber has begun a campaign to enlist persons and business concerns to become members. The campaign means greater things for Fulton, and this in turn means greater things for every business man, professional man, and manufacturer in the community. No citizen who can afford to be a member, has a right to remain out and from the present indications I believe that by the end of this week not many of these citizens will be absent from our membership roll."

Lucius Wilson Talks About the Best Investments

Even a skilful manufacturer cannot create his product out of "nothing." Labor and materials must come from some source. The materials may be shipped from long distances—but the labor has to be supplied by the home town. Every successful manufacturer will concede that the character of the labor supply is a tremendous element in determining quality and volume of output. Makers of shoes owe much to Brockton, Mass., because she has housed and nursed their workmen. Grand Rapids holds her furniture makers in the same debt because she has developed skillful and efficient artisians. Other cities offer housing facilities, and educational advantages and attractive entertainment to workmen. In short, although the manufacturer may pay the wages, it is the city that makes it possible for the workmen to buy happiness and contentment with the contents of the pay-envelope.

No scheme of welfare work on the part of the manufacturer can supplant the co-operation of the entire city. It is impossible for any one man to see the needs, the troubles, the ambitions, the sentiments, the impulse and the joys of a thousand or even a hundred employes. Welfare work may be ever so excellent, but it will become infinitely more effective if the outside city is intelligently attempting to make the factory employe a citizen in the fullness of the world. The average man is so thoroughly human that impulse governs him more frequently than logic. He aspires to own a home when he sees his brother man getting happiness by that means. He buys a motorcycle because one of his fellows whirls past him on the street morning and night. He educates his children because the whole community seems to set store by school training. He may attend church, if his acquaintances make that more attractive. The unconscious influence of the community determines the limitations, the efficiency, the habits and the ideals of men. And the community ought to recognize its responsibility.

Is it not worth something to the manufacturer to have the community to intelligently supply that leadership which steadily moves right, stability, individual improvement?

If the manufacturer still feels that he should take no part in the establishment of a Chamber of Commerce, ask him this question, "How is vocational training (shop training) to be put into the city schools unless you have the co-operation of the rest of the city?" The taxpayer will not assume an additional school-burden if you hold yourself entirely aloof from their plans. This affair of living in a modern city is a "give-and-take proposition."

When you hang out the sign "Men Wanted" you have to take the sort the city offers.

To sum up: It is worth your while, Mr. Manufacturer, to have an organization in Fulton that will bring the active, thinking men together to lay definite plans for better schools, for trade extension, for public markets, for more efficient government, for improved transportation and for wiser citizenship. You are a part of the city—you will find that its enterprise helps you and its limitations harm you. If, by joining the Chamber of Commerce, you can induce the retailer and the lawyer to join in making better schools for your workmen, or cleaner entertainments for your children or a safer community for your property, the dues you pay to the Chamber of Commerce will be the best investment you have ever made.

LUCIUS E. WILSON.

Keystone State Town as Example of What Chamber Commerce Activity Will Do.

R. C. Stoddard, secretary of the American City Bureau, arrived yesterday in the city. He is fresh from Huntingdon, Pa., where a program similar in nature to the one in blast here was instituted by the American City Bureau.

Mr. Stoddard says:

"On Monday of this week, I left Huntingdon, Pa. Last week we completed a campaign there. I can think of no better illustration of the things that are possible in Fulton.

"Huntingdon is a smaller city than Fulton. Its population is slightly under 7,000.

"Still the Huntingdon Chamber of Commerce has today a membership of nearly 300 at $25 a year, and the enthusiastic moral support of the entire community.

"When the campaign was started in Huntingdon, there was no lack of false prophets to predict the certain failure of the undertaking. Even the group of men who initiated the movement and were most sincerely interested in its success felt that conditions there were peculiarly difficult. These men were patriotic broadminded citizens. They had faith in themselves and their community, but they told us "there were so many knockers."

"As a matter of act their situation was unusually good. The city had strong industrial advantages—no better, however, than Fulton possesses. The calibre of its citizensis unusually high—although I know from my associates that Huntingdon holds no more public spirited, large minded men than does Fulton.

"These men simply did not know their own strength. Organized community action had never been attempted before in a genuinely big way.

"In fact one of the city's leading business men, the cashier and a director in one of the banks, "proved" to us by our own figures that it would be absolutely impossible to secure more than 125 members. This man is now one of the Chamber's most enthusiastic supporters.

"The Huntingdon Chamber of Commerce represents the entire community. Its membership includes lawyers, doctors, merchants, manufacturers, teachers, ministers and others. It is not the property of any small clique. It does not represent the interests of any particular class. The same sort of an organization is going to be developed in Fulton.

"The men who were doing the "knocking" in Huntingdon are still living there, but they are not talking. Many of them are now enrolled in the Chamber.

"Things move along so rapidly nowadays that men who say it can't be done are always being interrupted by somebody doing it."

PETE, COME, COME

A lazy boy lay sleeping late
One beautiful spring morn.
And in an apple tree close by
A robin redbreast's horn
Kept blowing—
"Pete, come, come."

The sun was shining through the pane;
The boy slept sweetly on;
But still, that robin redbreast chirped
He didn't sing for fun,
His song—
Pete, come, come.

'Twas breakfast time, the food was spread,
And Pete was hupgry too;
But still he slept; that lazy boy
Could find naught else to do.
But hark—
"Augh, Pete; come, come."

Pete's eyes stayed closed, his bed was soft,
His sheets were clean and sweet.
And then, at last he heard that sound,
The robin's call—"Tweet, tweet,
Come on—
"Augh, Pete; come, come"

Pete moved himself, and raised to see
From whence that call had come.
And from that apple bough close by
The robin called again—
"Get up—
"Come, Pete; get up."

"It's luncheon time and at the Clark
A place is spread for you.
So, Pete, get up and stir yourself,
And show what you can do
Wake up—
Oh, Pete, wake up."

Don't say, "There's nothing I can do."
You don't know 'till you try.
Go in to win, and you may be
The Mayor by and by.
"Wake up,
Oh, Pete; wake up."

ELKS TOLD THERE MAY BE "DOG IN MANGER"

Fulton's Lodge of Elks received boosting Thursday night at the hands of Lucius Wilson and J. H. Braddock, when these two representatives of the American City Bureau partook of the hospitality of the lodge.

Many prominent members took advantage of the opportunity to express their views on city boosting, which seemed to be of a historical character, reciting the indifference of the Chamber of Commerce in years gone by to the opportunities so often presented to bring to Fulton severeal big industries which are now thriving elsewhere. One of the speakers said that the Chamber of Commerce would not get his $25 until he and a good many other men were convinced that the "dog in the manger" spirit displayed by manufacturers who at one time controlled the Chamber had been entirely eradicated from the present movement, to be supplanted by a more honest public spirit. These remarks were vigorously applauded.

Venizelos Says Greece Must Change Policy and Join the Allies

Reaches Belgian Frontier That Soldiers Are Sent to Rear for Trial by Court Martial for Failure to Join in Counter Attacks

London, March 15.—The Morning Post in a dispatch from Athens says:—

"In an interview published in an evening newspaper, Mr. Venizelos states he is convinced the new Cabinet will very soon be forced to abandon its neutrality policy and participate with the Allies in the operations against Constantinople and Smyrna.

"'The new government must,' he said, 'before it is too late, adopt this policy. I doubled the area of Greece. Mr. Gounnaris can now quadruple it.'"

"Asked about the danger from Bulgaria, Mr. Venezelos stated that the events of the last week at Sofia prove that once Greece joins the Allies, Bulgaria will be forced to follow her example."

GERMANS DEMORLIZED BY BRITISH ONSLAUGHTS

On the Belgian Frontier.—The sudden offensive of the Allies from Champagne to the sea resulting in gains at many points, seems to have taken the Germans wholly by surprise.

A convincing indication of a partial or temporary demoralization of the troops which bore the brunt of these five days of successive onslaughts is the arrival at Ghent and Brussels for trial by courtmartial of parties of soldiers sent under escort from the trenches for having failed to respond to the order to make counter attacks with sufficient enthusiasm. In some cases, it is said, they even failed to advance at all.

Great havoc was caused by the accurate fire of the British artillery, which apparently was the prime factor in the paralyzation of the Germans.

All the accounts of the week's fighting filtering through the frontier from German sources chiefly are from the wounded and lay stress on the terrible accuracy of the British shells, which made some of the positions wholly untenable.

AERIAL ARM CREDITED WITH BRITISH SUCCESSES

James Dunn telegraphs to the Daily Mail from Rotterdam:

"The British success at Neuve Chapelle and Epinette was due largely to the wonderful work of the allied aeroplanes. Not a German gun was laid, not a body of troops moved without being detected by the eyes of the British army.

"German officers in Bruges admit their air service is hopelessly outclassed in numbers, daring and intelligence by the Allies. From the sea to Ypres the sky is swept by aeroplanes practically every day, the British and French airmen competing in feats of skill and daring while the German no longer face duels in the air, past contests having proved disastrous."

STEAMER ABANDONED AFTER BEING STRUCK

Liverpool, via London, March 15.—The crew of the British steamship Florazan, which was torpedoed at the mouth of the Bristol Channel on March 11, arrived at Liverpool today. The men say their cargo of cotton had been discharged at Havre and the steamship was crossing the Channel to England. No submarines had been seen.

On Thursday night, while the men of the crew were playing cards a terrific explosion occurred, throwing the men all about the ship. Two boats had been made ready for launching and were lowered and the captain and all the crew, except one man who is supposed to have been drowned in the stokehold, got in them. It was first thought that the Florazan would turn turtle, but the vessel righted herself. The ship's boats were picked up by a trawler an hour after the explosion. The Florazan was then on fire, according to the men, and it is believed there was no hope of saving her.

According to the officers of the steamship Whateley Hall, the Florazan was still afloat on Friday evening. The Whateley Hall sighted the Florazan off Bristol Channel. She was being towed by four trawlers, while two trawlers guided her astern. The Florazan was well down by the head and her superstructure had disappeared. It was said there had been a fire on board, according to the officers.

A TAUBE DROP BEACHEY'S LAST

Air Pressure Crumples Monoplane's Wings as Airman Tries to Resume Glide

Lincoln Beachey, noted as an aviator the world over and perhaps the greatest rival of the Frenchman, Pegoud, in the execution of hair-raising aerial feats, fell to his death in San Francisco yesterday in the new German Taube monoplane in which he had been attempting to duplicate the spectacular performances of which, in the biplane, he was the acknowledged master.

The fatal drop was made from a height of 3,000 feet at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, and was witnessed by a crowd of 50,000 people. The Taube, with Beachey, fell into San Francisco Bay. The machine, with the body of the ill-fated aeroplanist still strapped in the aluminium body of the Taube, was recovered two hours later.

Hillary Beachey, a brother of the aviator, witnessed the tragedy. He was standing on the deck of the transport Crook watching the flight. He said he heard a crackling sound like the breaking of a ship's mast. He cried out as the monoplane began to plunge toward the bay. It fell only a few feet away from the transport.

The young airman—he was 31—was completing his second flight of the day. Having previously electrified the crowd with a series of aerial somersaults, the airman sought to add an additional thrill by making one of the sensational perpendicular drops which usually featured his flights.

The fatal fall was attributed to the fact that Beachey intrusted his life for the first time in several years—to a monoplane. An exceptionally large crowd had been attracted to the fair grounds to see whether he would attempt the same breath-taking stunts in the new machine that he had performed in his biplane.

On the first flight all went well, and the aviator's familiar tricks were indulged in with the exception of the perpendicular drop. This Beachey had saved for the climax. It proved too much of a strain for the frame of the monoplane.

The machine was at an altitude of about 3,000 feet when Beachey shut off his power. For a great distance it dropped head on. Then the aviator grasped his control levers to adjust the planes for the graceful descent which had characterize his previous flights. Almost at that moment the wings crumpled, and the aeroplane, turning over and over in its fall, plunged into the bay.

MERRY MAKING ON WEDNESDAY

The St. Patrick's ball to be given by the local lodge, B. P. O. E., on Wednesday night promises to be a successful affair. Those who attended the charity ball have not forgotten the good time provided by the royal entertainers.

The decorations used will be in keeping with the color of the day and the music will consist of the popular old time Irish melodies. The Elks orchestra, which furnished the music at the charity ball, will again be enjoyed by the dancers. Old time steps figure on the program with those of modern invention.

WEATHER FORECAST

79 NEW MEMBERS ENROLLED IN CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

GERMAN SHIP MAY BE HELD

Ruse May Develop That Will Retain Prinz Eitel for Repairs Beyond Limits

Washington, March 15.—That the Germans will ask a much longer time to make repairs to the auxiliary cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich than will be allowed by the United States government, so that interment at Newport News may be accomplished without discredit to the bravery of Captain Thierichens, who commanded the vessel in her raids on merchantmen, is a view privately expressed in well informed circles here yesterday.

Officials have received no word in reply to the request sent through Mr. Norman R. Hamilton, Collector of Customs at Newport News, for a definite statement of the time required for making the repairs necessary to put the cruiser in seaworthy condition. The opinion was suggested that the statement of the time de sired might come through the German Embassy here rather than from the cruiser's commander to Mr. Hamilton. Decision on the time to be allowed will not be made until the report of the naval board assigned to make a survey of the ship is received. This board will complete its work tomorrow, when an inspection of the boilers will be made at one of the piers of the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry [redacted] where the vessel [redacted]

Opinion is general[redacted] board will report that [redacted] quickly can be put in a seaworthy condition. The naval board's figures undoubtedly will be accepted by the State Department, which has the question to determine. The decision will eb kept secret, on the grounds that its publication would be of assistance to the enemy, in violation of the neutrality of this government.

NO CRISIS, SAYS MALONE

Collector Issues a Statement on Neutrality Situation.

New York, March 15.—Collector of the Port Malone issued this statement yesterday:

"It is true that I had a conference with the President Thursday night at his request on a department matter which was not then and is not now of moment. I did not, as stated, represent to the President that the neutrality situation in this port was critical. I do not know of any critical situation in the port of New York, and moreover, there is no critical situation in the port of New York.

"I have not received any orders from the Treasury Department to refuse clearance papers to any ship of any nationality if I am satisfied that her sworn manifest sets forth accurately the contents of her cargo and her actual port of destination."

CENTRAL UNION BACKS LYNCH

Opposes Abolishing of Labor Commissioner's Post.

New York, March 15.—The Central Federated Union indorsed yesterday the resolutions adopted by the executive council of the New York State Federation of Labor opposing the abolishing of the office of State Labor Commissioner. This puts 700,000 trades unionists in this State on record as being in favor of the retention of Commissioner James M. Lynch.

Ernest Bohm, secretary, was instructed to notify all members of the Legislature of the union's action. One paragraph of the resolutions is as follows:

"Only sinister motives can prompt this projected transfer of the administration of the Department of Labor to any other branch of the State government. No valid reason can be assigned for the change. It simply means the injection of petty politics into an office created for the benefit of the wage earning masses."

To the Men and Women of Fulton

I am glad that I was born in Fulton. To me it has no equal and I have great faith in its future. I believe that NOW is the opportune time to do something WORTH WHILE for Fulton.

The new organization about to be formed to succeed the old Chamber of Commerce is entitled to and should have the loyal support of every good citizen. It should have three hundred members to do efficient work, but the larger the membership the greater the results. Now, let us lay aside all our petty jealousies, and get together for the success of this movement. Let it be a REAL GET TOGETHER to boost the membership to three hundred. IT CAN BE DONE.

Shares in the Fulton of the future are selling at $25.00 each. How many will you take? No business or professional man or woman can afford not to take at least one membership. Neither can anyone afford to miss one of Mr. Wilson's talks.

Now then, ALTOGETHER for a BETTER and BIGGER FULTON.

JESSE A. MORRILL

Fulton Ranks Second In U. S. of Cities Under 50,000 In Point of First Day's Enrollment of Commerce

Seventy-nine enrolled members was the report of the membership committee at the noonday lunch at Hotel Clark today. A huge scoreboard placed in the dining room received the announcements when made by the captains of the ten teams. This significant slogan, was placed in large letters above the space for the reports: "Nowadays, people who say 'It can't be done,' are always interrupted by somebody doing it."

Dr. Charles Robertson acted as chairman and called upon the captains of the teams who had been working since 10:30 this morning. The report was as follows:

Harold Bristol, 7 memberships; Irving Galusha, 2 memberships; L. G. Adams, 3 memberships; David Lipsky, 9 memberships; Louis Emerick, 5 memberships; Willis M orin, 10 memberships; Jesse A. Morrill, 14 memberships; N. L. Whitaker reporting for John W. Stevenson, 29 memberships. The total being [redacted] memberships.

Nearly all captains stated real activity had not yet begun by their individual teams.

Mr. Wilson announced the result of the work thus far as being ahead of the average city where such campaigns have been carried on. In fact, Fulton ranks [redacted]ond in place with the first big towns in this work. Fulton has three times as many members enrolled as Glenns Falls had on its corresponding day of campaign work.

"The thing as it stands today is a success," said Mr. Wilson. "I want you to catch the big idea. Tomorrow will be blue Tuesday, and somebody will be quite apt to whisper to me, 'this can't be done,' but today this is an assured success."

The seventy-nine enrolled members, Mr. Wilson pointed out, are of greater value than eight hundred ninety-two members enrolled at $2.

N. L. Whitaker, in making the report had asked, "What will the Chamber of Commerce do for the receivers of freight for manufactuerers and Mrr. Wilson replied briefly, that for a relatively small outlay a department could be arranged for that would check for the manufacturers express accounts and collect overcharges and damages.

"The regulation of freight rates in and out of town should not be attempted," said Mr. Wilson.

When asked in regard to contributions for charity, program advertising, etc., Mr. Wilson stated this could be managed by a department in the Chamber to which all charity appeals would come. Program advertising he pointed out, cannot give the advertiser more than a small fraction of his contribution.

South Bend was cited as a place where the charity problem had been handled by a department of the Chamber. Two hundred persons previous to the plan had contributed annually in the charity work of the city. Afterwards two thousand nine hundred persons contributed, thus taking the burden from the backs of the few and placing it on the body politic and making the entire community more responsive.

Opinions

The Little Fish

Hamilton Fish, jr., has written a letter in which he says that Speaker Sweet has stacked the excise committee against the local option bill. Mr. Fish knows that this charge is false. Speaker Sweet put him on the excise committee and he voted for the local option bill last year. Everybody in Albany knows the reason Fish wants to get off from the committee and that is because part of his district is "wet" and part of his district is dry. He voted for the local option bill last year and the "wets" in his district made it so hot for him that he did not want to be on the committee this year and tried to decline serving on the committee but Speaker Sweet would not accept his declination. If the Speaker had released him from duty on the committee then the advocates of the local option bill would say that Speaker Sweet took Fish off from the committee because he voted for the local option bill last year. Fish is the only Bull Mooser in the State Legislature. He is a young man who has inherited a name and that is about all. The only reason that he wants to get from the excise committee is because he is in an embarrassing position at home and he wants to shirk his duty as a member of the committee and Speaker Sweet will not allow him to do so. This is the secret of his animosity to the Speaker and his motive for making the false charge which is now being circulated but the public generally will pay no attention to this Little Fish.—Republican, Lyons.

A Drastic Move

He must needs go that the devil drives, an old saying declares.

England is finding the truth of this. Without a single opposition vote the English Parliament has given to the government the authority to take over the control of the engineering force of the country and to place it under combined management for the purpose of increasing the supply of munitions of war. By this vote the control of all factories capable of being used for such purpose is given into the hands of the government, and while it is admitted to be the most drastic measure laid before an English Parliament in more than a century and a half, there was not a vote against it, nor a single voice raised in any form of objection.

Labor disputes and the occurrence of several strikes have interfered with the output of munitions of war, and the supply has been diminished. Warning was given some days ago that unless these might be composed it might be necessary for the government to adopt measures that would prevent the stoppage of all establishments in which the manufacture of ammunition and all the various war supplies are carried on. It was shown that the English laborers were losing a great deal of time and that efficiency was impaired in very many instances through large bodies of workmen frequenting public houses and spending their time over their cups or through insisting upon half-holidays, certain hours of labor, and other disturbing influences. Appeal was made to the patriotism of these great bodies of organized labor, but the strikes were not settled, men did not return to work in such numbers as might be expected and the disturbing influences continued.

The increasing size of the army and navy, the extension of the war area, and the coming of spring which will see greatly enlarged operations all over Europe, rapidly multiplies the demand for ammunition, and the government is convinced that it cannot safely depend upon the efforts of firms and individuals who are engaged in the production of these supplies. In the Dardanelles(where bombardment will probably have to be continued for weeks, an immense supply of ammunition is being used, and the guns which are hammering at the Turkish forts will soon have to be supplanted by new ones, or will have to be overhauled. The tremendous strain upon such armament soon renders it unfit.

In this emergency, England finds herself compelled to virtually seize private property, organize a bureau, make of private workmen public servants and compel the increase in production which she has a right to expect and which she must have if she would preserve her nation from destruction. It is contrary to her practice and teachings, suspends for the time the boasted liberty of private enterprise in English lands, and sets at naught many of the privileges which individuals have supposed were asured to them beyond assault.

But "he must needs go whom the devil drives," and when the present state of affairs fails to respond to the demands, the government would be remiss indeed in its high function did it not lay a heavy and firm hand on the weak spot. Germany has not hesitated to do this, for the government of that country not only controls and directs the manufacture of armament and munitions of war, but it has taken into its hands the absolute control of the food supply, and all private enterprise is suborned to the wishes and requirements of the government. However, that is a condition to be expected in a monarchy, and while there is no thought of objection or question as to this state of things in that country, there will be resentment on the part of English workmen, who have been accustomed to stand upon their "rights" with a persistency and freedom that has finally brought them into contempt and has made necessary such a drastic measure as has here been described.—Observer, Utica.

ECONOMICS AND CIVICS

(A. C. B.)

Time was when the Chamber of Commerce was organized solely as a promoter of trade and commerce, of industry and transportation. That time has past. The close interrelation between economic and civic conditions, between business and government, between labor and life has come to a fuller recognition. The modern Chamber of Commerce is both commercial and civic in character.

It is no glittering generality to say that a better city in which to live is usually a more prosperous city in which to do business. Health and happiness have a strange way of slipping into a man's pay envelope, and the more there is in the pay envelope the better he can house his family, feed his children, educate them and take recreation himself. These are plainly the factors making for health and happiness. They go hand in hand.

The American city thrives on trade. A thriving city enjoys better living, better education, better pleasures than one that is stagnant. On the other hand, a clean and well administered city is more apt to thrive than one which is rotting and badly governed. Economics and civics, civics and economics, both are closely interwoven in the life of the modern community.

It is, therefore, the duty of the Chamber of Commerce to further in every possible, legitimate way the social and the material progress of the city. Their experience, since fortunately we can learn by experience, can be employed in solving the specific problems, both economic and civic, that must be correctly solved for the future development of Fulton.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

By Frederic T. Cardoze

Albany, March 15.—Modern methods of communication during the busiest hours of the present legislative session are frequently utilized by Speaker Theddeus C. Sweet and Harold J. Hinman, majority leader of the Assembly.

For the first time in the history of New York State legislation the speaker and the majority leader can become in close touch without leaving their seats through the medium of a telephone line which is attached to the desk of the speaker and the seat of the floor leader of the Republican members of Assembly. Each day while the session is in progress up will go the telephone to the ear of Speaker Sweet and at the same instant it will be noticed that Leader Hinman has his receiver and transmitter within the firm grasp of his hand.

The telephone system which is solely for the convenience of the speaker and Assemblyman Hinman are the most modern of telephone devices. A conversation carried on in almost a whisper can be plainly heard by the party on either end. It is thus possible for the two pilots of the majority party in the Assembly to decide at a moment's notice upon a matter of party policy without leaving their seats and none is the wiser.

Assemblyman A. E. Smith, leader of the Democratic Assemblymen also has a private telephone attached to his desk, but he does not use the instrument as frequently as does Assemblyman Hinman.

The private telephone connections which have been placed in the Assembly Chamber for the speaker and the two party leaders are far from being confined in the scope of their possibilities to the Assembly Chamber. By calling a number it is possible for Speaker Sweet and Assemblymen Hinman and Smith to talk long distances.

During past sessions the most frequent interruptions which the Speaker and the floor leaders have had to contend with were requests from the pages to leave their seats in order to answer telephone calls. Frequently important messages were never delivered because of the fact that the summons to the public telephone had come at a time when an important debate was in progress or when a bill was up for final passage, necessitating the presence of both the leaders to marshal their forces. At such times as these the speaker also would be busy passing upon points of order and recognizing the members desiring to be heard.

There are no telephone connections linking the desk of the Lieutenant-governor with the leaders of the majority and minority of the Senate. Possibly the need is as great, yet the Senate Chamber is considerably smaller than the Assembly Chamber and it is but a step from the rendezvous of the Senators to the telephone booths. On the Assembly side the public telephone is in the rear corridor of the Capitol and at least fifty yards away from the speaker's desk and from the seats of the majority and minority leaders.

The State takes good care of the members of both houses as regards telephone facilities. Several booths set aside especially for their use are available at all times and there is no toll charge.

PASSED EIGHTY-SECOND MILESTONE OF LIFE

Mrs. Luvency Carner, mother of merchant George L. Carner of Cayuga st., celebrated her 82d year last Friday. The event was observed at the son's home in W. 1st st., and was enjoyed by many old time and some young relatives and friends. Mrs. Carner's eldest guest was Mrs. Charlotte Highriter, 89, who quite recently enjoyed the felicitations of her friends. These two old ladies enjoyed in full measure recounting events in their lives during the 80 years and more they have lived, and when 6 o'clock arrived they were not too tired to feel a desire for the dainty luncheon prepared by Mrs. George L. Carner. At the conclusion of the supper hour the guests pledged a repetition in one year of this latest happy event.

PRUNING DEMONSTRATIONS

A series of demonstrations has been arranged throughout the county for pruning fruit trees. Special attention is to be given to small orchards where apples are grown for home use. There are many trees on the general and dairy farms throughout the county that could be made to yield good crops with a little care.

B. Johnson of Oswego, who has had a lifelong experience with the pruning and care of orchards, will assist the manager in giving these demonstrations.

Meetings will be held as follows:

Friday, Friday, March 19th—I. G. Burr, Central Square, 10 a.m.; H. E. Myers, Bernhards Bay, 2:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 23d—Ernest Arnold, Bowen's Corners, 10 a.m.; William Austic, South Granby, 2.30 p.m.

WILLIAM NACEY GETS OSWEGO POSTMASTERSHIP

President Wilson anounced Saturday the appointment of William Nacey as postmaster of Oswego. This is a recess appointment and will be held subject to confirmation by the U. S. Senate in Dec., 1915. Mr. Nacey had almost the unanimous endorsement of the Democratic county committee and the backing of the county chairman and State Committeeman, but, owing to the fight made against him by Judge Bulger he failed of confirmation before the Senate adjourned on March 4. U. S. Senator James A. O'Gorman after hearing the appeals of William J. Hartnett, Democratic County leader, approved of the application of Nacey, but the matter was held up by the P. O. Department pending further investigation, thus delaying the Senate Confirmation until the fall.

WOMEN NEED THE VOTE

Taxation Without It Is Tyranny, Declares President of New York State Women Suffrage Association

The great changes that have come to the position of women in New York State may be called "Results without suffrage," but they could not be called "results without suffragists,' for they would never have been possible without suffragists and their untiring work.

When you ask "Will the suffragists of the State tell why their votes are needed?" you are asking of women something that has never been asked of men. Since our Government was formed the franchise has been extended to several large bodies of men; first, to the aliens and their descendants, then to the laboring men by removing property qualifications, then to the negroes, the Indians, and now the President is trying to give it to the Filipinos. In not a single instance have they ever been asked to prove that the vote was needed. In most cases they did not ask for the vote, and no one asked them if they would use it well or ill,or even if they would use it at all. Men have never been asked if they would make good laws if they were allowed to vote, or if they would make good fathers and still be attractive to women when they vote.

They vote because our Government is supposed to be a representative Government, based on the consent of the governed, and the consent of the governed is given only through the ballot box. No man in New York State has ever had to fight for his enfranchisement. The principle of representative government was fought for by our common ancestors, and should include women as well as men. That it did not, at the time our Government was founded, was because at that time woman was the chattel of man; her property, her children, her person were his; he was responsible for her acts, even if she committed a crime.

These disabilities have been removed. For over sixty years suffragists have labored with our Legislature to secure legal, civil, and social rights for women. Women are now educated; they control their own property; they are taxed as men are taxed; they are held responsible to the law just as men are; but they are still forbidden representation, forbidden any voice in making the law which they have to obey. To quote Gilbert E. Roe:

> The right to make contracts, to own property, and to conduct business carry with them as a necessary conclusion that women must also have the suffrage. You cannot admit that woman has the right to make contracts, own property, and conduct business, and then exclude her from the right to determine how that business shsould be conducted, how the contracts shall be made, and how the property may be disposed of.

That women, like every other class, can protect their own particular interests better than it can be done for them is proved if a fair comparison of equal suffrage with male suffrage States is made. It is obviously unfair to compare the best woman suffrage State with the worst male suffrage State, or vice versa; the only fair comparison is by averages. Have women averaged better for themselves than men have for them. The Times comparisons were made without reference to this fact.

For example, it cited Wyoming, a woman suffrage State, as having no equal guardianship law; neither has Idaho, but it is in force in all the woman suffrage States except Idaho and Wyoming; that is, in 8 of the 10 woman suffrage States. (I omit Nevada and Montana, because they have not had a session of the Legislature since suffrage was granted). Only 9 of the 38 male suffrage States have this law. The Times gave the credit of the passage of this law in 1893 in New York State to Mrs. George W. Townsend of Buffalo, but it did not mention that Susan Anthony, Elizabeth C. Stanton, and others worked with the Legislature for ten years, getting thousands of petitions for this law, and succeeded in getting it passed in 1860—only to have it repealed by the Legislature while the women were working for the soldiers during the Civil war. It took thirty years longer to put it back on the statute book.

The age of consent is 18 in every woman suffrage State, with the exception of Arizona, where it is 17, and Oregon, where it is 16—that is, in 8 of 10 woman suffrage States. In most male suffrage States it is 16; in 2 it is 15; in 7 it is 14; in 3 it is 10.

The Injunction and Abatement act, to restrain commercialized vice, is in force in 5 of the 10 woman suffrage States. In Colorado, where it failed last year, it has been again introduced. The other four woman suffrage States have particularly good laws against this evil. Of the 38 male suffrage States, 7 have no laws against prostitution and 3 no laws even against pandering.

The Widows' Pension act is in effect in 7 of the 10 woman suffrage States, with 2 more pending, and the last report gave only 10 of the 38 male suffrage States.

The control of the earnings of the wife lies still with the husband in 10 States, and these are all male suffrage States except Idaho, where only 681 women were at work outside the home.

That the non-industrial suffrage States do not have as many laws in regard to working women as a State like New York is to be expected. In 1910 New York had 293,525 females working in factories while the four suffrage States—Idaho, Wyoming, Colorado, and Utah—all together had 3499. In spite of this the working woman finds that suffrage has improved her condition as it has the workingman's.

An eight-hour day for men in public employment is secured by a Federal law and laws in twenty States, (Bulletin of New York Department of Labor, March, 1911.) In this State it includes the workers on the barge canal and the vast work of the Catskill aqueduct. Twelve States limit to eight the hours of men in the mines. Women, although much more in need of the shorter working day, have only succeeded in getting it in three States—California, Colorado, and Washington—in every one of which they vote. In Utah and Idaho they have a nine-hour law. Massachusetts passed a nine-hour law after forty years of agitation. There is a maximum penalty of $100 for violating this law, while the penalty is $1000 for violating the men's eight-hour law.

Whether the fact that New York State has removed many of the disabilities of women is due or not to the strong suffrage movement which has gone on coincident with their removal, the fact remains that suffragists have worked for this removal early and late. If their efforts had little or nothing to do with the results, as The Times says, it is further proof that influence without votes does not count for much. In spite of their work and in spite of much legislation the fundamental disabilities still exist.

We want to vote because we believe that democracy is as good for women as for men, that women need representation the same as men; because taxation without representation is tyranny for women as well as for men; because women are people and want to be consulted; because government includes public housekeeping, and woman's sphere is today largely controlled by government; because 900,000 women in New York State have to work outside the home in order to live, and unenfranchised labor is poor labor, dangerous to men and women alike; because the Legislature is constantly dealing with questions that belong to us, and we wish representation there; because the most important questions before the country today are those in which women take a vital interest and want to be consulted; because when it comes to a question of war, whether it be the slaying of men or war against prostitution, child labor, and other great evils, we demand that woman's voice shall be heard equally with man's in the councils of the nation.

GERTRUDE FOSTER BROWN,
President New York State Woman Suffrage Association.

CONFERENCE PLANS ALMOST COMPLETED

Last night's Oswego Times contained the almost completed program for the Northern New York Conference which is to meet in Oswego on April 7 to 12. The report follows:—

Chancellor Hamilton of the American University of Washington, D. C., a brother of Bishop J. W. Hamilton of Boston, who will preside, will deliver an address on Wednesday evening, April 6. The conference will not open formally, however, until the following day. The Rev. Dr. W. V. Bovard of Philadelphia will represent the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, speaking on Wednesday afternoon. Dr. J. P. Mavety of Chicago will deliver an address during the convention.

Other speakers will be the Rev. Dr. J. F. Trenery of Chicago, who will speak on Friday evening, representing the Board of Foreign Missions. The Board of Educationw ill be represented by John W. Hancher of Newark, now secretary of that Board and the Freedmen's Aid and Southern Work will be discussed

Charles D. Skinner of Cazenovia Seminary will speak on Saturday. Dr. Wallace E. Brown of Geneva, director of the Epworth Leagues,will speak at the anniversary of the organization which will be observed during the convention.

Miss Estey of Korea and Miss Bertha Fowler, president of Folts Mission Institute in Herkimer, will be the principal speakers at the respective anniversaries of the Woman's Foreign and Home Missionary Societies on Friday afternoon during conference week.

Bishop Hamilton will preach at the Sunday services, morning and evening, April 11, and in the afternoon of that day there will be ordination of elders, consecration of deaconess and a memorial addressby the Rev. Dr. E. B. Toppling of Utica, formerly of Oswego.

Friday, April 9, will be layman's day and the sessions will be in the Congregational chapel, morning and evening. The laymen of the Northern New York Conference will hold a big banquet in the dining hall at Trinity church on that evening.

Bishop Hamilton's address on Thursday evening, April 8, is expected to be very interesting. The subject will be "Some People of Quality Whom I Know in Boston."

SAYS U. S. CAN SAVE BELGIUM

Problem of Employment of Refugees May Be Solved by the Rockefeller Fund

Conditions in Belgium, England and Holland are portrayed by Dean Howard McClenahan of Princeton university in a report made public recently. He was sent abroad by university authorities, who have already done much in relief work. Of general conditions in Belgium Dean McClenahan says:

"With the single exception of coal mining, the industries of Belgium are dead. The mines are worked two or three days a week, and, according to the owners, will continue to be operated, even at a heavy loss even if the money for running expenses can be procured.

"No other form of production can even be attempted. Some grain has been planted, and should yield a harvest during the coming summer, but the quantity seems small. The outlook for Belgium seems black as night. If America and the other neutral nations fail her, she will surely succumb to starvation."

Only the Commission for Relief in Belgium, Dean McClenahan says, stands between Belgium and starvation. Not a loaf of bread would the civil population have, he asserts, but for the commission and its fleet.

Saw Widespread Desolation.

Brussels, Mons, Dinant, Liege, Tirlemont, Louvain, Namur, Malines and Antwerp are some of the cities Dean McClenahan visited. Between Mons and Charleroi four-fifths of the houses had been destroyed, he estimates. There was evidence that many of them had been used as forts and had seen bitter fighting. Up the withered valley of the Meuse he sped in an automobile, escorted by two German privates.

Dinant he found a city of ruins, with a small remnant of its 8000 inhabitants living in dugouts and shacks. In Namar and in Liege, whose forts were some miles away, little damage was done. Tirlemont suffered, the Germans alleging that Belgian soldiers had fired upon them.

Brussels, once sprightly, Dean McClenahan found lethargic, as if it were always Sunday afternoon. German troops were constantly on the march through its streets. They roused not the slightest evidence of antagonism, though at times Belgian youngsters in marching array goose-stepped beside them.

England, Dean McClenahan reports is arousing herself. Except for medical students, not a youth eligible for military service is in Cambridge or Oxford. Most of the students still in the institutions were rejected because of defective vision. In Cambridge enrollment was not quite 20 per cent of that in normal times, and in Oxford it was still lower.

Relief work among Belgian refugees in England, who number 150,000, has been systematized. Earl's Court, where Buffalo Bill's redskins and cow boys appeared, is used as a clearing house for new arrivals. Efforts to find employment for the horde of strangers are frequently opposed by organized labor.

Rockefeller Fund at Work

Little Holland has 250,000 penniless refugees to care for. It is a drain, but, so far as possible, every need is met, save that of unemployment, and, through the efforts of the Rockfeller Foundation, there is hope that that problem will be solved.

A BOWLING SOCIAL

A most enjoyable evening was spent in the rooms of the Onyx Athletic Club last Friday. It was a social, smoker and musical affair. Resolutions were adopted thanking those who took part in the benefit held in the Quirk theatre, especially Parker VanBuren who had charge of the show and who contributed so much toward its success; also to the public who responded so generously.

A musical program was given and everybody went home rejoicing in the certainity that the City of Fulton will be represented at the N. B. A. tourament to be held in Boston, in May.

Following is the program:

Short talk by Manager William Stauring on "Various tournaments I have been in"; song. Arthur C. Paige, entitled "Darling I am Growing Old"; recitation by Thos. McCollum, entitled "Down at the Isle of War"; song, Geo. Jardine Hill, entitled "My Wife Has Gone to the Country." Lawrence Sullivan gave a talk on how Baldwinsville has made great strides in bowling during the last three months.

The quartet sang the parody, entitled "Tommy Barry is a Cute Kid." William Rear explained the difference between the regular bowling ball and the "DoDo Ball." The evening came to a close with H. M. O'Brien telling the experience he had rolling 279.

MRS. LUCY LASHER PHILLIPS

Funeral services were held this afternoon for Mrs. Lucy Lasher Phillips, who died in Syracuse Thursday, at the home of her sister, Mrs. Horatio Allen, 316 Utica st. The Rev. Dempster Chase of Utica officiated, and interment was made in Mt. Adnah cemetery .

Mrs. Phillips is survived by her husband, Robert E., one daughter, Miss Mary, one brother, F. W. Lasher, and Mrs. Horatio Allen, a sister.

Mr. and Mrs. Phillips were former residents of this city, where the latter won by her gentle, loving disposition a host of friends and acquaintances.

Mrs. Phillips possessed an engaging personality and a nature that was ever ready to assist persons whose distress or trouble came within her observation.

GRAND OPERA COMPANY TO SING SATURDAY

Two performances of grand opera in English will beg iven at the Richardson theater, Oswego, Saturday, March 20. Following is the cast that will appear:

Giuseppe Tricario, Giuseppe Mauro, Guido Ceccotti, Pilade Sinagra, Cesare Alessandroni, Gustino Zara, Romeo Malpica, Giuseppe Ansalone, William Zwiback, Rosalia Chalia, Line Casti, Cecilia Zavaschi, Rosamarie Campbell, Emilia Rondero and Giovanni Leotti, as the conductor.

At the matinee "Aida" will be sung in the evening, "Rigoletto," with Mmes. Zavaschi, Durvale, Edwards, Sigs, DeCrescenzo, Zara, Mauro, Ansalone, Turner and a large chorus and ballet.

G. A. R. CAMPFIRE

Schenck Post, G. A. R., will hold a campfire at headquarters tomorrow evening, at 7:30 o'clock, when every member of the society is expected to attend. The comrades in charge of the evening's entertainment anticapte and promise a good time for everybody.

A LIBRARY SOCIAL

A library tea and food and candy sale will be held in the assembly hall next Saturday, March 20. The tea-room and sale will be open from 2.30 to 5 p.m. A fine musical program will be given.

Farmers will be interested to know that the Democratic Leaders in the Legislature—Senator Wagner and Assemblyman Smith—have introduced a bill to repeal the law requiring the State to compensate farmers for diseased cattle killed by authority. This would be outrageous.  Both men back of this measure are of course, Tammany politicians.—Kingston Freeman.

CLERK ZOPHER D. STANTON ANNOUNCES CANDIDACY

One of this county's most popular office holders has announced his intention of appearing before the voters at the Sept. direct primaries for re-nomination, the gentleman being Zopher D. Stanton, of Amboy, Parish and Oswego, and who has served the people of Oswego county for three years as County Clerk, in a way to merit the attention and support of every man irregardless of political affiliations.

Close application to the duties of office, courtesy and kindness to hundreds and thousands of persons who during his three years of service to the people transacting business at the County Clerk's building, have won for Mr. Stanton an enduring strength.

ROUND ABOUT

Job Hedges said at the hearing on the Argetsinger primary bill in Albany: "I would agree with the direct primary proposition in its entirety if there was any human way of making a man go to the polls and cast a ballot. The fact is, he isn't willing to, and won't. He has to be brought to the polls at a ridiculous cost, to perform a duty which he is bound to the Republic to perform. The average man doesn't vote for, but against, a candidate. At the last election they didn't vote for the Republicans, but against the Democrats No man ever votes for an ideal platform unless he drafts it; no man ever votes for a candidate unless he votes for himself."

At a meeting of the directors of Yale & Towne, of Stamford, Conn., one of the largest hardware manufacturing concerns in the country, Walter C. Allen, who 23 years ago applied for a job at the gate of the works, was elected president in the place of Henry R. Towne, who retires after 46 years in that position.

It will continue to be within the law to throw a baseball at the head of a negro at Coney Island this summer, for Senator Gilchrist's bill making it a misdemeanor to indulge in this [illegible] county fair sport was defeated in the Senate by a vote of 25 to 12.

Representative Claude Kitchin of North Carolina will be the new Democratic leader in the next House. It is supposed those impertiment Republican newspapers who will have comment to make on the things done or atempted will refer to his leaders and advisers as a "kitchen cabinet."

The State Health Department is going to issue a State Health Almanac, telling in detail "how to keep disease down." If almanacs and other costly frills were not issued by our State departments, the citizens would be able to write a book on "How they keep taxes down."—Brooklyn Times.

"Why does trade go out of town?" was another questionaire, in reply Mr. Wilson said:

"Trade goes out of town because the woman says, "I can't get anything of our merchants." There is in such cases a complete absence of real relationship between the merchants of the town and the shopping public. Every good store is handicapped by every poor store; every clean grocer is handicapped by every dirty grocer; a community that has fakirs in real estate is hampered, and every bank in the town that fails harms every other bank in that town. In short, the unprosperous business places of the community are a detriment to each and every prosperous one."

The first step to correct this gross mistake, Mr. Wilson showed was to get together. The merchant must win the approbation of the shoppers, and more often a man is judged by the things he does out of business than those in business. The man who does things for his town is the one who is most favored in the eye of the public."

H. L. Paddock was called upon to speak; he stated briefly his indorsement of the movement.

Rev. M. J. Peters responded to the request of the chairman by telling of the complete transformation of a small southern town after a chamber of commerce had been organized and efficiency methods tried out.

Dr. Robertson spoke of having lived in places in the middle-west where such campaigns as this had been conducted and that he 'had learned to be surprised.' He believes Fulton's possibilities are even greater than we know at the present.

Mr. Galusha announced in making his report that he and Mr. Brown had appointed themselves as a committee to meet at 4 A.M. tomorrow and with the aid of a hose give the streets a genuine bath. Harold Bristol immediately made himself a member of this committee.

Mr. Braddock, after Mr. Wilson had completed his talk, announced that as he would leave Fulton tomorrow he wanted to make one of Mr. Wilson's finest talk, "Imagination in Business," would be dismissed by Fulton people, and suggested Mr. Wilson be asked to give the talk at tomorrow's luncheon. In response to the chairman's call the entire assembly voiced approval.

Mr. Braddock will go from this city to Jamestown, where a campaign is being inaugurated. General expression regrets the departure of Mr. Braddock from the city where during his short stay he has by his able leadership made so strong a place for himself in the esteem of all with whom he has come in contact.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

FRENCH

Paris via London.—The following official statement was issued by the War Office:

"The British air squadron has effectively bombarded Westende.

"The success gained by the British forces at Neuve Chapelle proves to have been absolutely complete. They advanced on a front of about three kilometres (about two miles) with a depth of from twelve hundred to fifteen hundred metres, capturing successively three lines of trenches and a fortified work to the south of Neuve Chapelle. Counter attacks delivered by the Germans with great violence were repulsed.

"The enemy suffered great losses and left in the hands of our allies prisoners to a number considerably greater than at first reported.

"The British heavy and field artillery very effectively prepared the way for and supported the vigorous action of the infantry.

"In Champagne we have consolidated our new front by advances at different points and have firmly established ourselves on the lines of crests captured from the enemy.

"In the Argonne, between Four de Paris and Bolante we have made ourselves masters of more than 300 yards of trenches and taken prisoners, who included several officers. The enemy made two counter attacks during the day, but were completely repulsed.

"On the heights of the Meuse, at Les Eparges, the Germans attempted an attack, which was immediately stopped by our fire. The same thing happened at Le Chamois, north of Badonviller."

The statement given out in the afternoon follows:

"Belgian troops continued to make progress in the bend of the Yser. Their artillery, supported by our heavy artillery, destroyed a point of vantage organized by the Germans in a cemetery at Dixmude. The enemy bombarded Ypres, where there were several victims among the civilian population.

"The German artillery also bombarded the cathedral at Soissons and the surrounding district. To the north of Rheims, opposite the Luxemburg wood, the enemy attempted to seize one of our advanced trenches and was repulsed. Rheims was then bombarded.

"In Champagne toward nightfall, yesterday, we repulsed two counter attacks, pursued the enemy and seized several trenches. In one of these we found about one hundred dead and some war material.

"In the Argonnes, at Four de Paris, an attack attempted with the object of debouching against our line was checked completely.

"In Lorraine our patrols occupied Ebbermenil.

"In the Vosges there has been artillery action."

BRITISH

London.—The War Office today makes the following announcement:

"A heavy counter attack delivered by the enemy on Saturday afternoon and several minor counter attacks earlier in the day were repulsed.

"Judging by observations on various positions of the field of battle and by statements of prisoners of whom there are now 1720, the enemy's losses must have been very heavy and cannot have fallen far short of 10,000 men within three days.

While the War Office makes no mention of the region where the above operations took place, it is probable they occurred in the vicinity of Neuve Chapelle, where severe fighting has been in progress for several days.

The town of Don, where the railroad station is reported to have been blown up, lies about ten miles southwest of Lille.

GERMAN

Berlin, (by Wireless Telegraphy to Sayville,).—The War Office gave out the following statement today:

"Several of the enemy's ships yesterday afternoon shelled without result German positions from the vicinity of La Panne and Nieuport.

"Near Neuve Chapelle, except for one isolated British attack, which was repulsed, there were only artillery duels.

"In Champagne the French again made partial attacks to the east of Souain and north of Le Mesnil. All of these attacks broke down under the German fire, with heavy losses to the French.

"In the Vosges the weather is better and fighting has been resumed. In the Argonne the French are now using a new sort of hand grenades, which fill the air with a pestilential odor. The infantry is also using explosive bullets which burst into flames when striking objects. This was observed in yesterday's engagements.

"On the eastern front the situation is unchanged."

RUSSIAN

Petrograde, via London.—The official statement from General Headquarters issued tonight follows:

"Between the Niemen and Vistula rivers there has been fighting only in the valleys of the Omulew and the Orzyc and in the direction of Przasnysz, along a total front of sixty versts (about forty miles). The enemy's attempts to advance have been repulsed everywhere. On March 13 our troops opened a counter attack and seized several villages.

"In the other regions, on the right banks of the Bobr and Narew rivers, and on the left bank of the Vistula only artillery engagments have occurred.

"In the Carpathians violent snowstorms continue. In the region of Lupkow Pass we have made progress and captured more than 600 prisoners, including fourteen officers and six machine guns. On the Rabble-Reastzciew-Studenne front the Austrians continue their efforts to pierce our line, but have suffered heavy losses.

"In the region of Kozionski and Rozaka the Germans have renewed their violent attacks, which have everywhere been repulsed. Colossal losses have been inflicted on the enemy. By means of a counter attack we captured many hundreds of prisoners.

"In Eastern Galicia we easily repulsed repeated attacks near the village of Niedswiska, on the Dniester. During this engagement an Austrian battalion was dispersed by our counter attack. By a sudden assault we captured the enemy's positions near the village of Malkowice, in the Przemysl region, and made prisoners of the Austrian battalion holding these positions."

AUSTRIAN

Vienna, via London.—The following official communication was issued today:

"The situation in West Galicia is unchanged. The enemy's attacks along the lower Nida and south of Gorlice were repulsed after short flights.

"In numerous sections of the Carpathians violent attacks by the Russians miscarried. For instance, on the battle front between the Lupkow ridge and the Uszkow Pass, in the Opor Valley and near Wyszkow, there were violent night engagements and many Russians fell into our hands, including 400, who surrendered in a fight at close quarters.

"Fighting also developed on the positions south of the Dniester. An attack by strong Russian forces of infantry came under an effective fire and soon stopped and then collapsed entirely, the Russians losing severely. Russian dismounted cavalry, advancing further eastward again were repulsed."

LOCAL MUSICIAN HEARD AT ST. JOHN'S YESTERDAY

David B. Carroll, one of Fulton's rising young musicians, presided at the organ at St. John's church in Oswego yesterday morning. Prof. Joseph McGrath, the regular organist had been called from the city by the death of a relative.

Mr. Carroll has been a special student in music at Crouse college, Syracuse university for two years and is also studying with Prof. McGrath. He is a members of the Elks' orchestra and has a class of students in this city, also in Phoenix.

FULTON'S NEWS IS NOT WAR

The Big Thing Now For This City Is The Present Campaign

War is not news in Fulton. In Saturday's issue of The Evening Times the "war news" was shoved to the fifth page of the paper, and John Stevenson spoke to our people on the possibilities here at home if the blinders are removed.

In speaking at Auburn prison yesterday morning Mary Antin said, "War is not news because the world has always been more or less at war." The great movements in the world today Miss Antin pointed out has to dow iht the making better of the world.

"Do something for the good of humanity and get on the right side of the real world news," said Miss Antin.

The Chamber of Commerce campaign news is the news of greatest importance to Fulton. The Evening Times aims to keep the people of our city, and the surrounding country fully informed on the progress of the campaign workers. In aiding a movement for the good of humanity in Fulton the home daily will be on the right side of the real Fulton news.

YANKEES GETTING NEAR TOP O' CONDITION

Savannah, Ga., March 15.—A rearrangement of the Yankee training schedule was in order today when the local South Atlantic leaguers reported for their spring workout. Until now the Donovanites have held undisputed possession of Atlantic Park, being free to practise any hour of the morning or afternoon. Today, however, the minor leaguers start a twice-a-day program and Donovan must sandwich his workout between the two periods claimed by the Savannahs. Whenever exhibition games with the Savannahs are scheduled the Yanks will have afternoon workouts, but on all other days they will report for duty at noon and do what they can between then and 2 P.M.

After two weeks of exceptionally fine weather the Yanks are the best conditioned ball club a New York American League manager has ever had at this time of the year. All the pitchers except Ray Keating are ready to meet any test, and Keating is fast reducing. Walter Pipp is the only infielder with any ailment of any description and all the outfielders are sound in wind and limb. Pipp's foot is already so well healed that he expects this week to discard the tennis shoe in which he has been playing, and appear shod in the regulation spiked shoe.

The athltes "killed" their day of rest in various fashions. "Doc" Cook and Ray Keating chaperoned one party on an automobile sight seeing tour; Ray and Mrs. Caldwell and Carroll and Mrs. Brown made up still another party, while Roger Peckinpaugh, "Dan" Boone, "Les" Nunamaker and "Fritz" Maissel went fishing.

McGRAW'S TEAM BEATEN IN TENTH INNING

Dallas, Texas, March 15.—It took ten innings to do it, but the Dallas team of the Texas League, garnering eleven hits off Erickson and Williams, defeated the New York regulars yesterday by a score of 3 to 2. McGraw's men were successful with the stick also and rapped the local pitchers for ten hits, but luck broke against them after the first two innings, and Dallas, after tying the score in the ninth, put across the winning run in the extra inning.

McGRAW'S YOUNGSTERS LOSE

Waco, Texas, March 15.—Waco's new pitchers, Pursell and Markle, let the Giant youngsters down with two hits yesterday and shut them out, 6 to 0. "Jim" Thorpe got both the hits. Perritt, pitching his first game for New York, did well, allowing only one hit and one run, but Flanagan was batted hard, especially in the eighth, when three runs came across.

Batteries—Pursell, Markle and Reilly; Walters, Perritt, Flanagan and Marshall, Wendell.

ALL LINES REFUSE SWISS SHIPMENTS

Switzerland is practically shut off from large direct shipments from this country. Shippers who tried to send goods to Switzerland via the established steamship lines to Italy were told yesterday that under no circumstances would merchandise of any character be accepted for the little republic at this time.

The reason given to shippers was that ships carrying goods consigned to Switzerland have already been held up by the British fleet at Gibraltar.

Shippers conclude from this that Great Britain and France have begun vigorously to apply the conditions of the blockade against Germany. It was said that Switzerland has failed to satisfy the British Government that merchandise is not being sent thru her merchants into Germany.

Ship operators said yesterday that the position of Denmark and Sweden is likewise endangered and that unless negotiations are concluded giving absolute assurance to the Allies that trade is not moving between them and Germany ship lines here may be forced to refuse shipments for fear of their boats being held up.

"I Am in Thorough Sympathy With This Movement and Hope it Will Succeed"

ORIN HENDERSON, 92 Years Old

IT ISN'T YOUR TOWN—IT'S YOU

If you want to live in the kind of a town
Like the kind of a town you like,
You needn't slip your clothes in a grip
And start on a long, long hike.

You'll only find what you left behind
For there's nothing really new;
It's a knock at yourself when you knock your town,
It's isn't the town—it's you.

Real towns are not made by men afraid
Lest somebody else get ahead;
When every one works and nobody shirks
You can raise a town from the dead.

And if you can make your personal stake,
Your neighbor can make one too;
Your town will be what you want to see.
It isn't your town—it's you.

GERMAN RAIDER SENT TO BOTTOM 3 MERCHANTMEN

At Least No More Lost Vessels Are Known to Have Been Sunk by the Dresden

London, March 16.—After a brief action on Sunday four hundred miles west of the Chilian coast a small British squadron, composed of the Glasgow, the Kent and the auxiliary cruiser Orama, sank the German cruiser Dresden and ended a search for the little commerce raider that was continuous from December8. So far as is known, only the Karlsuhe and the Kronprinz Wilhelm now remain to fly the flag of Germany over the open seas, and British and French war ships are doggedly seeking them.

The destruction of the Dresden was announced lastn ight by the Admiralty in a brief statement, but the news quickly spread throught the theatres and restaurants and caused an outburst of rejoicing.

Two features of the engagement, which occurred near Juan Fernandez Island, probably will stand out in naval history. All the crew of the Dresden were saved, which probably is a new record for rescue after an action at sea, and the battle lasted only five minutes. This, it is thought, will set a new record for brevity of firing. Apparently not a British ship was hit, but this may be explained by the fact that where the Glasgow and the Kent together mounted sixteen 6-inch guns, the Dresden's main battery consisted of ten 4.1-inch guns. No data is available to show what armament had been provided for the Orama.

Following are the known details of the exploits and adventures of the Dresdent since she began her career as a sea raider:

On West Indies station off Jamaica, August 1.
Seen off the mouth of the Amazon, August 5.
Sank the Hyades off Pernambuco about August 22.
Sank the Holmwood off Rie Janeiro about August 29.
Off mouth of the River Platte, November 30.
Escaped from battle of Falkland Islands, December 8.
At Punta Arenas, Straits of Magellan, December 12.
Cruising off Chilian coast, January.
Sank the Conway Castle off Coral February 27.
Sunk by British squadron, March 14.

AUSTRIANS ROUTED IN ATTACK OF BESIEGERS

London, March 16.—Frederick Rennet, the Daily News correspondent, telegraphs from Petrograd:—

"All the Middle Carpathian passes are still locked in snow and swept by a blizzard, and the Austrians are making desperate efforts to extricate themselves from the choked ravines among the sources of the rivers flowing into the valley stretching to the region of Przemysl, Styrj and Lemberg.

"Storms have swept this region also. The Russians promptly seized the advantage and amid a hurricane of snow charged into the

Now-a-days, People Who Say, "It Can't be Done," Are Always Being Interrupted by Somebody DOING IT.

This is the heading that appears over a chart that now hangs in the luncheon room of the Clark Hotel. The chart is recording the accomplishment of one of the "things that can't be done" in Fulton—the organization of a strong, efficient Chamber of Commerce. The chart gives the record of the first two days of the campaign—125 members. There are going to be three more days of the same sort. The spirit now being manifested by the men who are working in this campaign is well brought out by these lines:

IT CAN BE DONE

Somebody said that it couldn't be done,
But he with a chuckle, replied,
That maybe it couldn't, but he would be one
Who wouldn't say so till he tried.
So he buckled right in, with a trace of a grin
On his face. If he worried he hid it.
He started to sing as he tackled the thing
That couldn't be done—and he did it.

Somebody scoffed, "Oh, you'll never do that;
At least no one ever has done it."
But he took off his coat and he took off his hat
And the first thing we knew he'd begun it.
With a lift of his chin, and a bit of a grin,
Without any doubt or quiddit;
He started to sing as he tackled the thing
That couldn't be done—and he did it.

There are thousands to tell you it cannot be done,
There are thousands to prophecy failure;
There are thousands to point out to you, one by one
The dangers that wait to assail you
But just buckle in with a bit of a grin,
Then take off your coat and go to it.
Just start in to sing as you tackle the thing
That cannot be done—and you'll do it.

NOTABLE SERMON

Dr. Robertson will deliver his notable sermon to men at the First Presbyterian church next Wednesday evening. "Quit Your Meanness" is the topic, and will be a straight frank talk on the sins and follies of men.

A children's chorus will sing led by Charles F. Allen.

Dr. Robertson states the series of sermons which he has been giving assisted by Charles F. Allen, chorus leader, have been successful beyond his expectations. In fact Dr. Robertson says the results have been greater than he has experienced in ten years' work.

The services on Wednesday evening begin at 7:45 o'clock.

TYPHOID INVADES THE GIANTS' CAMP

That William Ritter, one of the most prominent of the Giants' young pitchers, has typhoid fever, was definitely settled yesterday when Dr. Allen found typhoid germs in his blood. This has caused no little excitement in the training camp and there are fears of future complications.

What Do You Want Done In Fulton? Write It Down

One Hundred Twenty-Five New Members In Chamber of Commerce Sum Total at Noon Today

Forty-six new members was the report of the captains of the teams today, making in all a total of one hundred twenty-five new members.

The captains reported individually as follows: Dr. Whitbeck for I. Galusha's team, four memberships; H. Bristol, six memberships; T. H. Marvin for David Lipsky's team, two memberships; Willis Morin, five memberships; Jesse A. Morrill, seven memberships; N. L. Whitaker for John Stevenson's team, twenty-two memberships. Total forty-six members.

E. J. Penfield acted as chairman and called upon the captains for the reports. N. L. Whitaker, in making his report stated that although the committee of which he is a member had secured twenty-two members, he regarded it as far below the number that should have been secured, and asked that a round-table discussion be held and each captain state where his salesmanship had lacked in efficiency.

The greatest obstacles met in the work the captains noted were due to the fact that the persons approached did not have a clear idea of how the campaign would result in making the investment worth while.

Mr. Wilson was asked for the most fitting way of overcoming the doubt, and his reply was straightforward and to the point.

"The Chamber of commerce is a channel thru which the individual is given an opportunity to do something for his town," said Mr. Wilson, "and to that person who has vision, enthusiasm, initiative and creative ability there is no limitation to the returns he may have.

"When you approach a person in this work you should not do so with an apology. You are leaving your work to go out and present to others their opportunity. You are creating public spirit which is the brotherhood of man, and if you were to substract the chrystalized results of public spirit from this community it would indeed be but an empty shell.

"To you, to me and to the children, this is the work that is worth while. We need enthusiasm, enterprise and conviction in the works that lead to better things.

Making public spirit in a town is a business and it must be gone at with one's sleeves rolled up. It is not what we owe our city, but what we can do for it, that will come back to us thru the 12,000 people who live here. Generally speaking, the person who doesn't believe he owes the city anything is a dangerous person; the measure of what a person owes his city may be found in the reply to the question, "If all of the people in Fulton moved away, how much would you give to have them come back again."

In short, Mr. Wilson's reply gave each the point, that to become a member of the Chamber of Commerce is an opportunity offered the ndividual to do something for his town. The invitation needs no apology, and the statement that $25 so invested will bring its own return again, is easily borne out.

It is the measure of the individual and of the city. Each one contributing his share of helpfulness can but be reflected in an ideal Fulton.

That there is a wide field for improvement is not denied by those with whom the workers have come in contact and as many ideas are expressed as to how Fulton should be improved, a "WRITE IT DOWN" blank is left at the elbow of all interested or disinterested persons. Further wording on the sheet reads: "You want the Chamber of Commerce to become the leader of community thought and action. Tell what you want the Chamber of Commerce to do. Write it down."

1. What, in your opinion, is the thing of first importance that should be undertaken by the Chamber of Commerce to improve the trade conditions and opportunities in your line of business?

2. What, as a citizen, do you believe that the Chamber of Commerce should first undertake for the good of the city at large.

The blank gives each a chance of expressing an opinion as to the most needed improvement in Fulton. The Chamber, backed by the Bureau, will work out, step by step, the improvements the people of Fulton ask for. The plan is entirely without haziness or a definite idea. The main impediment lies wholly in the mind of the citizen, or resident, of Fulton who has never thought about what improvements would benefit the city.

N. L. Whitaker showed, by reading a telegram the Chamber had just received, that Fulton has already been placed on the map. Certain manufacturers asked thru the telegram what Fulton could do for them by way of plant site, etc., should they decide upon locating in Fulton. Applause greeted the announcement.

FUN RAYS

By Ray L. Hopkins

ORIGINAL ALARM CLOCK

THERE'S all kinds of slick inventions to awake us in the morn, but the cock has been a-crowing long before the men were born who invented these contrivances to break our peaceful rest—and of all the sleep disturbers, why, the rooster is the best. You can hear his lusty singing at the first approach of dawn, when the light begins to flicker and the night is up and gone. He's as regular and faithful as the rising of the sun, and his crowing is a warning that a new day has begun—that it's time for "up and doing," that it's time to quit the bed—and the faithful cock is crowing loud enough to wake the dead. Then it's not so aggravating as the ringing of the bell, that I know rings out of meanness as it soundingly says, "Well, ain't it time for you to be about your business?" and then it just waits a little while and begins to ring again. But the crowing of the rooster is a sort of friendly tip; it's a sort of kind suggestion that the day is apt to slip right away without us knowing how so little work was done if we don't get up and steal a march upon the rising sun. It's a waste of precious money, be it city or the farm, if you've got a loud voiced rooster to invest in an alarm. Every man to his own choosing, but for me I'll pass the clock and depend instead upon the loud and lusty crowing cock.

Opinions

Proposing to Fine Non-Voters

As a method of compelling all qualified voters to exercise their precious right at every election, the Governor of Pennsylvania proposes the imposition of a $2 tax on all of them, half of the amount to be returned to the payer when he registers at the primary and the other half when he votes.

The plan is not without a certain attractiveness for those of us who feel, as most of us do, that he—or for that matter she—who can vote and doesn't vote fails to perform an important duty of citizenship and should somehow be committed. It might be argued with some plausibility, however, that to exercise a compulsion of this kind would remove a limitation of the ballot that is both desirable and as it were automatic—accomplished, that is, without trouble or expense to anybody.

For it may be—it even probably is—conducive to the general welfare that no ballots be cast by persons so little informed as to public affairs, or so indifferent to the administration thereof, or so little confident of their own ability to take part in their direction, as not to go to the polls when they have a chance to do so.

It is true, also, as The Evening Post has pointed out in a discussion of this subject, that refusal to vote is sometimes an effective way to influence an election, and that it may show not lack of interest in the election, but a desire to protest against the sort of candidate put up by the might-have-been, but wouldn't-be, voter's party. The man who cannot devise a better means than that of expressing his dissatisfaction with machine rule is not the highest type of citizen, but he may be doing the best he knows, and shouldn't be punished for it.—Times, N.Y.

Labor's Oppression of Labor

The full crew is defended as an attempt of poorly paid wage earners to get what ought to be coming to them from the railways. The actual operation of the law is to take from wage earners who are earning their living to give to those who are getting their living by statute. The heads of ten railways addressed the New York Legislature, telling what the cost of the full crew law would have bought if expended in cars, locomotives, signals, and so on. As there is no law governing wages in the cases of those producing railway supplies it follows that the wages paid in those industries are on a normal scale. Those who take full crew wages not only take that to which they have no right, although the law gives it to them, but they take it away from those who do have a superior right.

The same argument is put in a different way in New Jersey and Pennsylvania. The $2,000,000 spent unnecessarily under the full crew law in those States would employ 1,745 men a year in the locomotive shops, building eighty locomotives. Would the community benefit more by the production of eighty locomotives or by the employment of supernumerary brakemen? If the money were spent by the railways in freight cars it would supply work to 1,498 men, or to 1,708 men working to produce steel passenger cars. Ought sympathy be stronger with the full crew men or with the wage earners in the car industries? The full crew law is said to be in the interest of the safety of the public, although the facts do not show any particularly higher safety on the full crew trains. It may be that the railways are not judges of the safety of their passengers, and that they are careless how many they kill. But it is not reasonable to say that the railways in their present embarrassed financial condition are indifferent to the ruin of their rolling stock. A cheap freight train represents $100,000 in cars and engine. It is to be supposed that the railways would endanger that amount of property for the sake of saving the wages of a $2.75 brakeman?

At the committee hearing upon this bill at Albany Assemblyman Mead, a switchman, said:

"If you knew the rotten condition of some equipment your hair would turn gray. As a practical railroad man, I feel that I would be committing legislative murder if I should vote to repeal this law."

On that statement of the case, is the argument stronger for an extra man, or for better cars which might be bought with the same money? No doubt both extra men and costly apparatus would be better than either alone. But when there is a necessity of choice, which would be preferred? Since the appeal is now made to the public judgment and sympathy there is need that people in general should have an opinion in which way the railways would better spend their money, and whether their influence should be cast in behalf of the wage earners who earn their living by their work or those who earn their living by working the Legislatures.

As for the laboring men themselves, how is it possible that the great majority outside the full crew class can fail to see that their rights are reduced by as much as the full crew rights are enlarged? If it is a matter of sympathy with wage earners why not sympathize with the larger and more deserving class? When a farmer sees a pig getting too much out of the trough he drives him away and gives the others a chance. If the unions were getting less than others, or less than was right, they ought to get more. But if they are getting more than they ought, and more than is consistent with the interest of all in general, and of competitive laborers in general, then the unions ought to lose the sympathy of the public, and the public ought to make its views clear. The newspapers are doing their share. Editorial opinions have been canvassed to a total of 190, including 162 for repeal and 27 neutral.

Both Are Unemployeed

Labor becomes unemployed only when the employer becomes unemployed, and it becomes unemployed only in proportion as the employer becomes unemployed. On the other hand, when the employer is fully employed, labor is also. Bearing these facts in mind, the remedy for present conditions becomes obvious. It is to give employment to the employer. Who is the employer? He is the man with capital to invest. Therefore, to get him employed it is necessary to furnish him good opportunities for the investment of his capital. There is no want of idle capital. There is a glut of it. Why is it not being invested? Because there is hardly a large branch of industry left in which capital can be invested with any assurance that it will not be subjected to unfair and destructive attacks by the State and national governments. President Wilson recently appealed to business men to help the administration restore prosperity. Prosperity can be restored and maintained only by the activity of business men. The Government may help and hinder, and it is a crowning absurdity to suggest that business men come to the help of the Government to restore prosperity. It is quite rational, on the other hand, to suggest that the Government come to the assistance of the business men. We have been acting on the foolish assumption that Government activity makes prosperity; and that is the main reason why the employer, and along with him the employe, have been so long unemployed.—Railway Age Gazette.

POLITICAL COMMENTS

Governor Whitman's idea is to reduce expenditures and pay off accumulated indebtedness as rapidly as possible. The idea ought to be fascinating to the taxpayers.—Plattsburgh Press.

Democracy has been caring for its own. That is clear enough, whatever else may be said concerning interests of the state at large. The utter recklessness of consequence displayed by the Democrats is responsible for creating present problems in finance of a serious nature, involving departmental demands and ways and means for meeting them.—Gloversville Leader Republican.

The waste, extravagance and shortsightedness of the Sulzer and Glynn administrations have depleted the state treasury to such an extent that to further postpone a return to direct taxation would be an invitation to serious financial embarrassment. Governor Whitman, in his clear and vigorous special message to the Legislature on this subject, presents figures which show conclusively that the revenue from indirect taxation will fall very far short of meeting the financial necesities of the state.—Rochester Democrat & Chronicle.

We commend Governor Whitman for calling atention to the fact that "the people are tired of the talk of economy unaccompanied by performance.

The discloseure, that nearly $19,000000 must be raised by direct taxation to meet the needs of our depleted treasury is an astonishing comment on the claims of economy made in behalf of the preceding administrations of Governors Glynn and Dix Leslie's Weekly.

Tompkins county, which at one time was regarded as solidly Republican and afterward became Democratic for a number of years, is now in line, so that the Board of Supervisors is six to one Republican.—Buffalo News.

The new state commissioner of highways lopped $20,000 off the payroll last week. All's well if it's kept off.—Buffalo Express.

The compensation commission of the State started off providing rates at 8½ per cent. less than prescribed for stock companies. Because these rates produced more money than was necessary to meet claims, the rates were again reduced so that premium payers have received back from 15 to 50 per cent. of their payments. On Jan. 1 the State fund rates were placed at 20 per cent. under the stock company rates. Nevertheless the casualty companies are doing 10 times the business that the State does. Their premiums oft the full year, it is estimated, will amount to over $15,000,000. At the figure, concers will pay in premiums $3,000,000 more than if they had done business with the State.

"THE MIRACLE MAN"

Combining noble sentiment, subtle humor, with singularly human appeal, to a degree hitherto unapproached by any modern comedy, Geo. M. Cohan has provided in The Miracle Man the most entertaining play in all the long chain of successes that bears his name. In this great comedy he is no less entertaining and amusing than in any previous work, for The Miracle Man is as funny as "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" and as startling dramatic as "Seven Keys to Baldpate," yet the story provides mental nourishment and moral uplift that will come as an agreeable surprise to that great army of pleasure-seekers that have heretofore looked to this genius of the theatre merely to be amused. Mr. Cohan has often been referred to as America's most popular playwright, but in this, his latest and greatest success, he has earned recognition that is well-deserved through the more ambitious achievement that is far ahead of anything he has ever accomplished hitherto. The Miracle Man is announced for presentation at the Empire theatre for an engagement of two nights and a special Thursday matinee commencing Wednesday evening, March 17th.

Messrs. Cohan and Harris announce the famous Broadway caste and the entire original production complete in every detail exactly as presented for half a year at the Astor theatre in New York. Prominent among the superb caste of distinguished players may be mentioned, Earle Browne, James C. Marlowe, Percy Helton, Arthur B. Gibson, Sam Hines, Frederick Maynard, Clifford Dempsey, Daniel Burns and other Metropolitan favorites. Miss Gladys Alexandria will portray the principal feminine role, with Ada Gilman, Nan Francis and Mary Murphy in important characterizations. The story of the play is so well known through the enormous sale of the Frank L. Packard novel, upon which the play is founded, that a detailed story of the plot would be superfluous. Suffice it to say that many able and distinguished dramatic critics have designated The Miracle Man as being Geo. M. Cohan's masterpiece. Whether that be a fact or not, only his future products may determine; however, the mere announcement that this great comedy is to be presented in Syracuse should be sufficient to insure capacity attendance. Any play by Mr. Cohan is always well worth seeing. The fact that The Miracle Man is his first serious play should make it all the more desirable to secure seats early to avoid being disappointed.

THE BLUEBIRD'S HERE

Springtime is the season which heralds the approach of the Bluebird, and those who have seen Maeterlink's "Bluebird" remember this little winged creature as the symbol of happiness.

Yesterday in the diningroom of the Clarke it was most evident some one had captured the "Bluebird," judging from the expresssion on the faces of those assembled. Enthusiasm and comraderie hand in hand made their initial bow to a Bigger, Better Fulton as the captains of the teams made their reports. It was indeed a wholesome sight to see men and women happy and rejoicing over their work for a common cause.

"To make people good we must first make them happy," is a quotation Mr. Wilson has used in outlining the plan of the Chamber of Commerce. People working together for good means energy is wisely expended. People working against one another means wasted energy. The more we lift for greater heights the less the incentive for our neighbor to seek a lower level. It has been said each man has in him both the characteristics of the ape and the tiger. To ape the good and to fight for the fine things would be placing these peculiar traits in a channel leading to happy results.

In the meantime may the Bluebird's notes grow stronger, and the flutter of his wings be most perceptible. May the captain of each team find swinging low beneath each portal the Bluebird's wicker home.

WHAT ONE PUBLIC MARKET DID

The Public Market Commission of Ithaca had an annual meet- the other day, elected officers and took stock of the work of the public market. The commission is composed of leading business men, of able women and professors, consequently it may be assumed that their observations are fairly accurate. This is what they say that the market has done for Ithaca:

First—Improved the quality and freshness of native fruits and vegetables in Ithaca.

Second—Reduced costs of meats, fruits, vegetables, poultry and dairy products. This is important in the cost of living problem, for farm products hold first place in the family budgets and in the past 17 years have increased in price more than anything else.

Third—Stimulated production in the neighborhood of Ithaca. Producers raised more and better goods.

Fourth—Enhanced the value of farm lands adjacent to Ithaca. There was an unprecedented sale of farm lands last fall.

Fifth—Helped Ithaca business. Thirty to sixty farmers each week use the cash they receive from their sales at the market and buy goods from Ithaca shops, including the groceries and other food stores.

Sixth—Advertised Ithaca. Information has been sought by many individuals and by 59 cities in many States regarding the market.

Seventh—Will be a factor in bringing industries to Ithaca.

Eighth—Promoted co-operation between business men, producers and consumers, an acquaintance which promises much for the further boosting of the city along many lines.

Ninth—The market has changed the dinner of the very poor and of many factory employes from dry bread and imitation coffee to meats, fruits and vegetables. A social service expert says that "The City Market is the best social service that has ever come to Ithaca."

The capital stock of the market is to be increased and the scope of the work extended.

THREE BROTHERS, PROFESSORS IN AMERICAN COLLEGES, WHO HAVE QUIT THEIR POSTS TO FIGHT FOR FRANCE

ALBERT CRU, PROFESSOR AT WILLIAMS COLLEGE

NORTON CRU, FRENCH TEACHER AT WILLIAMS COLLEGE.

LOYALTY CRU, HUNTER COLLEGE

Here are three brothers—professors in American colleges, who have left their classrooms for French trenches Sons of a French father and an English mother, two of them now are fighting for the Allies. The other, at last accounts, was recovering after a bullet had been extracted from his knee. He was fretting because he was not at the front sharing his brothers' dangers. Some day their letters to their Spartan mother, who lives in France, should aid the staid historian to put the vital, human note into his otherwise dry tomes. Mme. Cru acts as postmistress for this family, because her boys find it difficult to write and post letters from the front. When one of them sends a post card or a long letter, as it sometimes happens, she makes copies and sends them to her other boys and to relatives and friends. Copies of all these letters are sent to a fourth son, Professor Paul Cru, who took Professor Loyalty Cru's place at Hunter College and is now the financial mainstay of this war rent family. He regrets that he, too, cannot fight France's battles, but army surgeons rejected him.

ROUND ABOUT

A suggestion has been received at the Navy Department that the vessel docked at Newport News is not really the Prinz Eitel Friedrich but her sister ship, the Kronprinz Wilhelm, supposed to have been destroyed early in the war. The department was not disposed to veiw the suggestion seriously. According to reports received in Washington, officers of the Eitel Friedrich will assert that they found in the papers of the William P. Frye a record that the ship, with its cargo of wheat, was bound for "Queenstown, Falmouth or Plymouth for orders," and will insist that since Plymouth is a fortified port the wheat was contraband.

An amendment to the prohibition law recently enacted by the West Virginia Legislature makes it a misdemeanor not to label in large letters containers of alcoholic liquors. A man who arrived in Grafton wore on his hat a placard printed in large letters which read: "I contain two pints of pure rye whiskey and six bottles of beer."

The Dardanus works in the Dardanelles are now said to be completely in ruins. Even the ruins of the city built by old Dardanus have long since disappeared.

In an address at the dinner of the Patria Club in New York Edwin J. Clapp, professor of economics at New York Uuniversity, said that Germany in the past has imported only 15 per cent. of the grain consumed by her people. This has come in across her western and northern frontiers, chiefly through Rotterdam and the Baltic seaports. On the other hand, Germany has always exported a quantity of grain across from her eastern marches into Russia. While on the other hand a blockade may cut off her incoming grain, it is certain that she will export none at all, and Prof. Clapp believes that strict economy will enable her to live on what she herself produces.

John Pachelli, an inmate of Sing Sing Prison, whose life was threatened by a cancer of the lip caused by smoking a short-stemmed pipe, has been saved by treatment with radium.

Practice of witchcraft is the unusual charge on which Fanny Dismal, an aged negress, widely known as "Old Jewel," has been ordered held for trial at Guysboro, Nova Scotia. It is said to be the first case of the kind in the history of the province. Witnesses who appeared at the preliminary hearing testified that the woman was called in to cure diseases and to exercise various kinds of "devils" over which she claimed to have powers. In dispelling the "devils," according to the testimony, she administered to the subjects doses of mustard and ginger tea, and gave them charms to carry.

"Never heard of it in the world," said former Senator Root, when he was asked about the stories from Albany that he had been invited to spend several days at the capital to straighten out the tangle into which it had been alleged the Republican leaders had got themselves. "Nobody has invited me to go to Albany, and I don't know the first thing about the situation there." Mr. Root said his visit to Albany was in regard to certain legislation he wished to have passed in connection with thhe coming constitutional convention.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

By Frederic T. Cardoze

Albany, March 16.—Much has been said concerning the breach between Senator Elon R. Brown, Republican leader of the Senate and Thaddeus C. Sweet, Speaker of the Assembly, but it is generally understood that such differences as the two leaders may have relate only to small matters and in no way threaten to disrupt the general legislative plan.

Bec ause of the numerous new members in both the Senate and Assembly this year, some of whom were elected by Progressive endorsement and some through the medium of independent political affiliation, there have been presented this year more arguments as to proceedure than at any other period in the history of the Republican party in New York State. Upon the fundamental principles and doctrines of the Republican party, all are in accord and it is only upon the less important questions that there is a division.

Speaker Sweet openly acknowledges that he has had more than one mild controversy with Assemblyman Harold J.Hinman over legislation before the Assembly. He says that his opinions were such as any member might express without being charged with interfering with the progress of legislation. He says that he is fond of, believes in and has a high opinion of Assemblyman Hinman's ability as a legislator.

Senator Brown, it is known, is not upon the most friendly terms with Speaker Sweet, though he has not made any such admission nor vouchsafed any information which might result in the tracing of the rumor that he and the Speaker are not in accord.

According to the words of Speaker Sweet, the little differences of opinion which certain of the influential members of the Republican party in the legislature cherish will all be straightened out long before adjournment; albeit they are practically adjusted at the present writing.

"There is absolutely nothing to the rumor that the Republican party is disrupted," says Speaker Sweet. "There are so many new members that it is quite natural that perfect harmony upon all manner of bills is impossible."

Governor Whitman has left legislation alone. He is busy with the many duties of his office and gives little attention to anything save the preparation of the administration bills and their consideration when they are passed. The governor has never raised the cry that he was the leader of his party. Several past governors have done that but not he. As a matter of fact he has made the declaration upon more than one occasion that he would not interfere with the legislative program and his declaration has been more than once reiterated. This shows conclusively that the executive does not believe that the so-called breach between Senator Brown and Speaker Sweet is of so serious character as to warrant intervention on his part.

Some have said that Asemblyman Hinman is training in Senator Brown's camp and that rather than be guided by the advice of Speaker Sweet that he turns to Senator Brown when in doubt upon some weighty matter of legislation.

It is also said that Speaker Sweet is secretly antagonistic to Assemblyman Hinman and that he has succeeded in undermining him. This rumor apparently has no foundation. Speaker Sweet explains that the responsibility of the work of the Assembly devilves upon him and that he would hardly be so unwise as to quarrel with the majority leader.

The Movement for Better Films

The Woman's Home Companion has started a movement for better films. The editors are examining hundreds of films, and each month they will recommend the best ones. In the April issue they recommend one hundred short-feel fims and fifty reels for children. The following extract taken from the April issue gives some idea of the purpose of the new movement:

"First of all, it should be remembered that no force in the world will ever life the motion picture business, or any other business, one inch above its present status, except the force of popular demand; which means your demand, and the demand of all the better people of your community. The Companion's effort is toward a better-educated public demand, rather than toward censorship.

"In plain words, the Woman's Home Companion does not believe in local censorship, and urges its readers to try every other means of bettering conditions before resorting to this artificial and usually unsatfactory method.

"The motion picture deserves the freedom that is accorded the press. While it is an expression of dramatic art, it is also a kind of journalism for free public discussion. Pure milk, tuberculosis, and the fly nuisance have been discussed on the screen; in like manner, big moral problems are being discussed at every film show, and at the same time the audience is being entertained.

"Another point to be kept in mind: Today all motion pictures are made for a world-public comprising the young and the old, the educated and the ignerant. Unitl there arises a specialized demand every motion-picture problem must be a compromise between the demands of the child and of the adult.

"'The greatest competitor the motion picture theatre needs to fear for the future is the public school,' said the head of a great distributing organization of films. 'As soon as the public schools begin to use motion pictures extensively we will be compelled to change the character of our production to a considerable extent to meet the demand. The exhibitor will have to make a special effort for child patronage, or he will lose ground. His purpose is commercial, while that of the school is idealistic.'

"In the meantime the exhibitor is gathering in the children at the rate of a million a day."

A MT. PLEASANT FARM AND ITS FARMER FAMILY

The experience of Mr. and Mrs. Allen Osborne of Mt. Pleasant, in remaking a farm is but the experience of dozens of other farmers in this section of Oswego county. It is an experience that should not deter any man possessed of knowledge of the soil from tackling a piece of land and, in getting away with the object of his quest—a good living under good and right conditions. But right here, it should not be inferred by the reader that there are not other farmers in the vicinity of Fulton who can equal the Osborne record. There are, perhaps, dozens of them.

Twelve years ago Mr. and Mrs. Osborne bought the farm upon which they are now living. At that time the land was not in good conditions, so poor, in fact that at the close of seasons they were forced to buy hay and grain as food for man and beast. During those early years the Osbornes owned eight cows and two horses. Since then, however, they have turned the tables, for they each year raise upon the farm grain to eat and grain to sell. In fact, in the last five years the Osbornes have sold from their 63 acres hay and grain that enrihed them to the extent of $500 in cash.

Today the Osbornes own 19 head of Holstein-Friesian cows. There are in the well kept orchard about 400 apple and 200 pear trees. At the end of 1914 these thrifty farmers had sold 936 barrels of fine apples. The daily average yield of milk taken from the Osborne herd of cows is 230 quarts.

The Osborne farm is equipped with buildings ample for its needs, and machinery of the latest design—first-class in quality.

TO SEEK MEANS FOR NEW TRADE

Leading Bankers Will Take Part in Conference With Latin-America

The President, according to an announcement made by the Secretary of the Treasury has selected May 10 as the date for the Pan-American financial conference suggested by Mr. McAdoo several months ago. The conference will be held in Washington and will bem ade up of the Ministers of Finance of the South and Central American republics and leading bankers of those countries and of the United States. Its purpose will be to discuss, financial conditions in the Western Hemisphere and measures to strenghten the financial and trade relations of the United States with Latin-America.

Secretary McAdoo suggested the possibility of the establishment by the Federal Reserve banks of branches in foreign countries as authorized by the Federal Reserve act. This and other methods of extending the operations of American bankers to South American countries will be discussed at the conference.

Expecting a great improvement in trade with South and Central America, Secretary McAdoo deplored the defeat of the ship purchase bill and asserted that trade was being hampered for lack of ships to carry the products of the United States.

To Study Commercial Relations

"The commercial relations between the United States and Central and South America will be considered as an essential part of the financial discussion," Mr. McAdoo said. The Secretary of Commerce will be asked to attend the conference and also the members of the Federal Reserve Board. It goes without saying that the Secretary of State and all other members of the Cabinet will be asked to participate in the deliberations. A similar invitation will be extended to the diplomatic representatives of the various Central and South American countries accredited to Washington, and to John Barrett, Director of the Pan-American Union.

"The only disappointment in connection with this conference arises out of the failure of the shipping bill, a measure which had particularly in view the establishment of suitable steamship facilities to leading South American countries. This is especially disappointing in view of the fact that the bill would have passed if a roll call could have been had in the Senate. Our merchants and manufacturers have a most extraordinary opportunity for the sale of their surplus products and the enlargement of their trade with Central America and South America, but they cannot take advantage of it in full measure unless they have adequate and reliable sea transportation lines with reasonable rates of freight to Central and South American ports.

"The shipping bill would have assured the prompt establishment of these sea transportation lines and our business men would have been put upon an equality with and probably given an advantage over, their European commercial rivals. This measure was conceived in the interest of American trade and industry, and for the advantage of our business men and producers.

"The full benefit of the forthcoming financial conference cannot be realized until the necessary ocean transportation facilities are provided, but the conference will do a vast amount of good, anyway, and will doubtless demonstrate more clearly than ever the necessity for the creation of a merchant marine under the American flag.

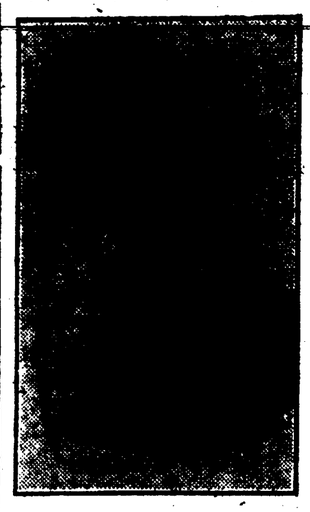
Extension of Banking Facilities

"One of the things which the Federal Reserve act seeks to accomplish is the extension of American banking facilities to foreign countries. Not only are national banks authorized by that act, to open branches in other countries, but the Federal Reserve banks themselves are permitted to establish agencies outside of the United States. At the coming financial conference these features will be discussed and an effort will be made to discover the best means of enabling our bankers to extend their operations in Central and South American countries.

"It is a significant fact that our exports to South America reached the lowest point for the year 1914 in the months of October, November and December, when they were reduced to less than half of those for the some months of 1913. This decline in great measure is due to the scarcity of ships and the exorbitant rates of freight now being charged. This happened in the face of an increased demand for coal and other American productse from Central and South American countries.

"It is of the utmost importance, therefore, that the efforts of the government to assist having been defeated those who opposed it should act at once and upon an adequate scale to provide shipping facilities to South America, in order that the present restrictions upon our trade may be removed and full opportunity given for its expansion. The financial conference ought toh ave a stimulating effect upon the situation in every direction.

"Here is the immediate opportunity for private capital to demonstrate its ability to serve the country in this great matter."



MOTORCYCLES AND WESTERN RANGER WORK

"In the protection of the national forests, motorcycles are a necessary part of the equipment of the United States department of agriculture," according to James W. Bogue, the local Harley-Davidson dealer. "B. P. Martin, Homepark, Mont., a forest ranger upon whom the immediate responsibility falls of looking after the Madison national forest reserve, says that the motorcycles now in use have been indispensable. The work of the ranger takes him over an extensive territory that must be covered regularly and the motorcycle makes it possible to cover the reserve thoroughly and frequently. In addition to making every part of the forest reserve quickly accessible in preventing fires and other damage, the motorcycle costs much less for upkeep, having supplanted two horses.

EPWORTHIANS TO GIVE SPRINGTIME MUSICAL

Some of the best musical talent of this city will participate in the springtime musical that will be held in the First M. E. church March 23. The program upon that occasion will comprise vocal and instrumental solos, duets and quartets, the performers to be augmented by an orchestra of twelve pieces, led by Mr. Reynolds. The Musical will be given under the auspices of the Epworth League and promises to be one of unusual worth.

ORTHENSIE DORVALLE

Soprano in Grand Opera Company: She will appear in Il Trovatore at The Quirk Friday, March 19.

THE ROYAL GRAND OPERA COMPANY COMING

The Royal Grand Opera Company, an operatic organization of about 50 singers, with their own specially augmented orchestra of grand opera musicians (15 in number) will appear at The Quirk Theatre, Friday, March 19, for one performance, when "Il Trovatore" will be given. This incomparable list of "songbirds" are coming direct from New York City, where they were for several months and were it not for the conditions that now exist in many of the European countries, caused by the unfortunate war, which compelled all the artists of the first class to migrate to the United States, owing to the closing of many of the musical centers, this city would never have the opportunity to see such a vast array of stars, assembled under the one banner. With artists of such rare attainments, it can readily be seen that this, the greatest musical event of the present opera season, will bing out society and all musical patrons in record numbers. As the subscription list is quite large, it would be advisable that seats be secured early.

CABIRIA COMING

Cabiria, the wonderful color photo play, one of Gabriele D'Annunzio's masterpieces, will be shown at The Quirk theatre Thursday afternoon and evening.

The play portrays early Greek life and in setting and coloring is said to be the most magnificent picture ever put upon the film.

Early in the season when Cabiria was shown in New York city tickets were sold at $1.00. Many local people also saw Cabiria at the Empire theatre in Syracuse early in the season.

Cabiria will be seen at The Quirk next Thursday afternoon tickets will be 10 cents and evening 15 cents.

Don't miss wonderful Cabiria.—adv.

AN ESTIMATE OF ST. PATRICK

Eloquent Sermon by Father Collins at St. Paul's R. C. Church, Oswego

Yesterday's Oswego Times gave the following account of a Sunday sermon given by Father Collins in St. Patrick's church:

"An estimate of the life and works of St. Patrick, the patron saint of Ireland, was included in the sermon by Rev. James F. Collins, at high mass at St. Paul's church yesterday morning. The sermon followed the announcement of special services next Wednesday, the natal day of the great Irish patron.

Father Collins said that it was generally accepted that St. Patrick was a native of Brittany and was born about 378. His mother was a sister of St. Martin of Tours, one of the greatest scholars of his time, and his father a Roman official. As a youth Patrick had the advantage of instruction by his learned uncle. At the age of sixteen he was captured on the coast of Brittany and taken to Ireland. After six years during which he had excellent opportunity to become acquainted with the country and its people, St. Patrick escaped and returned to Brittany and resumed his studies for the priesthood. Some time later his piety and zeal drew the attention of Pope Celestin and he was summoned to Rome and there, after being consecrated a bishop, was commissioned by the Holy Father to go to Ireland, the name Patrick (meaning father of his people) being conferred by the Pope.

St. Patrick and his associates arrived in Ireland eighteen years after his first departure and then began the labors of an apostolate which were to endure down to the present day. From north to south and east to west over the island went St. Patrick, preaching to the people and bidding them foreswear their idols of wood and stone and become worshipers of the living God. In vain did the Druid priests strive by incantation and appeal to stem the tide that St. Patrick had started away from paganism. Their power was crumbling and when on that memorable day at Tara he convinced the king and his courtiers of the reality of Christianity, Druidism ceased to be in Ireland.

Father Collins told of the wonderful spread of the faith throughout the land and that when St. Patrick was called from earth in 493 at a great age the whole land had become Christianized. For 1,000 years follow Ireland was known as the island of saints and doctors, its universities and monasteries drawing students from every European country. Father Collins then referred to the sad and deplorable conditions that followed and that had changed the name of Ireland to the "island of heroes and martyrs." But through all the dark years of persecution and oppression the Irish race stood steadfast in the faith, even though its churches were closed and its colleges turned to other uses.

In conclusion Father Collins said: "Ireland has borne its heritage of sorrow with patience and has declined to exchange its faith for the honors and glories of the world. Now there is a new day dawning which promises much for Ireland and its future. Irishmen and their descendants should be proud of their home land and of St. Patrick and should never fail to observe the natal dax of their great patron."

STEPHEN J. BALDWIN

Stephen J. Baldwin, 54, died yesterday afternoon at the family home 509 West Broadway.

Surviving besides the wife is a son, Milton A., and three daughters, Ella May, Mamie Frances, and Ella Loretta, all of this city. One brother, James A. Baldwin, of New York, also survives.

The funeral will be held from the home at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning. Rev. Charles Olmstead will officiate and burial will be made at Mt. Adnah.

Mr. Baldwin was in the D., L. and W. wreck at South Granby last fall.

WILLIAM BACHE FUNERAL

The funeral of William Bache, 79, who died Sunday at the Crouse-Irving hospital, Syracuse, will be held at 4 o'clock tomorrow afternoon from the home of his son, Fred Bache, 73 Worth st. Rev. M. J. Peters will officiate, and burial will be made at Mt. Adnah.

SANDY CREEK'S SCHOOL LEADS THAT OF OSWEGO

Sandy Creek, March 16.—The Sandy Creek Baptist Sunday school is rapidly outdistancing the Oswego First church Baptist school in the membership and attendance contest. The Sandy Creek school led by 48 and Sunday increased its lead to 173. The contest has been running two Sundays and will continue eleven more Sundays, closing the last Sunday in May.

The Oswego First church on Sunday had 119 present. Of this number 68 had helped swell the attendance at the morning preaching service, making the total points 187 as against 199 for the Sunday previous, and a total of 386 for both Sundays.

The Sandy Creek Baptist school had 170 members present Sunday, of whom 142 heard the morning sermon, making a total of 312 points scored, which, added to the 247 points scored last Sunday, brings thhe total to 599, as against the 386 for the Oswego school. At the commencement of the contest theh Sandy Creek had a membership of 177 and the Oswego school 190. New members present for three consecutive Sundays will count five each. The Sandy Creek school has gained 11 members.

OSWEGATCHIE LODGE IS COMING TOMORROW

Oswegatchie Lodge, I. O. O. F., will come to Fulton tomorrow night, to join with Neahtawanta Lodge in conferrinw the first degree of the order. Members of Phoenix lodge will be also in atendance.

The district grand committee of the various lodges of Odd Fellows through out the State will hold the annual meeting tomorrow for the purpose of nominating officers of the grand lodge, to recommend a candidate for appointment as district deputy grand master, and to confer the past grand degree, many of the lodges having a large number eligible to receive the degree. The district grand committee comprises the past grands of the order.

Oswegatchie lodge of Oswego will be the host on Wednesday of the past grands of the first district of Oswego county, and the meeting will be called at 3 p. m. District Deputy W. D. Thompson of Phoenix will preside. A meeting of the second district grand committee will be held at the same time at Pulaski, and District Deputy Edick will preside.

DECKER CASE SETTLED

Justice Emerson arrived in Oswego yesterday morning, and soon after convening court was notified of the settlement that had been effected in the James Decker vs. the City of Fulton case. This was an action to recover damages claimed to have been suffered by the plaintiff by the backing up of sewer water into his saloon.

In the hearing Mr. Decker made the claim that he was forced to practically suspend business for several weeks owing to the overflow. Stewari F. Hancock of Syracuse was attorney for the plaintiff and Judge G. M. Fanning, city attorney defended. The case was tried with eleven jurors.

Owing to an error in procedure the case of Lucy McCriskin McKay against the executors of the estate of Patrick McCriskin to set aside the latter's will, was stricken from the calendar.

ESTATES FILED IN SURROGATE'S COURT

Charlotte W. Morin was appointed guardian of her son, Edward C. Morin, who is one of the heirs of Howard Morin, late of Fulton. The amount due Edward from the estate of his father is $6,000.

A petition for letters of administration on the estate of William C. Whitford late of Sandy Creek, was filed by William V. and Carl S. Whitford. The estate is valued at $1,200 personal.

The petition of Ella Ball of Mexico for the probate of the will of Margaret Manwarren, late of Mexico, was filed today. Mrs. Ball is a daughter of the decedent and one of the residuary legatees. Charles Hubbard, a son-in-law, is the executor of the will. The testament gives decedent's husband the life use of the farm near Texas, N. Y., makes small bequests to grandchildren and divides the residue between the daughters, Mrs. Ball and Mrs. Hubbard. The estate is valued at $11,500 real and $700 personal.

The will of Mrs. Margaret Smith was admitted to probate and letters were issued to J. Carroll Smith.

An order was issued directing the payment of $11.88 to Angeline M. Piper, late of Fulton, to George W. Barnaskey of Syracuse, a grandson.

GERMAN SENT TO BOTTOM 3 MERCHANTMEN

chief eastern defence of Przemysl, only three miles from the heart of the fortress. The position there was held by a strong force of infantry and artillery, but the vehemence of the Russian onslaught was such that the entire battalion was routed at the first charge. The others maintained a confused resistance, frequently shooting their comrades. Then they fled in panic, leaving many guns imbedded in snowdrifts. The siege ring is now drawn much tighter.

The dubious fighting quality of the new German formations who are hesitating on the Polish border of East Prussia, has imposed another change on Field Marshal von Hindenberg's campaign. His best troops, apparently, have been moved into Suwalki province, where General Eichborn's army continues to suffer under the vigorous raids of the Russian cavalry. Its rear guard, tethering itself among a group of small lakes around Simno, is fighting stubbornly until the arrival of reinforcements, making necessary the moving of a greater volume of Russian troops from the Niemen, an operation which might bring a respite.

"A big German army of inferior quality is hanging behind the lines stretching across the Jitz river, near Chorzele. The Russian force facing this horde consists mainly of the Tenth Russian army, which the German staff professed was wiped out months ago.

ENGLISH

London.—The Daily Telegragh's Peking correspondent says he is able to assert on reliable information that 27,000 Japanese troops have embarked for China and that China is about to appeal to Great Britain.

FRECH

"The day has been marked by numerous actions favorable for us.

"In the reign of Lombaertzde our artillery, very effectively bombarded our artillery very effectively the enemy's works. The Germans attempted to recapture a small fort which we took from them during the night of March 11-12. They were repulsed, leaving about fifty dead on the ground Our losses were insignificant.

"To the south of Ypres the British army, which a German attack yesterday had compelled to fall back beyond St. Elui, recaptured that village and almost all of the neighboring trenches, in spite of several counter attacks.

"To the north of Arras a very brilliant attack by our infantry enabled us to capture by a single effort three miles of trenches of the spur of Notre Dame de Lorette and to reach the edge of the plateau. We captured one hundred prisoners, including several officers and some non-commissioned officers, destroyed two machine guns and blew up an ammounition store.

"Further to the south, in the region of Ecurie and Roclincourt, near the road from Lille, we blew up several German trenches and prevented the enemy from reconstructing them.

"In the region of Albert, near Carnoy, the Germans exploded a mine beneath one of our trenches and occupied the excavation. We drove them from it. They once more installed themselves, but a fresh counter attack enabled us to recover the position. We have held our ground there since and have succeeded in putting in order once more all our defensive organization.

"In the valley of the Aisne, near Vassens, northwest of Nouvron, two German companies were caught by our fire and suffered very heavy losses.

"In Champagne we made fresh progress. We gained ground in the woods to the northeast of Souain and to the northwest of Perthes. We repulsed two counter attacks in front of Bridge No. 196, northeast of Le Mesnil, and extended our position in that section. We took prisoners and captured a trench mortar.

"In the Argonne region there has been very great activity since yesterday. In the region of Bagatelle two counter attacks by the enemy were repulsed. We demolished a blockhouse, occupied the site and established ourselves there.

"Between Four de Paris and Bolante the enemy attempted two counterattacks, which failed like three others previously made.

"At Vauquois our infantry delivered an attack which made it master of the western part of the village. We took numerous prisoners. At Bois le Pretre, northwest of North-a-Mousson, the Germans blew up with a mine four of our advance trenches, which were completely destroyed. They gained a footing there after the explosion, but we recaptured the first two trenches and half of the third.

"Between Bois le Pretre and Pont-a-Mousson, at Dieupt Height, the enemy made an attack, which was repulsed."

AUSTRIAN

Vienna, via Amsterdam.—The following official communication was issued today:

"In the western Carpathians Sunday was calm.

"North of the Uszok Pass there was fighting of a furious character. Strong Russian forces made an attack there yesterday and advanced to near our positions, where for a time they maintained themselves. Our troops during the afternoon made a counter attack, throwing back the enemy on the entire front and capturing four officers and 500 men.

"On our positions on both sides of the Opir Valley the enemy, reinforced, repeatedly tried to gain the heights but failed with heavy losses. An especially heavy attack collapsed on Sunday, and in view of the losses these offensives probably will not be repeated. A thousand prisoners were taken in this battle.

"South of the Dneister our counter attacks gained ground, the Russians being pushed back from severeal front sectors.

GERMAN

Berlin, (by Wireless Telegraph).—The German War Office today gave out a report on the progress of the fighting which reads as follows.

"The baths at Westende were shelled yesterday without ecett by two gunboats of the enemy.

"The German attack on the height South of Ypres occupied by British troops is making goodp rogress.

"Partial attacks by French troops north of Le Mesnil, in the Champagne district have been repulsed. The enemy sucered heavy losses.

"In the Vosges the fighting continues at several places.

"The number of Russian prisoners from engagements to the north of the Augustowo forest has been increased to 5,400. Strong Russian attacks to the north and to the northeast of Pizasnysz resulted in failure, and the enemy's losses wereheavy. South of the Vistula there has been no change.

WANTS BOYS TO HAVE CLUBROOMS

While attending church service at the Congregational church Sunday morning Charles Anderson had his horse and buggy taken from the church sheds and the horse shamefully misused and driven by some young men, who, when they found the police on their trail left the rig and ran. The horse was taken to Dr. Kennedy's stables andc ared for until Mr. Anderson arrived. The boys were known and have left the city. It is really alarming how the boys of Fulton need attention. Would it not be well for the Chamber of Commerce in some of its discussions to consider a Y. M. C. A. or some clubroom for the boys—some place for them to congregate for a little amusement, instead of the pool rooms or the street? Where will one find a city in the State of New York besides Fulton which hasn't a Y.M.C.A. or a boys' club? This question should be carefully considered for the betterment of Fulton.

"WILD BILL" CALLS HALT ON YANKEES

Savannah, Ga.—Clarence Wahle, the paternally appointed left handed pitcher of the Yankees, came into camp yesterday too late to participate in an abbreviated workout. In appearance Wahle, Jr., is all that Wahle, Sr., claims for him in his letter of recommendation—a sizable, almost a longg and rangy chap, who looks as though he had the physical requisites of a good enough pitcher.

FRYE CLAIMS READY TO FILE

Washington, March 16.—Officials are still engaged in the preparation of accounts for presentation to the German government for damages suffered in the sinking of the American bark William P. Frye by the German converted cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich. This claim will be for the loss of the vessel and the cargo and probably for the payment of the crew for the forty-two days they were forced to stay aboard the sea raider before they could land at Newport News.

Norman R. Hamilton, Collector of Customs at Newport News, obtained the names and addresses of all the Frye's crew, together with the pay they were to receive when they shipped from Seattle on November 6. He sent this information to Washington for a decision whether the items should be included in the claim for damages. If the money is obtained it will be sent to the sailors. There are thirty-one who insist the money should be forthcoming. They were to receive from $30 to $75 a month.

Captain H. H. Kiehne, master of the Frye, did not pay the sailors for the time spent aboard the cruiser. He insisted that under the acts of Congress regulating the payment of seamen pay could not be demanded after the date of the loss of the vessel. The sailors insisted that they were not responsible for the loss of forty-two days aboard the cruiser and that the money is due them.

Officials seemed satisfied today that they would be unable to obtain from the commander of the cruiser the original papers of the Frye, seised when the vessel was sunk. These include the ship's manifest and clearance papers obtained at Seattle, a memorandum regarding the cargo and the log book.

War: Pathos and Humor

The sustained firing of the allied fleet at the Dardanelles is subjecting the artillery carried on board the war ships to far greater strains than ordinarily would arise during a combat between ships at sea. Ordnance men recognize this fact and are noting carefully how the more recently designed and constructed pieces aboard the British battleships stand up under the ordeal.

The artillery carried by late batteried vessels of the British navy is drawn almost wholly from the 4.7-inch, 6-inch, 7.5-inch, 9-2-inch, 12-inch and 15-inch calibres. Lightly built craft are still supplied with 4-inch guns, but even now the tendency is to install either 12-pounders or 4.7-inch; in other words, to cut down the number of calibres as fas as possible.

The 12-pounders constitute the reliance for secondary batteries, and have elfminated to a great extent the 3-pounders and 6-pounders.

The 15-inch gun has made its appearance aboard the Queen Elizabeth, and is the most powerful weapon coined in the British navy today. It is the fire fromm these 15-inch weapons which has been directed over a seven mile range at the Dardanelles.

All the newer of the heavy guns in the British service are of the wire wound type, that is to say, bands of flat riband wire are wound around the nitial or A tube, over which are shrunk another tube and the jackets and finally a hoop. The breach aetion of nearly all the heavy guns is worked by a single motion, and it is probable that many of the larger calibres are worked with the same speed and ease as guns which are termed in other services rapid-firers.

The British have thrown out the metallic cartridge in all guns above the 4-inch calibre and use what is known as separate ammunition, charge and projectice being quite distinct, and inserted separately in the loading operation. The powder used is cordite.

While the 15-inch gun has made its appearance on the super-dreadnough, the main reliance in the British navy for heavy cruisers is the 12-inch. The wire-wound Mark VIII. type of this calibre, is 445.6 inches long, and discharge its 850-pound projectile with a muzzle velocity of 2,367 foot seconds, yielding a striking energy of 33,020 foot tons. The Mark IX gun of the same calibre yields 2,600 foot seconds muzzle velocity and an equivalent striking energy of 39,850 foot tons.

The Mark VIII 12-inch gun weighs forty-six tons, with a rifling of the so-called polygrove, modified plain section, with a twist increasing from 0 to 1 in 30 calibres at the muzzle. The British assert that the wire wound system used in this 12-inch gun affords a more powerful weapon per ton of gun that is to be found in any foreign service. This assertion has been disputed by Krupp, who uses crucible nickel steel; but in actual weight it is believed that the wire wound gun has the advantage, and that both the wire wound and crucible nickel steel 12-inch guns are lighter than the standard 12-inchers of most foreign services.

When it comes to making comparisons between the artillery of different countries it may be asserted that there is a remarkable similarity in the progress year by year. This is due to development on well established lines, based on experience. Occasionally there appears novelty in device having to do with the mechanism, but the basic principles on which guns are built hold true everywhere. If the announcement is made that a gun of a given calibre is exceeding in range and penetrating power the same calibre gun in other service, it may be put down as a certainty that the increase is obtained at a sacrifice, say, of weight or life of the gun. The velocities can be increased by lengthening the gun, but this means increased weight, and if the length is kept down higher results are only possible by increase in charges with attending destruction to the bores and rifling.

The calibres of the British navy are very closely associated with the calibres in use in the American navy, and the 12-inch gun in the American navy may almost be said to be built on British proportions. The American gun yields higher velocities, using practically the same weight of shell, namely, 850 pounds. The higher velocity in the American gun may be ascribed partly to a greater calibre length and in part to the American powder, but it is also a fact that the American gun is heavier than the British 12-incher. In the matter of powder, the United States is fortunate in possessing an ingredient which is far less deleterious to the gun linings than cordite, though it is not claimed, it is believed, that the American powder will withstand climatic changes equally well with cordite. It is a give and take question, these ordnance problems, but this much is certain, thatn o one service maintains to possess all the secrets to be known in gun construction or in artillery service. From the day that powder and guns first came into existence ordnance men have followed carefullly one another's experiments, and little opportunity exists for one service to get very much in advance of its brethren in a foreign service.

It is in the service of the guns, in the application of the problems in exterior ballistics, that one perceives a preponderance of brilliant work, and this part is brought out clearly just now in the great artillery actions at the Dardanelles. For years the Turks have been placing in position, first in one fort and then in another, the most modern of Krupp artillery, and yet either from faulty emplacing or lack of skill in handling they have not so far been able to offset the destructive fire delivered against them by the allied forces. This theory that the Turks lack skill in the handling of their heavy guns over long ranges would seem to be borne out by the reported calling on Berlin by Field Marshal von der Goltz for additional German artillery officers, a request which, it is said, the German General Staff could not grant because of the pressing need for every available German artillerist for the defence of the Fatherland.

The ability to handle heavy guns effectively, and, for that matter, guns large or small, depends upon practice, and it is a comforting thought, perhap, that no nation in the world fires its guns so much in peace times in actual target work as does the United States. This fact has been proclaimed more than once by British authorities, possibly in an endeavor to quicken the supply of target ammunition in their own service, but it is a well known fact, nevertheless, and if American gunners are not the best in the world today it is not due to lack of practice. It has been found in the American service that the guns which show wear in use can be rendered as serviceable as when new by boring out the injured rifling and inserting new liners. This requires a supply of spare guns at hand to replace those pieces which are sent to the gun shops, and the question of keeping an adequate reserve stock is merely a question of appropriations and not a question of faulty gun designs. Herein the United States is strong, and no reason has existed short of appropriations for keeping up adequate target work in times of peace. In many of the foreign services gunnery has been carried to the extent of cutting down target work—a very dangerous expedient. If the Turks have been economical along these lines it will explain some of the impotence that is being exhibited by the Dardanelles forts just now.

COST OF WAR REACHES TOTAL OF 375,000,000

Berlin (by Wireless Telegraphy to Sayville.) — The Overseas News Agency says Dr. Karl Helfferich, Secretary of the Imperial Treasury, stated to the Reichstag, in introducing the budget on March 10, that the cost of the war for all of the belligerents was 1,500,000,000 marks (375,000,000) a week.

"The cost to the British in the first eight months of the war was 9,000,000,000 marks ($2,250,000,000), and to the French and Russians probably 18,000,000,000 marks ($4,500,000,000)," the news agency statement continues.

"The Secretary quoted his British colleague, Mr. David Lloyd George, as saying that the war would be won by the last billion. British opinion is that the war is only a continuation of business, while the Germans consider war a national duty.

"England's November loan was successful only because the instalments were spread over a long time and the Bank of England allowed unprecedented facilities. French subscribers to the loan issued just before the war are unable to pay the instalments."

Additional subscriptions to the new war loan, amounting to 34,500,000 marks ($8,625,00) have been received. The subscriptions were made among others by the relief association, the pensions fund employes and the factory foremen's association. Although no invitations to subscribe to the war loan hav e been sent abroad, subscriptions amounting to 120,00,000 marks ($30,000,000) have been received, the agency says from neutral countries.

The News Agency later issued the following:—

"Reports from Athens state that during the bombardment of the inner forts of the Dardanelles all the war ships of the Allies engaged were hit.

"It appears from a British army order found on a captured British soldier that in last week's British offensive movement in Flanders forty-eight British battalions were opposed by three German battalions.

"Re plying to the declaration of the British government that it is permitting the importation of German dyestuffs, the German government states that the exportation of these articles is prohibited.

"A committee headed by the Polish leader, Prince Czartoryski, is traveling in Russian Poland and spending 500,000 marks ($125,000) for provisions to relieve the distressed population.

"Notwithstanding the declaration of Grand Duke Nicholas, the Russian commander in chief, that he would hold Warsaw until the last breath, the Russian hospitals and supply departments already have been transferred to Vilna. The work has been stopped in many factories.

"According to reports from Basle, the Cabinet crisis in Greece was caused by the refusal of King Constantine to permit Great Britain and France to transport 20,000 men through Greece to join the Servians against Austria-Hungary.

OTTOMAN ARCHIVES PACKED FOR TRANSPORT

London, March 16.—A dispatch to the Reuter Telegram Company from Sofia last night said:

"According to refugees who have arrived at Sofia from Constantinople, work has been proceeding there for some itme on the State archives, which are being packed upand are to be sent away.

"Eski Shehr, in Asia Minor, it is reported, has been selected as the Ottoman capital until the fate of Constantinople is determined. Many valuables already have been sent to that town, where numerous buildings have been requisitioned for the purpose of housing them.

"Owing to the disquieting situation many foreigners have left Constantinople. These include the families of the German and Austrian Ambassadors."

Bunions and Rank.

"It is extraordinary," writes Sir Henry Drummond Wolff in "Rambling Recollections," "to observe in England the weakness that most people have for boasting of their friends in high places and the deference that they show to them. The daughter of a lady of very high rank had some pain in her foot which the mother asked the governess to be good enough to look at. The latter after examining it said, 'If it were not for her ladyship's exalted rank I should say it was a bunion.'"

LAST WEEK IN TRADE

Dun's Review Reports Steady Rising in all Trade Lines

The business situation presents the same sharp contrasts which have characterized it since the European war began. The finanial position of this country gains steadily in strength and the prompt absorption on favorable terms, of the large offering of New York State bonds, and the $15,000,000 Swiss loan, are fresh illustrations alike of the good demand for investments and of the growth of New York as an international monetary center. On the other hand, mixed conditions still prevail in trade. Exports, both of foodstuffs and war supplies, continue in large volume, while domestic distribution is subnormal, although the recent improvement is well maintained and there are further gains in some lines. The increasing intensity of the European war, the advance of the allies in the Dardanelles, the new turn of affairs in Mexico, with the ordering of warships to Vera Cruz, the ultimatum of Japan to China, are all world events so bewildering in their momentous significance as to accentuate conservatism without, however, disturbing business confidnence. The winter wheat outlook is promising, but cotton acreage is expected to be reduced in certain sections of the South, owing to the depression in prices resulting from the war. Yet cotton exports since the opening of this crop year have exceeded 5,800,000 bales. Collections in the Southwest, as well as in the West, have improved, although still retarded in the country at large. There is improvement in the statistics of both bank clearings and railroad earnings, but these still reflect a smaller volume of transactions than in recent years. Railroad earnings, which, in November exhibed a decline of 12.9 per cent. show a reduction of only 4.4 per cent. in February. Exports in the first week of February were so large as to be $25,800,000 in excess of imports, and this in spite of the high costs and risks of shipment. There is more or less disappointment expressed that domestic trade does not expand more rapidly, although gains areb eing made from week to week. For the first time in years American shipyards are busy, and this activity enhances the demand for steel. The iron and steel trade is improving stearily, and the record of unfilled orders of the leading producer indicates a fairly satisfactory gain during February; there is a gradual growth in mill output, but a wide diversity of resultas in the different divisions. The textile trades report seasonable distribution, but with no marked expansion, and the great difficulty of obtaining foreign dyes hampers manufacturers of certain lines of cotton goods. A somewhat brighter outlook is developing in the lumber trade as spring approaches.

Evidently Not a Candidate

Evidently His Excellency, Hon. Charles S. Whitman, Governor of New York, is not a candidate for the Presidency in 1916, in view of the fact that in his entire campaign for the Governorship he did not mention a national issue, and especially he did not mention the Tariff question, which is so important to the agriculture, the labor and the industries of the State of New York. Again, it is evident that he is not a candidate for the Presidency, in view of the fact that he has failed to call special elections for members of Congress in the Thirty-sixth Congressional District to succeed Hon. Sereno E. Payne, deceased, and in the Thirty-first District to succeed Hon. Edwin A. Merritt, Jr., deceased. A special election cannot be held within thirty days, while a special session of Congress may be called at the will of the President. It seems unfortunate that the Empire State should have two vacancies in Congress at this time, and that the Governor should be so engrossed in other affairs of state as to ignore the importance of a full representation, in the event of a special session of Congress.—Economist.

About Sports Generally

By Frank G. Menke

Spitball pitching isn't a common practice in the big leagues any more, yet the fact stands out that the best pitchers in the leagues use the moistened twister.

"Big Bill" James, the pitching star of the Boston Braves, is a spit-baller, Jeff Tesreau, the Giants' mainstay, uses the spitball. Doak, of Cardinals, who led the National League pitchers in 1914, is addicted to the use of the spitball. So is "Hassen" Pfeffer, of the Dodgers, one of the best pitchers that has busted into the national game for a considerable period.

SHORTENS CAREERS

The use of the spitball makes for great twirlers. History shows that mediocre pitchers who mastered the spitball quickly jumped into first rank in their particular department of the game. But history also shows that the spitball shortens a pitcher's career.

Jack Chesbro was a spitballer. The use of the spitter ended his big league usefulness a number of years before the scheduled time. "Big Ed" Walsh of the White Sox, is a spitter—and he's about through.

The spitball, without doubt, kills a pitcher's arm quicker than anything else. There is no ducking the consequences from the continued use of the spitter. Probably this quartette of truly great pitching youngsters, having demonstrated what it can do with the spitball, will use it less freely in the future and save its arms.

HARSH WORDS

Those were harsh, cutting words that a baseball manufacturer recently issued while on the subject of covers for baseballs—and the ability of some players to damage those covers.

The hide of Siberian ponies was used in the past for covers for baseballs. The European war has cut off the supply. It was feared for a time that there would be a famine in baseballs. But there won't be.

"The hides from American ponies will do just about as well," says this baseball maker. "Of course, the Siberian hides are a bit tougher than the American hides, but I guess the American hides will be able to stand up pretty well under the hammering of such men as Cobb, Speaker, Jackson, Collins and Daubert."

And then he added this cruel thrust:

"As for some of the other players damaging the covers—well, from what I know about their batting powers, I would say that an ordinary wrapping paper cover on baseballs would stand up just as well under their swings as would the Siberian pony hide."

Nasty fellow, eh?

"And lemme tell you," asserted Tom, when announcing his discovery, "that ball is going to be some fooler—some fooler, believe me."

"What's it like?"

"Well, first of all I get five cents' worth of licorice. Then I put a chunk of it in my mouth. Pretty soon the saliva gets very black. Are you following me?"

"We're ahead of you."

"Now as soon as I get that licorice worked up nicely I smear half of the ball with the black saliva. Then I let loose with the ball—let loose with all my speed."

"And then?"

"Well, when that ball whistles up toward the plate it's sure to confuse the batter. As the ball whirls round and round the batter alternately sees black and white. That'll cause him to pause, in fascination. While he's in that pause bing! The ball has whistled over the plate for a strike.

"Great idea, ain't it?" concluded Seaton.

Bill Hinchman is as pleased as could be over his connection with the Pirates. Bill believes he is going to come through handsomely with Pittsburgh and that the Dreyfussites will have better than a chance during the forthcoming season.

Alabama will continue to have Sunday baseball unless a prohibition of the national pastime is included in some other measure introduced and passed in the State Legislature. The original bill asking for its prevention was recently reported adversey by the Senate committee to which it was referred.

Roger Bresnahan says the Superbas have secured a promising pitcher in Dell, who was tried out by the Cardinals three years ago when Bresnahan was their manager. Dell was drafted from the Seattle club of the Northwestern League, with which he played in 1913 and 1914. He won 18 games and lost 12 last year, his record showing an average of two runs, five and a half hits, two and a half bases on balls and four and a half strike-outs a game. Dell lives in Butte, Mont. He pitched for Edmonton in 1910 and then went to the Cardinals. He is 27 years old, six feet four inches tall, and tips the beam at 210 pounds.

Ever since Bert Shotton, the Browns' centre fielder, has been in the big leagues his name has been erroneously spelled "Shotten." This year the speed king of the Browns insists that his name be spelled correctly.

Emil ("Irish") Meusil, the hard-hitting outfielder, who received his first professional training at Fresno, and who has been the property of the Washington club for the past year, has been turned over to Los Angeles. Neither Meusil nor Dillon has come to terms, but it is believed there will be no difficulty.

John Henry considers Booth Hopper, ex-New Havener, " one of the most serviceable pitchers" on Washington's staff. "He is one of the few pitchers that I have seen break in who seem to know what he is on the mound for," says Henry.

Hill, Fred Clarke's chucker from Corry, Pa., wears glasses, but these are said to be no handicap to him. He is believed to be the only player in the major leagues sporting "specs."

Mrs. Fred Clarke is quite enthusiastic over the players her husband has in charge. "A nice, clean looking lot of boys" is the way she spoke of them this afternoon.

Outfielder Dan Moeller, the Senators' speedy outer gardener, says that he is not going to be let out, as he is going to make himself so useful that Manager Griffith won't be able to do without him.

An Effective Retort.

The late Rev. Patrick Watson, vicar of Earlsfield, was a great authority on the Holy Land, and he was also a stickler for accuracy. An amusing passage of arms once took place between him and the archbishop of Canterbury. A committee report was under consideration, and Mr. Watson objected to the heading "Removal of Premises" on the ground that the things inside the premises were removed and not the building.

Dr. Temple replied, "I suspect you often tell your wife the kettle boils but it doesn't."

The meeting roared with laughter and passed on to the next business.—London News.

RITTMAN SECRETS A GIFT TO PUBLIC

Young Scientist Finds New Processes of Manufacture.

MAKES GASOLINE AND DYE.

Supply of Former Commodity to Be Increased 200 Per Cent—This Nation Will No Longer Be Dependent on Foreign Countries For Products Used in Manufacture of Necessities.

Washington. — The statement was made at the department of the interior that the two processes discovered by Dr. Walter F. Rittman whereby the output of gasoline from petroleum can be increased 200 per cent and whereby toluol and benzol can be manufactured from crude petroleum for use in the dye industry, have been patented by Dr. Rittman for the benefit of the American people.

It is claimed that the Rittman process is more economical than the German method of obtaining these products from coal tar.

"Just as soon as persons want to avail themselves of the Rittman discoveries," said an official of the bureau of mines, "the bureau under proper safeguards and regulations will place them at their disposal."

The first of these processes promises to enable the independent refiners in this country to increase their output of gasoline from petroleum 200 per cent or more, according to Secretary Lane, who says:

"With an estimated production on the part of the independent refiners of 12,000,000 barrels of gasoline in a year this will mean an output from independents alone of 36,000,000 barrels, greater than the total production today from all sources."

The second process includes the manufacture from crude petroleum of what are known chemically as toluol and benzol, both of which have been heretofore obtained from coal tar. As Germany has specialized far beyond other countries in byproducts from coal, the United States and the rest of the world have been dominated by that country as regards those products of toluol and benzol, which are the important bases for the production of dyestuffs and high explosives, especially smokeless powder.

The discoverer of these two valuable processes after many years of research is Dr. Walter F. Rittman, chemical engineer of the bureau of mines, the work having been done at Columbia university, New York, the facilities of the laboratory there having been turned over to the federal government by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of the university.

Application has been made by Dr. Rittman on behalf of the federal government to patent these processes to prevent any monopoly in their use, the patents to be dedicated to the American people.

The federal government through the efforts of Dr. Rittman proposed to make free for the use of all of the people of this country who wish it a process that is confidently expected to increase their yields of gasoline from crude petroleum fully 200 per cent and perhaps more, such results having been repeatedly obtained in the laboratory.

It is claimed by Dr. Rittman that his process is safer, simpler and is more economical in time than the processes now in use, and these are economic factors of great importance.

The second process discovered by Dr. Rittman may prove of much more value to the country than the first in that it suggests the establishment of an industry in which Germany has heretofore been pre-eminent—the dyestuff industry—and also promises indirectly a measure of national safety of incalculable import.

The federal government now proposes to obtain the toluol and benzol from crude petroleum. The real comfort is that we have the knowledge that this new source of supply is at the command of our people and that in time of great national stress, if the nation is ever called upon to defend itself, we will be able to manufacture the most efficient and most powerful explosives known in warfare.

THE NEW STATE CONSTITUTION—2.

Is the Short Ballot Democratic?

"Yes," the Short Ballot Organization says, "it is democratic. It is the only thing that IS democratic!" They have a slogan which runs, "The Long Ballot is the politicians' ballot, the Short Ballot is the people's ballot."

To have a long array of elective offices seems at first sight very democratic. To propose to cut down the list by making some of these appointive seems like taking power away from the people. But let us consider an extreme case. In Chicago a recent ballot submitted fifty-seven offices to the people. We New Yorkers who are accustomed to ballots of fifteen to twenty offices can easily conceive that fifty-seven is too many to be practical; that no ordinary workaday citizen can reasonably be expected to know who all the candidates are and make fifty-seven separate choices for himself; that so big a ballot makes politics a learned profession and that it partially disfranchises all busy citizens and leaves professional politicians the undisputed control. We can see too that such a long ambush ballot inevitably makes the citizen rely blindly on the party label for lack of having any personal opinion of his own to express regarding most of the minor offices. We can see that such a ballot ought to have at the top of it the words "For experts only, not for the people."

How Many Officers Will the People Elect?

Granted, then, that a ballot of fifty-seven offices is too long, and inevitably produces government by politicians instead of popular government, how short must the ballot be? Is twenty offices too many? Is ten short enough? Our last Constitutional Convention laid out about fifteen state, county and judicial offices for the citizens to fill in a typical gubernatorial year. Was that too many? That Convention presumably thought that the people ought to look up fifteen sets of candidates and pass careful judgment on each of them individually. But that Convention's opinion is of no importance. What the citizens of the state have actually done with that ballot is more important than what the Convention hoped they would do. If we find that as an actual fact the people of the state have not been doing the work which the Constitutional Convention laid out for them to do, then it is demonstrated that the Constitutional Convention laid out too much work, and the proper procedure is not to condemn the people for failing to live up to those man-made requirements, but to cut down the amount of work until we reach the maximum which the people will graciously condescend to perform.

It is begging the question to say that the Constitution would work as intended if the people would only condescend to do thus and so. The fact would still remain that the people refuse to do it, and the coming Constitutional Convention should cut its coat according to the cloth. Not until the people's work in government is laid out with due deference to what the people will consent to do, will the government be brought within proper control. It is useless impudence to say as so many people do, that "the people are indifferent," that "we need a civic awakening," an "arousing of the public conscience, etc. Our people, the Short Ballot advocates say, are not indifferent. They are just as much awake as the citizens of any other land. Yet the fact remains that if you ask the citizens of New York State as they come from their polling places on Election Day to kindly name the fifteen men they have just voted for, you will hardly find one in a hundred who can name the whole fifteen—merely name them, to say nothing of stating a good reason for preferring one candidate to the other in each of the fifteen cases.

Name the Lieutenant-Governor!

Shortly after the last election the New York World stopped a dozen citizens on the sidewalk in front of its building and asked them the name of the lieutenant-governor and not one was able to name him.

Any citizen can easily test his own information by trying to name the fifteen or twenty men he voted for at the last election. That will disclose very promptly whether the citizen was master of his ballot or not. Of course, he knows the name of the governor, the Senator, the Congressman, the mayor of his city, etc., but when it comes to lieutenant-governor, the secretary of state, state treasurer, attorney-general, comptroller, state engineer and surveyor, many of the judges, and county officers, the voter will realize that he took it blind; that he swallowed the slate; that he did what somebody lurking behind the word "Republican" or the word "Democratic," told him to do.

The very politicians who utter pious prayers to the long ballot and squeal about taking these minor offices away from the people, are the very ones who know down in their hearts that those offices are appointive now, and appointive in the very worst possible way by unseen powers somewhere within the party machine. To transfer that appointive power from private political sources to properly accredited and legally responsible public officers is a movement toward democracy, not away from it!

[This is the second of a series of nine articles prepared jointly by the Municipal Government Association and the County Government Association and the New York Short Ballot Organization to questions to come before the Constitutional Convention.]

PRINCE-CHAPLAIN LOVED BY TROOPS

HEROIC FIGURE IN THE WAR

Conducts Religious Exercises at the Front and Is Never Stopped by Bursting Shells—Friend of French Prisoners, Who Send Messages to Relatives Through Chaplain.

Berlin.—There is perhaps no more popular man in the Saxon army than his royal highness Prince Max Wilhelm August Albert of Saxony. Prince Max is not a soldier, but a chaplain. The "Father Max" of whom so many stories are related by the Saxons is none other than the younger brother of the present King Frederick III. of Saxony.

A German writer said of him recently:

"Of all the heroic and picturesque figures who have appeared in the tragic drama of the present war, none is more striking than Chaplain Prince Max of Saxony, the only person of royal blood serving in a spiritual capacity with any of the armies now battling in Europe.

"This humble man of God is to be found wherever the battle is thickest, attending the wounded, giving extreme unction to the dying, saying mass beneath the shower of bursting shells. Father Max has carried into the ghastly arena of conflict, the most terrible the world has ever known, the simple spirit of Christian self sacrifice and love for his fellow man. There is no German so loved by the French prisoners of the Germans, to whose welfare he devotes a great deal of his time."

In the Giornale d'Italia of Rome an Italian correspondent recently told the story of this remarkable prince and priest. He wrote:

"In Lorraine I found the most unusual of army chaplains, Prince Max of Saxony, the brother of the king of Saxony. The prince is at the front as a regimental chaplain of one of the Saxon commands. Wherever the battle is most stubbornly contested there you may be quite sure you will find Father Max.

"On one occasion I saw him when he was conducting mass in the little Roman Catholic church at Epinal, only a few kilometers distant from the firing line. At that time a fierce engagement was in progress and shells were exploding over the church, the fragments often falling into the auditorium, where Father Max was saying mass. Two of the windows had been shattered by the shells, but the prince-priest proceeded calmly, as if nothing unusual was happening, to read the service before a congregation that seemed to be as calm and as unconcerned as he himself was.

"Among the French prisoners and the French wounded that have fallen into Saxon hands Father Max enjoys unlimited popularity. The French seem to love the gentle priest just as much as do his own Saxons not only because of the tender and fatherly interest he takes in them, particularly their wounded, but because he is always ready to exert every effort to send word through the international bureau in Geneva to their relatives and friends in France and in numerous other ways to labor to make their unhappy lot easier to bear.

"On another occasion I attended a service, in the course of which Prince Max preached to men of his regiment. It was a regiment of Saxon riflemen.

"'Brave sons, courageous, faithful fighters,' said he, 'may God take you under his protection. God protect you, youths, and God preserve you, white haired men, for your children and your fatherland. And if it is not God's will that this be so, then remember, ye warriors of Germany, that no soldier ever fell for a more righteous or holy cause that that which you are defending in this terrible war.

"'But, whether you live or die, your names and your deeds will not be forgotten, and your wives and your children will bless and honor your memories as long as breath remains in their bosoms. You will always be under the protection of those hands which we have known and loved since childhood, and which lift us high above the misery of this earthly life.'"

PARENTS FAITHFUL TO LEPER SON TO THE END

Father's Business Ruined and Aid Refused by All.

Benton Harbor, Mich.—In an isolated shanty, set down in a secluded spot on the lake shore, Jacob Goldstein died a day or two ago.

He was a leper, an outcast, a menace to mankind, a creature to be shunned. Yet when his spirit left his tortured body his weeping mother and his devoted father were by his side. He could not see them, for the disease that claimed him had destroyed his eyes. But caring nothing for any risk they ran, mother and father were faithful to the end.

That his son from some mysterious cause had developed leprosy caused the elder Goldstein's financial ruin and his family's ostracism. He kept a small general store in suburban Benton Harbor, and he and his family were in comfortable circumstances when—

The whisper, "Young Goldstein is a leper," swelled to a cry that echoed all over Benton Harbor and far beyond its limits. Overnight Goldstein's little business was ruined; former customers hurried by on the other side of the street; former friends suddenly forgot they had ever known the Goldsteins. Goldstein tried to provide for his family by peddling. As he trudged the roads the frightened warning went ahead of him. "Here comes the leper's father!" All doors were closed to him.

The local health authorities asked the state of Michigan to care for the leper. The state refused. There is nothing in the health ordinances providing for such a case. The University of Michigan was ready to furnish isolated quarters for young Goldstein so its medical students might observe the progress of the disease, but Ann Arbor emphatically refused to admit a leper within her confines.

So the shanty was built in the secluded spot among the hills near by. There the parents of the doomed boy joined him in exile. The most loathsome, the most dreaded of all human ills, the disease accursed, could not drive his parents from the boy. Under constant surveillance, these three existed like prisoners in a stockade until the merciful end came.

QUIT JOBS AT WIVES' ORDER.

Spouses Accuse Two Workmen at Jail of Being "Honor Prisoners."

Racine, Wis.—Two men employed at the courthouse quit their jobs because they did not wish to be classed as "honor roll" jail prisoners. The men had sought employment at the courthouse because they had been laid off at factories. Their wives, reading an account of the employment of "honor" prisoners at the courthouse, accused their husbands of being under detention by the sheriff. Unable to convince the women to the contrary, they were forced to resign.

WHEN SORROW COMES.

Life no doubt is paved with enjoyments, but we must all expect times of anxiety, of suffering and of sorrow, and when these come it is an inestimable comfort to have some deep interest which will, at any rate to some extent, enable us to escape from ourselves and keep us from brooding.—Sir John Lubbock.

SAVES WOMAN FROM BULL.

Boulder, Colo.—The presence of mind and prompt action of Larry Fox, a motorman of a Denver and Interurban car out of Boulder, saved Edith Fair from death or serious injury.—

Wearing a red sweater Miss Fair, who is housemaid at the home of Frank Anderson, on the eastern limits of the city, started for the junction to intercept the car to Denver. While hurrying across a vacant lot she heard the bellowing of a big bull.

One glance was sufficient to warn Miss Fair that she was the object of attraction of the maddened animal. The terrified woman fled toward the railway track with the enraged beast not more than fifty yards behind her.

The interurban car at this moment shot around the curve, but a short distance away. Motorman Fox was quick to see the young woman's danger, and after turning off the current and applying the brakes jumped from the vestibule, seized her by the wrist and lifted her to the car almost at the same instant the animal brushed against the coach.

Miss Fair, who had fainted when the excitment was over, was soon revived, but postponed her trip to Denver.

August Harding, the owner of the bull, says he has never known the animal to act unruly before, and attributes its antics to the red sweater Miss Fair was wearing.

WOODPECKER ROBS A TOWN.

Causes Short Circuit Resulting in Excessive Water Bill.

The contract for filling the municipal reservoir is let to a power company and an electric indicator notifies the engineer when the required depth of water has been provided.

For some months the bill has been regarded as excessive and the number of hours required daily to fill the basin has varied to a marked degree.

Investigation has placed the blame on an innocent woodpecker which chose one wire for a perch and with its tail touching the other wire made a short circuit so that the engineer's signal to stop pumping was controlled by the woodpecker's rest rather than the depth of water provided.

WOMAN NEVER SLEEPS; AWAKE SEVEN YEARS

Sits Up All Night in Chair and Tries to Rest.

Seattle, Wash.—Mrs. Edward Hauck of this city says she has slept only half an hour in the last seven years.

Her husband substantiates her statement.

Seattle physicians say it is impossible; that if Mrs. Hauck hasn't slept for seven years by all the laws of nature she would have been dead long ago.

Two or three years ago one night she dosed off, she declares, and slept for fully half an hour.

Often now she feels sleepy and immediately lies down in the hope that the longed for unconsciousness will come. But it never does.

She weighs twenty-five pounds less than she did seven years ago, when her long period of sleeplessness began. She suffered severely for the first two or three nights, she says. That's all.

"It has come to be a sort of matter of fact condition with me now," she went on. "There is no pain, only a kind of dull feeling that weighs down on me. And the nights, you know, are so long when one is alone and everybody else in the world is sleeping."

She passes little of her time in bed.

Early in the evening she lies down with her little daughter, Irene Bell, aged a year and a half, until the child is in slumberland. Then she gets up, clears away her work and prepares for her long siege against the coming of daybreak.

Edward Hauck, the husband, is employed as a cook. He works nights. "I worked in the daytime until recently, though," he said, "and slept here at home at night, and I know my wife is not mistaken when she says she spends her nights just as wide awake as she is during the day. Occasionally, when she tried going to bed, I'd wake up and find her tossing beside me, always awake. Generally, though, she would be sitting in our one rocking chair, with the shaded lamp beside her, reading."

Mrs. Hauck says she finds she can get more physical relaxation in a chair at night than in bed. She makes the chair comfortable with bedclothes, partially disrobes and lies back to count off the hours.

"She's such a plucky little person," her husband explains, "that she hardly ever complains about it and seems anxious only that baby and I get our rest."

Mrs. Hauck sought relief from physicians in the east before coming to Seattle, three years ago from Berlin, Ont., but could get none, she says. She has bought drugs and sleeping powders at various times, both with and without the advice of physicians. But nothing has helped, she says.

Boy Plans Own Funeral.

Minneapolis.—Kenneth Booth Merrill, student at West High school, was buried recently in a casket of his own selection. Flowers used at the funeral and the music were chosen according to his expressed desire. Merrill had known more than a year ago that he could not recover, and during the last few weeks had made all arrangements for his own funeral.

Anticipatory People.

"I really dislike to talk to her. She has such a habit of finishing one's sentences for one. You have met her kind?"

"Yes; they listen faster than you can talk to them."—Chicago News.

COTTAGE OF SIDING AND SHINGLES

PERSPECTIVE VIEW—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH.

FIRST FLOOR PLAN. SECOND FLOOR PLAN.

For a small cottage home this is a very practical design. A living room extends across the front, with vestibule and stairway at one end. A high pedestaled archway leads to the dining room, which is a very good sized room, with the added attraction of a sideboard built in. There are three chambers in the second floor, with very large closets, a good bath and a balcony out over the rear, making the second floor commodious. Full basement. Height of first story, 9 feet; second story, 8 feet. All of the chambers finished in full height. Birch or oak finish throughout first story, with pine to paint in second story and birch floors throughout. This house is 22 feet wide and 26 feet deep. Cost to build, exclusive of heating and plumbing, $2,000.

Upon receipt of $1 the publisher of this paper will furnish a copy of Sexton's book of plans, "American Dwellings." It contains 210 designs costing from $1,600 to $6,000; also book of interiors, $1 per copy.

"Co-operation Represents the Greatest Single Achievement in the Twentieth Century," F. S. Welsh's Opinion

WHAT A BIG BUSINESS MAN SAYS

A hustling, constructive citizenship is bound to make a city leap forward. No city moves simply because it is a city. The power of propulsion depends upon the genius of her people. If there is an effective get-together spirit; if behind that get-together spirit there is abundant energy and abundant enterprise, that city is sure to progress.

But community progress is two-sided. Its causes are double? The public agencies, represented by the municipal government, form one side; the people at large are the other side. The moment effective team work is established between these two, splendid results are certain. In proportion to the absence of that necessary work, so will be the degree of sluggishness in the city development.

That is why every community should pray for big men. That is why every community should listen to its big men. That is why every community should esteem its big men. Elements small in mental calibre are the only ones laboring to prevent this team work. Elements, on the other hand, large in mental calibre strive to make this team work a reality. The questions are: Which shall prevail? Shall the city to be clogged by its small men, or is it to be advanced by its big men?

Much depends upon the attitude of the public. If the people want their city officials to produce big results, the city at large must get behind their authorities. It is a hard task to push a city forward, if part of her citizens are dragging backwards. Co-operation in municipal affairs is just as important as money. The Chamber of Commerce is an active means of co-operation between the big men of a community.

New York Central Agent Tells Chamber of Commerce to Busy Itself With Knowledge of Farmers.

Seventy-three members was today's report of the team captains. The individual reports were: Dr. Whitbeck's team, 6; Bristol and Fuller, 13; L. G. Adams, 13; D. Lipsky, 6; L. W. Emerick, 20; Jesse Morrill, 7; N. L. Whitaker, 16. The total membership lacking but two of the 200 mark.

F. S. Welsh, agricultural agent for the New York Central, was present at the luncheon and was asked to make a ten minute speech. In reply he said he thought it hard to ask a man by the name of Welsh to talk only ten minutes on St. Patrick's day.

In speaking further Mr. Welsh said he had noted with interest the activity of the local chamber and observed the co-operation that is the outgrowth of the movement. "Co-operation," the speaker quoted, "represents the greatest single achievement in the 20th century." The general conception of organized effort today is that one shall not in business profit at the expense of the other.

"Co-operative movements cannot be accomplished without money," said the speaker, "and it is the test of the convert of the revival who when asked for a $5 contribution, does or does not 'come across.' To my mind, judging from the scoreboard Fulton has been saved."

The spirit of co-operation, Mr. Welsh said, should be carried out into the farming section. The idea should be to do some thing with the farmer rather than for him. Helping him to dispose of his bountiful harvest is by far as important as it is for him to obtain a harvest.

In order to be helpful, the speaker suggested that Fulton interest herself in what the farming section is trying to accomplish. The consolidation of the rural school is a vital issue in the country. Means of transporting pupils from the rural sections to the city would react upon the schools in a beneficial way as well as upon the community at large by stimulating a co-operative interest between the country and city.

The neighborhood nurse is also a means of establishing a closer relationship, and good roads leading to the trading center are of vital importance were items noted.

"Farmers often create among the merchants a feeling of resentment when they they band together for purchasing supplies in lump quantities," said Mr. Welsh, "however, this can be overcome by the merchants suggesting the farmers deal with them on the same plan."

Work with the farmers rather than for them, to accomplish your ideal co-operation, was the suggestion urged by Mr. Welsh.

After the report of the captains, N. L. Whitaker said the workers for membership found persons who desired a guarantee for the success of the movement.

E. P. Cole said a report was current that unless a person became a member of the chamber he would be boycotted and suggested the impression be corrected.

J. G. Berger asked how the city could best advertise itself.

Mr. Wilson in answering the questions said:

"A sincere man has nothing to fear from the Chamber of Commerce. A man who can't come in for lack of money needn't fear an increase of public spirit in his fellow citizens.

"To advertise your city you may spend a great deal or you may spend but little. Des Moines recently spent for magazine space $3,000 per year and then paid an advertising man to fill the space. Your publicity, I believe, lies more in your ability to do something that the country wants to know about more than in placing a small folder in an envelope. If you do the unusual thing the whole world will come and take a look at you.

"A text book of your city placed in your schools will do much to spread abroad Fulton's good points. A bulletin of the Chamber each month is a method used in many places. If you tell alone each year the story of one success in business in your city you will spread the gospel of Fulton success. You cannot keep a good story. It is bound to go. The town that does unusual things gets talked about. If Fulton will solve some vital point the whole country will turn its eyes upon you."

Mr. Wilson believes the "beaten path" will lead to Fulton if we can show our neighbor a better way.

Tomorrow the captains will again report. Luncheon will be served promptly at 12:15. Any Fultonian who has not previously been able to attend these gathering should seek the opportunity before the close of the week.

Following is list of names of men who have paid for memberships since yesterday's noonday luncheon:

What a Chamber of Commerce Worker Says

"Not so many years ago Chambers of Commerce were "resolutin' bodies." It was the habit of a small group of men, fond of argument or publicity, to meet and to solmenly pass 'resolutions' advocating or denouncing measures that came before them. Having thus formally expressed their opinions it was the further habit to go home and forget all about it. The 'good citizens' had spoken! Their dignity —or indifference—prevented them from doing more!

"In the light of modern efficiency such methods are absurd. Yet there are still hundreds of Chambers of Commerce in these United States that presist in following the old practice and wonder why their towns do not respond to such alleged leadership.

"In a community that has plodded along with a 'resolutin' citizens' association' it is very hard to make the people at large appreciate the possibilities that lie in a change. Someone may propose some good civic improvement. 'There's no use,' is the greating given the idea, the Chamber of Commerce endorsed that two years ago and nothing ever came of it.' And the melancholy part of it is that a large part of the public are thereby discouraged, not stopping to realize that 'endorsing amounts to almost nothing—if it begins and ends with a single formal utterance which few ever read.

"Any idea, old or new, is merely negative, unless it gets somebody into action. The worth of an idea is its dynamic force. The chamber of Commerce is the medium through which dynamic ideas work their change upon the community. Without the organization, without the machinery, the public cannot be brought into a working contact with the thought of the leaders."

18,000 Germans Slain at Neuve Chapelle

London, March 17.—The estimate of German losses in the Neuve Chapelle area from March 10 to March 13, placed by the British observer at the front at 17,000 to 18,000 clearly indicates the desperate character of the fighting last week in this sector. This estimate is arrived at by a count of the dead left on the field when the Germans were driven from the village to new positions on the east.

The semi-weekly report of operations, recently made a feature of the War Office, was issued last night by the Official Information Bureau and reads:

"Since the last announcement of March 11 the operations in the neighborhood of Neuve Chapelle have been continued. The line captured on March 10 and 11 to the east of that village has been consolidated and held in spite of repeated efforts on the part of the enemy to retake it. During the night of March 11-12 and in the early morning of the 12th several counter attacks to the east of Neuve Chapelle were repulsed and sixty prisoners were captured.

"The same night a skilfully managed enterprise to the east of Amentieres resulted in the capture by us of the village of La Pinette will small loss. The possession of this village advances our lines in this quarter 300 yards on a front 800 yards wide.

"Fighting in the Neuve Chapelle area was very severe on March 12. A strong counter attack by Germans in the afternoon was repulsed and 612 morep risoners were taken. The Germans continued to deliver minor counter attacks during the night of March 12-13 and throughout the 13th. In no case did they succeed in recapturing any of the ground they lost.

"On March 14 the fighting was confined mainly to the artillery.

"The prisoners in our hands taken since March 10 number 1,700, of whom thirty are officers. Judging from the number of dead counted on the ground, the total German losses during the operations from March 10 to March 13 about Neuve Chapelle cannot be less than 17,000 or 18,000.

"During the evening of March 14 the enemy stormed some of our trenches to the south of St. Eloi after a heavy bombardment and the explosion of a mine. The greater portion of these trenches was recaptured this morning. The fighting in this area continues.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

FRENCH

Paris, via London.—The following official communication was issued by the French War Office today:

"On the night of March 15-16 the enemy attempted to recapture trenches which he had lost on the spur of Notre Dame de Lorette. He was repulsed and we made additional prisoners.

"In Champagne, in the region of Perthes, we exploded a mine chamber this morning and occupied the excavation, which became the center of a very sharp struggle and which we now hold. Some progress has been realized to the north of Beausejour.

"In the Argonne the same night the Germans delivered counter attacks between Four de Paris and Bolante, as well as at Vauquois. They were all repulsed. Three counter attacks by the enemy in the forest of Le Pretre were easily repulsed.

Following is the afternoon statement:

"In the Champagne fresh progress has been made to the northeast of Souain. In the forest of Le Pretre we have recaptured from the Germans the remainder of the trenches won by them yesterday morning; or, to be more precise the site of these trenches for defensive works has been completely shattered by mine explosions.

"On the southern slope of Great Reich Ackerkopf an attack by the enemy yesterday morning carried a trench. We have retaken it and made some prisoners."

GERMAN

Berlin, (by Wireless Telegraphy to Sayville, L.I.)—The German War Office gave out today a report on the progress of the fighting, which is dated March 16 and which reads as follows:

"The English position on the height near St. Eloi, south of Ypres, has been taken by the Germans. Fighting for the possession of this location has been going on since the day before yesterday.

"On the southern slope of the Lorette hills, to the northwest of Arras, fighting is going on for the possession of the crest of a hill.

"In the Champagne district several partial attacks delivered by French

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

TO-DAY.

SOME people loll around in gloom, in sorrow and dismay, and howl about the wasted past and ill spent yesterday. Forget the past, I say, by heck! Be happy, free and gay, and live hard while the living's good—just live your life to-day. We've only got one life to live, one little act to play, one little ray of light to give, a little while to stay. Forget to-morrow and the past, and grab your chance to-day—just let your searchlight blaze forth like a firefly in May. Don't whine about that bygone chance, or wail alack-a-day! Don't let gloom get the upper hand—be like a bear at bay. When old Pop Sorrow comes around—just knock him to the clay—just upper-cut him to the sod and make the critter stay. That bright smile under lock and key—that good time stored away—may never have another chance to burst forth in display. Now what's the use of living in the future when you may as well begin to live your life this minute, right away? You'll get the opportunities and chances ev'ry day, if you'll but take the hint, my friend, and cheave the rugged way. Those airy castles never may materialize, and, say, your life is growing shorter ev'ry single blessed day. So come to life—get on the job—give ear unto my lay:—Just let those future visions and the gloomy past decay. 'Tis dangerous, my valued friend, to linger or delay—forget to-morrow and the past and live your life to-day.

Opinions

Rose Bushes Cheap and Costly

As not a few roses are grown within the limits of Greater New York, and they are to be found in the gardens of practically every commuter, there will be a lot of local interest in the controversy which has been started by the writer in the Sunday Times who called attention to the fact that rose bushes can be bought for 15 and even 10 cents apiece. This showed, he said, that the cultivation of the queenly flowers need not involve much expense for anybody with a little land on which to grow them. His statement, however, was taken by one of our readers as implying criticism of the nurserymen who charge much higher prices for their roses, and he hastened to protest against the implication and to proclaim that the more expensive plants are worth enough more than the cheap ones to make the purchase of the latter poor economy.

Now, whether one should pay much or little for his rose bushes depends a good deal on what one wants and on the size of his purse. Bought with knowledge and discretion, and handled with some knowledge of gardening, a good many of the cheap plants will produce, in two years or so, flowers satisfactory as to both quantity and quality for the amateur whose yearn is not for the best of the newer varieties. They will not content—they will even be scorned by—the grower whose taste is more advanced, and they will not take any prizes at the shows, but for others they will give a large return on a small investment.

For people who can afford to be more discriminating, the costlier plants are certainly the better worth buying. Their higher prices are justified by their size and condition on arrival, and merely because some rose bushes can be bought for 10 and 15 cents apiece, nobody should suspect theg rowers who charge ten or twenty times as much of being robbers. They supply a different market and usually give full value for money received.

A more edifying controversy, perhaps, would be as to the relative merit, from the aesthetic point of view, of roses "double" and roses "single." As a rule any sort of a "double" nower is a poor, characterless thing, but the case of the rose is exceptional and only the botanist sees it in its familiar form as the monstrosity and degenerate it certainly is.—Times, N. Y.

Price of Newspapers

In the course of an interview by the Fourth Estate with a prominent daily newspaper publisher this week on the subject of business conditions and their effect on newspapers the question of what the publishers are going to do about it was brought up. Immediately the publisher's answer was that one cent newspapers should increase their price to at least two cents. He advanced reasons why they should make this move and suggested a method for doing it succesfully.

Here is what this publisher (who requested that his name be not mentioned) said:

"A careful review of the newspaper conditions of the entire country shows that the business depression attributed to the war and several other causes has greatly affected the financial condition of most publications for the last eight months. In fact if reports are true, danger confronts some publications, and proprietors or publishers in general are giving much thought as to what is best to be done to improve present conditions. Operating expenses have been greatly decreased and the working organizations' reduced to a minimum, but the auditors' reports in some publication offices for the last two months, January and February, show little or no improvement over the bad results averaged for the last five months of 1914.

"Some thought has been given to the advisability of increasing the advertising rates, but this cannot be done. The average merchant or advertiser has found it necessary to cut down his copy for such publications as were favored and thec ut down was necessary as a matter of economy. Therefore, as the advertisers cannot affard the cost of the usual copy, it seems a certainty that they would not consider an increase in rates.

"The question then arises:—What can the newspaper proprietor do to meet the situation?

"The only logical solution of the present trouble seems to be for the one cent newspapers to go to two cents. A well known newspaper man is authority for the statement that this could be done overnight on morning and evening papers circulated within the metropolitan territory and the result would not show a twenty-five per cent loss in circulation. That such action would be of great benefit to the one cent paper is proven by the fact that a newspaper having a 200,000 circulation within the metropolitan territory, and at present selling for sixty per hundred, would naturally make the wholesale rate to newsdealers $1.25 per 100, and thisadditional fraction of a cent would increase the sales revenue approximately $7,000 for the six days or about $365,000 per year. This action could not be considered a hardship by the reading public, as during the last few years newspaper offices have been compelled to suffer a decided increase in the cost of labor in all of the mechanical, mailing and delivery departments. As advertising rates cannot be increased to meet such expenses it seems absolutely necessary for protective purposes that the one cent papers, both morning and evening, go to two cents. Some of the New York newspaper proprietors, as well as many throughout the country, would welcome such an opportunity, and if a unanimous arrangement could be agreed to the risk would be minimized and the result would be most beneficial to the publishers in general as well as acceptable to the advertisers and the public."—Fourth Estate.

Romance of the Sea

Germany has supplied the romance about this greatest war of all time. It is master of the air and under the seas and one must go to our own Paul Jones to rival its daring on the water. The appearance of the Prinz Eitel Friedrich at Newport News, where she took refuge after seven months' activity as a rover gives a thrill to those who go down to the sea in ships. It is little less than marvelous that this converted transport liner could so long dodge the armadas of the Allies, elude their fast ships in search and with regularity at short intervals send merchantmen of the enemy to the bottom. Devoid of armor, with guns which are a joke compared with modern armament and less speedy than the Allies' cruisers, the rover sailed the seas immune until forced for needed repairs to seek a harbor of refuge. The fact that the daring captain brings as his cargo 350 prisoners of war ought to supply a fine feature for the plot of the novelist who is to write the story of sea daring and to enlarge upon the magic which makes men who sail the sea the bravest of the brave.—Standard, Watertown.

ABOLISHING BEN LINDSEY

Various attempts to get rid of Judge Ben B. Lindsey, of the juvenile court in Denver, have come to naught. The Colorado Legislature seems to be lending itself to the latest one, which is to abolish the court over which he presides, for the lower house has passed three bills for that purpose. It is greatly to be hoped that this will prove as futile as the political attacks on him have been heretofore.

The value of special courts for children is generally admitted today. Judge Lindsey was among the pioneers in this branch of work for humanity, and the success of his methods in reclaiming wayward children has been heralded all over the country. His fellow townspeople have voted on it several times and have paid him the tribute of handsome majorities.

As to the desirability of getting rid of Ben Lindsey now, they, of course, must be the judges. There can be no question whatever of the undesirability of abolishing his court. Such a step would be even more reactionary than the political and economic conditions which came to light during Colorado's coal strike.—N. Y. Tribune.

SERVICE RENDERED

"Money comes incidently to a service rendered—not by grabbing for it," says a present day writer.

Prosperity, then on the same plan, comes incidently to a service rendered. Public service is the highest plane for man to rise in helpfulness, and the measure of such service is the spirit in which the service is rendered.

The business world has awakened from its grabbing lethargy and in its stead the Golden Rule is being practiced. Many times the pessimist flings out the retort that such practice is for purely selfish ends only, but the fact remains that good is done which after all is the point in view.

The men who today are neglecting to add to the membership list of the Chamber of Commerce their names are neglecting an opportunity to help their city, and so in turn their own personal interest. No person can join a force working toward some good end and not gain some thing which in itself is better than gold—an enlarged manhood or womanhood.

Money in itself is not of supreme value; the joy in service is of greater moment, for by such is the mission of mankind fulfilled.

Money comes incidently to a service rendered, and this city needs our service now, this day, this hour. The call is on.

UNITE TO OPPOSE AUTOMOBILE BILL

New York—In a statement issued by R. H. Johnston, president of the Automobile Trade Association of New York State, announced that automobile dealers and owners have joined to oppose the Hewitt-Sullivan bill, now before the Legislature, which provides for doubling the registration fees of motor vehicles in the State. Mr. Johnston's statement follows in part:

"The automobile users of the State as well as the automobile trade are in arms against the proposal to double the registration fees on motor vehicles.

"The automobile interests of the State are unalterably opposed to the proposed bill and to the principles on which it is based. Our position has always been that the use of the highways is a natural, common law right, and the Legislature cannot single out any one class of users of the highways for taxation and let the other classes of users escape taxation. We have always contended, and still contend, that any registration fee which is in excess of the cost of maintaining the bureau or department which does the work of registration, is unconstitutional.

"The lawmakers of the State have many times recognized the strength of our contention, and when the present law was passed five years ago it was the result of a compromise between all parties interested. The legislators agreed that the fees therein imposed should not be increased thereafter and we on our part agreed not to contest the law in the courts. It is certainly a breach of good faith for the Legislature to attempt to raise the fees in violation of this agreement.

"The bill increasing the fees probably would not stand a test in any court. According to the terms of the bill, the amount of taxation on any given motor vehicle is based upon six different considerations, namely, first, the horse power rating; second, whether the motive power is gasoline or electric; third, whether or not the vehicle is used for commercial purposes; fourth, whether the load consists of passengers or freight; fifth, the weight of the machine, and sixth, whether or not the machine is four years old. Not one of the six factors mentioned has been considered by the courts as a proper basis for determining taxation. Automobile laws have been declared unconstitutional in Ohio, Florida, Michigan and other States on points similar to those incorporated in thep roposed legislation.

"We shall continue our opposition to the bill and believe that it will be defeated."

State Grange Scholarships

The State Grange has appropriated $600 to pay for twelve scholarships at Cornell University. These scholarships will be awarded by competitive examination based on a general knowledge of Arithmetic, Geography, History and English Composition. Examinations are to be held in each county by the Master of Pomona at such place in the county as he may designate, on the third Saturday in June. Anyone 17 years of age, or older, and a member in good standing of any Subordinate Grange, desiring to enter said competition, shall apply to the Master of Pomona Grange in his or her County (or in case the County has no Pomona, to the County Deputy). Said Pomona Master (or Deputy) will then make requisition on the Secretary of State Grange for the examination papers to supply his applicants, and papers which will be sent to him, sealed. At the date of opened by the applicant in presence of the Committee, questions answered, and placed in sealed envelopes, and sent on day of examination to Secretary of State Grange. These papers will then be examined and graded by the undersigned committee and scholarships will be awarded, in order of grade.

These scholarships are $50 each, and will be paid the successful applicant as soon as work is begun at the College, and a certification to that effect has been filed with the Secretary of State Grange. Said certification to be countersigned by the Secretary of College of Agriculture.

Only The Plan That Fails Must Be Explained

IT requires but little effort to show what you have accomplished, and usually you can show by the use of any amount of effort why a thing has not been accomplished. The results of a year's work can be written on the back of a postage stamp.

The results of a plan that has involved the expenditure of thousands of dollars, the application of years of experience and many days and nights of incessant work can be written in a few figures or in a single line.

Results require no diagram, no encyclopedia, no soothsayer, no priest, and no teacher. In the Marathon Race held sometime since at Stockholm, there were two entries from South Africa, and these two athletes won first and second honors. On their return to South Africa there was nothing to explain; no excuses were necessary, there were no reasons to be submitted for their having failed. The record stood and what they had accomplished answered everything; and their having won the race explained more than could have been explained either by speeches or by written words.

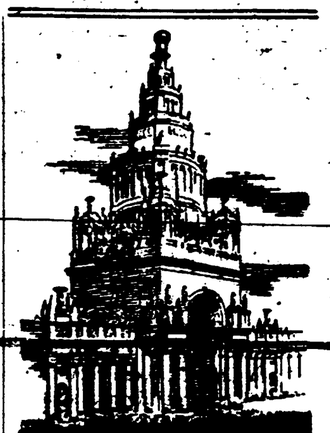
Along the pathway over which we travel, we leave many exploded fancies, discarded ideas, and our route of travel is lined with the tombstones of personal preference, with the tombstones of sacred opinions and the tombstones of precedent.

There are a thousand excuses we may render for the failure of a plan, for the failure of an idea, or for the failure of an individual, and it is always necessary to explain misfortune, but success explains itself.

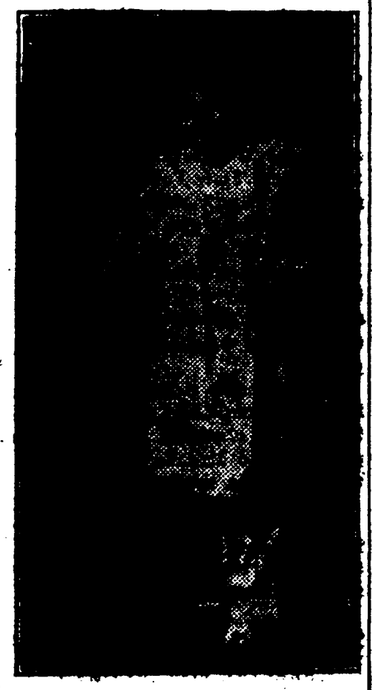
Nature has found it necessary to discard and abandon many of her original plans. Conditions changed, and other things were changed by the law of adaptation in order that these new conditions might be met.

It is equally necessary for us to abandon any plan, regardless of how sacred it may be to us, that will not produce the results which the plan was intended to produce. One man who can do that which he is selected to do is worth a thousand men who arrive within striking distance, but who are not able to actually accomplish the thing.

It has been my experience that too much time is spent in explaining what we are going to do, and later in explaining why it was not done. The man who accomplishes the most is the man who goes quietly on his way and does that which his work demands of him, while others are making speeches, holding committee meetings, pounding the desk with their fists, and puffing violently at a "company" cigar.



The man who can do things goes quietly about his work and gets it done, without announcing the fact to his neighbors and to those about the place who are not concerned—while the man who is a theorist and who is afraid to be measured by his ability to produce results, attends banquets and makes speeches about it.



OUR EXPORTS

Nearly All of the Ports Have Some Particular Specialty.

The volume of foreign commerce which passed through the various custom districts of the United States in the following memorandum prepared in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce. Owing to the re-organization of the customs service, effective at the beginning of the fiscal year 1914, comparisons with earlier years are not available, but comparing December, 1914, with the correesponding period of the preceding year, it is known that considerable increases in exports occurred at the ports of New York, Galveston, New Orleans, Baltimore, Boston, and Philadelphia in the closing months of the year.

New York, which does about forty per cent. of the country's export business, handles practically all lines of merchandise. Galveston, second in point of export sales, handles chiefly cotton, cotton seed oil cake and meal, wheat, flour and rice. New Orleans is not only a great cotton market, but an important distributor of wheat, flour, mineral oil, lumber, meat products, cotton seed oil, oil cake, rice and tobacco. Baltimore, fourth in value of exports, handles wheat and other grains, iron and steel, leaf tobacco, copper and many lines of manufactures. Detroit, the fifth largest exporting center, is an important seller of automobiles and carriages, hides fruits, oils, lumber, iron and steel, meats and miscellaneous manufacturures. Buffalo is a great shipper of iron products, coal and mineral oils. Boston exports chiefly leather manufactures, meat, printing paper and wheat. Philadelphia, which is the eighth in point of exports, ships chiefly prains and flour, coal, leather, meat products, kerosene oil and miscellaneous manufactures. San Francisco, ninth in export sales, is a leading exporter of fruits, salmon, cotton, iron and steel, and leather goods, and ships largely of oils to the orinental countries. The district of Georgia, with headquarters at Savannah, exports a large quantity of cotton and cotton seed oil cake and is the leading export market for naval stores. Seattle and Tacoma are important distributors of canned salmon, cotton, lumber, oil, grains and automobiles. Norfolk and Newport News are great coal shipping points. Tampa and other Florida points handle most of the phosphates and a considerable share of the naval stores, tobacco and lumber exported. Port Arthur exports largely of cotton, cotton seed cake, wheat and mineral oils, and is the leading exporter of sulphur.

"STILWELL BILL" REAPPEARS

Senator George F. Thompson Introduces a Measure Defeated Three Times

New York, March 17.—"Every year for the last four years, some legislator has been misled into introducing a bill, emanating from the same source, to make it impossible for any one to be cared for in any hospital or sanatorium of any nature whatever, without first going to the Superintendent of the Poor, and laying before him his full family history and all the resources of his family and his relatives" says the S. C. A. A. News.

"Two years ago the bill was introduced by ex-Senator J. Stilwell. It was introduced last year, and again it was defeated, never being reported out of committee. Nothing daunted, however the statesman who originally framed the policy which he is so active in pressing, persuaded Senator George F. Thompson, of Niagara County, to adopt the waif."

The "Statesman" referred to is understood to be Mr. Charles E. Weisz, ex-deputy fiscal supervisor, who for reasons best known to Fiscal Supervisor Mallery, was separated from his office and who is spending much of his time about the legislative halls.

"It is almost impossible to believe that Senator Thompson could have understood the effect of the bill.

"The measure has been referred to the Judiciary Committee, of which Senator Henry J. Walters, of Onondaga county, is chairman. We venture to predict that it will not be difficult to convince Senator Walters' committee of the following facts:

"1. Health is not charity, and should in no way be confused with it.

"2. A sick man, so far as the community is concerned, is merely a patient and not a pauper.

"3. For the protection of the community the sick should be cared for, and a patient should not be subjected to the indignity of applying to the Superintendent of the Poor for a certification of the fact that he has, or has not sufficient funds to pay for his maintenance.

"4. The admission of patients to contagious disease hospitals needs to be facilitated as much as possible; certainly it should not be hampered by the annoying investigation of an official who has nothing whatever to do with the care of the patient.

"5. This bill is based on the assumption that the discovery of whether or not a person is able to pay for his maintenance is a highly technical matter, requiring great skill and long training. As a matter of fact, it is simplicity in itself, and is done every day by every corner grocer and market man who discovers for himself whether or not his patrons are able to pay their bills.

"Any one of these reasons should be convincingp roof to any person of intelligence that Senate Bill print 904, Int. 818, should be defeated, but readers of the News are urged to present their views of the matter to Senator Walters, addressing him at the Capitol."

Woman's World

Renaissance In Art Predicted After War In Europe Is Over.

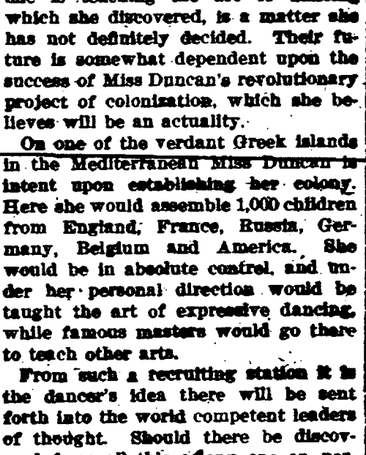
ISADORA DUNCAN.

Art of the centuries destroyed by the ravages of war, culture stunned by Martian blows—where will the world of the future turn to seek inspiration and direction in the great arts when Europe's titanic struggle shall have finished?

Isadora Duncan, famous classic dancer, believes a renaissance of art, greater than the awakening after the dark ages, will follow in the path of war, rising phoenix-like from the ashes of the conflict of nations. Only as the present generation may aid in encouraging and showing the way to the next will the men and women of today participate in the revival, Miss Duncan believes. It will be the children of today and the children's children on whom will rest the toil of rebuilding, the joy of recreating. Miss Duncan, striking in unexpected fields, has come forward with an original suggestion; one which she firmly believes will be developed by herself, with the aid of others, into a possibility and eventually into a worldwide movement for peace and the arts.

When the European war broke out, leaving her school of dancing, near Paris, Miss Duncan volunteered as a nurse in French hospitals, having first dispatched to this country under competent chaperonage more than a score of children who were her pupils. A few months ago she followed them to this country.

Just where she will continue her work with these little folk, to whom she is teaching the art of dancing which she discovered, is a matter she has not definitely decided. Their future is somewhat dependent upon the success of Miss Duncan's revolutionary project of colonization, which she believes will be an actuality.



On one of the verdant Greek islands in the Mediterranean Miss Duncan is intent upon establishing her colony. Here she would assemble 1,000 children from England, France, Russia, Germany, Belgium and America. She would be in absolute control, and under her personal direction would be taught the art of expressive dancing, while famous masters would go there to teach other arts.

From such a recruiting station it is the dancer's idea there will be sent forth into the world competent leaders of thought. Should there be discovered from all this colony one or, perhaps, two or three children touched by the magic wand of genius, then, Miss Duncan believes, the venture would have more than justified itself in the opinion of future centuries. Another Michelangelo, another Leonardo da Vinci, another Wagner or Beethoven or, perchance, a Shakespeare or a Goethe may rise from such a community.

silk, the brim faced smoothly and joined to the crown by a twisted roll of the silk. A jet spearlike ornament thrust through a rosette of the silk is the only ornament this perky little hat appears to require.

Good Form

Arriving at Afternoon Parties.

A point that should be carefully borne in mind concerning an afternoon or evening reception where music or some such entertainment is provided for guests is that should a number be progressing when a guest arrives he or she should wait for it to be finished before entering the room; otherwise the whole company will be disturbed.

When the hours named are, say, from 3 to 5 many delay arrival until 4, and the greatest crowd will be found between 4 and 5 o'clock. If well acquainted with the hostess or ladies in the receiving line it is just as well to time arrival earlier, so the rooms will not be crowded. If the guests are well known very enjoyable chats can be had with many friends and acquaintances rarely seen.

Where any games are named, cards or anything of that sort, guests should be extremely careful to arrive a little before the hour. Nothing so annoys a hostess as to have her carefully arranged plans go for naught on account of a belated guest. She has probably planned refreshments for a certain hour; also she feels that the punctual guests are uncomfortable, and lastly the well bred person is always punctual, that being the virtue of kings.

Avoid Mannerisms.

The "slinker" slouch, the "pump handle" shake and the excessive use of slang even in smart circles are being frowned upon these days.

Perhaps it is that we have advanced sufficiently in common sense to regard these hardly human social peculiarities as showing nothing more than a lack of good breeding. Whatever the cause, the natural manner is now regarded as the "thing."

Naturalness, after all, has a charm which affectation can never attain. When we meet a person who displays a perfectly natural manner, is charming, vivacious in her own, not any one else's, way, we are so delighted that invariably the possessor of these natural manners is regarded as a woman of peculiar fascination, and yet any one can be natural if one will. There lies the trouble—"if one will." It is most difficult to be oneself—not to imitate others. It is so easy to pick up the forms of speech, the affectations of manner which our associates display, so easy and so dangerous to the cultivation of a natural charm. It is human nature to imitate and to imitate the bad as well as the good. But once good habits of thought are formed the problem solves itself.

Pets In the Drawing Room.

"I used often to have my dogs in the drawing room when guests were expected," said a hostess, who is a dog lover. "I thought them distinctly ornamental lying on the rug before the fire.

"One was a bull, whose face belied his gentle nature. The other was a Pom, who, despite his habit of yapping furiously, would not hurt a fly.

"It did not strike me that strangers might be afraid of my pets. But one day when I went into the drawing room I discovered a nervous caller, positively too frightened to move from the spot whence she had first caught sight of my bull's ugly face. I often had to suppress a smile at the frantic barking of my Pom, but I discovered that to some people it was no joke.

"So I resolved that on at home days and like occasions my pets should be rigidly excluded from the drawing room; also from the front doormat, because a lady told me that once when she found them both 'lying in wait' for her there she took to her heels and ran away."

Correct Way to Introduce.

There is an art in introducing correctly. First of all, an introduction must be made in a clear, understandable voice. It is an insult to your hearers to mumble your words and slur over the names of strangers who are being presented to each other. It is a slight and suggests either an ignorance of the importance of the introduction or a lack of interest in this duty. So, above all things, when you mention the names of strangers to each other mention them so that there will be no doubt about these names, about the married or single state and about the relationship which may exist between them and you.

Always present a gentleman to a lady, mentioning the lady's name first, unless the man is very elderly or very famous and the lady is a very young girl.

If Asked to a Wedding.

When invited to a church wedding and not to the reception following, it is not necessary to send a present to the bride, but a call is made on the bride on her at home day a month or two after the wedding.

While cards announcing the marriage of a couple do not require an answer, carefully courteous persons will call on the parents of the bride a week or so after receiving it.

It is not necessary to send a written reply to a wedding invitation unless the cards include a breakfast or luncheon at the home of the bride or bear the letters R. S. V. P., indicating that an answer would be appreciated.

MODISH MOIRE COAT.

A Fabric Which Is Recurrently Fashionable Shown In New Guise.

FANCIFUL EASTER STYLE.

The coat shown in this illustration is built of black silk moire. It is cut with rippling skirt, the ripples mostly at the sides. The sleeves are long and full, the fullness held in at the wrists by narrow bands of silk braid. The collar is of white satin cut sailor fashion and trimmed with braid. The jaunty hat is of white tagal straw ornamented with a wreath of red cherries.

SILK FRUITS FOR TRIMMING.

Make Them at Home and Cut Down the Cost.

Silk fruit in pale colors, silk fruit in intense colors or, for that matter, silk fruit in any color will continue to be a most popular trimming this spring. Purchased at a shop, the prices are prohibitive for many girls; but, made at home, the cost is proportionately nothing.

Circles of silk or kid, firmly packed with cotton and drawn up snug, is the recipe. Add a French knot, drawing the silk thread all the way through the fruit so that it flattens if correctly, and fasten the thread tightly to the other side, or, in gold or green silk or some contrasting color, work a tiny circle in chain stitch (before filling with cotton); then fill and draw up the cover. In the center of the circle place a French knot and tighten firmly to the opposite side.

Laces to Be Used.

Nets, first of all, in the all over laces will be in great demand for dresses and accessories for the smartest of spring and summer frocks. The nets of great modish prominence are the filets. Those samples already received from foreign markets are supplemented by those of domestic manufacture, which compare very favorably with the foreign product. For instance, in those which duplicate the weave of Brussels nets the imitation is perfect. In those where pearled edges are desirable factors even these are accomplished.

Combinations of chantilly and filet are to be featured. These will be especially desired in white, ecru and in black. Black applique laces will be in vogue.

HOUSEHOLD SPICE.

A man cannot serve two masters even when he's master of his own house.

Did you ever hear of a woman being so absentminded that she forgot her own trouble?

Don't try to be happy without making others happy. Only way.

A woman's fears are always ahead of danger.

The kitchen is the chief temple wherein we worship, its roaring fire is our vestal flame, and the cook is our great high priest.

Love is a fire, but you have to keep putting fresh chips on it to keep it going. If you don't somebody else will.

Don't trust a girl, however pretty, if her heart is as cold as a dog's nose.

The more polite two women are to each other the less they love each other.

The wise wife never insists on having her way. She merely takes it and says nothing.

"What do the suffragettes want, anyhow?" "We want to sweep the country, dad." "Well, do not despise small beginnings. Suppose you make a start with the dining room, my dear."

Wait Paint

There are painters and waiters. Which am I going to do? Paint or wait?

Which is better?

How much am I worth with my property waiting? How much if I paint? Will my house be worth more or less if I paint?

Say it costs $2 a gallon Devoe—I wouldn't paint any other—and $3 or $4 more for putting it on. That's $50 or $60 a 10-gallon job.

The money is gone. Is it in the house? Is it all in the house?

Suppose I were selling; what should I get for that house fresh-painted and what should I get for it needing-paint?

I wonder why men paint before selling!

LOCAL TALENT FOR BENEFIT

The High School Pupils Will Give a Benefit at the Quirk on April 15 and 16

Each of the schools in the city has planned and is now rehearsing for the entertainment to be given at The Quirk on April 15 and 16 for the joint benefit of the public library and the high school athletic association. Over four hundred pupils will take part.

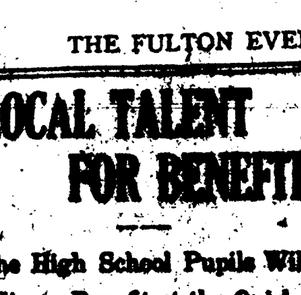
The high school orchestra is under the instruction and leadership of Mrs. L. R. Olcott.

Mrs. Lora White Kesler, teacher of elocution in the high school, has a short sketch to be given by post graduates entitled "Obstinacy," and a minuet dance by twenty-four high school students.

Miss E. May Thompson, supervisor of music, is training a girls' chorus of twenty members and the Glee Club of twenty-five members in appropriate selections.

A Good Night Drill with songs will be given by pupils in 1st, 2d and 3d grades and Ye Olde Songs with pantomimes by fifty pupils of the 4th, 5th, 6th and 8th grades of the Fourth st. school.

The members of the teachers' training class will present a military drill. Pupils at school will contribute folk dances which will include a Swedish song play; a shoemaker's dance, and a Danish dance.



A minuet will be danced by pupils from the Erie st. school.

State st. school has the first orchestra ever organized by a grade school in Fulton. There are seven members and they will play a selection on the stage. In addition to this about fifty pupils from this school will give the chorus and song, "The Boggie Man."

A dramatization of Cinderella will be given by twenty-four pupils from the 2d, 6th and 7th grades of the Oak st. school.

Academy st. school will give: (a) The Tinkers' Chorus; (b) The Sunbonnet Babies and Overall Boys.

The Walradt St. school pupils will contribute its share toward making this a most entertaining program

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By Frederic T. Cardoze

Albany, March 17.—State Comptroller Eugene M. Travis is going to be the middleman in the controversy which is being waged by Governor Charles S. Whitman and Former Governor Martin H. Glynn relative to the condition of the financial condition of the State.

For the past few weeks taxpayers have been somewhat confounded over the contradictory statements of the present and the former executives with regard to a matter of eleven millions or so which Governor Glynn claims to have saved and which Governor Whitman insists were spent. To the aid of both governors have come men of legislative and financial experience and thus has the verbal battle been made more complex than simplifid.

Recently there came up from New York city several expert accountants who spent the best part of two weeks examining the books of the State comptrolled. The experts came from the office of Comptroller Pendergast and it was stated when they arrived that their missionw as to determine just how much the city of New York contributed to the revenue derived from this method. The same experts have returned to the metropolis and their report has caused Comptroller Pendergast to declare that a direct tax is needed. It would consequently appear that Governor Whitman is right in his declaration that far too much money was spent by the administration of 1914.

On top of this comes the announcement that State Comptroller Travis is preparing a statement as to the finances of the State, wha they were before the Glynn administration and what they are at the present time. It is said that Comptroller Travis will show thatb oth Governors Whitman and Glynn are in a measure right. In a word, the true condition of affairs when made public is expected to bring to light the fact that the funds of the people were most adroitly conjured with — legitimately conjured with—so as to make a good showing for the Democratic administration. The Republicans repeated the act.

There is no chance at all of a public scandal because what was done was a thing of cleverness which necessitated rare intelligence and a broad knowledge of high finance. To give Governor Glynn's sur ordinates the benefit of the doubt, they may have acted entirely without intent to misrepresent maters.

The above sentence is the way Republicans analyse the situation. Democrats reiterate their declaration that Glynn is right and that Whitman is wrong.

Comptroller Travis is at present silent as to what he is about to disclose. Only a few ever knew that he is threashing things out preparatory to coming out with an interesting digest of what his examiners have unearthed, as it were. Those who claim to have seen the document, already in preparation, say that Comptroller Travis is entirely unbiased and that he grst scores a point for the former governor and then one for the present executive.

Urgent as the need for a direct tax has been declared by Governor Whitman to be, legislation levying one has as yet not been passed. This fact is interpreted by some to indicate that the governor has been waiting the report of Comptroller Travis Some go so far as to say that he requested the information.

SWEET'S COMPENSATION MEASURE AGREED UPON

Albany—A workmen's compensation bill carrying a direct settlement plan which, it is believed, will be favorable to a majority of the conference committee of the Legislature was formulated in a conference of Republican Assemblymen Tuesday. It is a measure that Speaker Sweet has been endorsing, and would provide for employer and employe settlements subject to the compensation commission's review. Casualty companies would be eliminated from participating in settlements.

Under the bill an injured workman may submit to his employer 14 days after he is hurt a proposition for a settlement. f both parties reach an agreement it is to be written on a blank furnished by the compensation commission. Should the commission decide, upon reviewing the agreement that the workman has not obtained justice, it may make a new award. The amount of the compensation would be in accordance with the law as it now stands.

This bill does not differ materially from one tentatively suggested by Senator Sage, father of the original compensation bill in which the Assembly refused to concur. It carries an appropriation of $425,000 to meet the expenses of the commission until next October 1st, as did the Sage bill. John Leo Sullivan, who has persistently refused to agree to any form of direct settlement and who was a member of the Assembly sub-committee that was to draw up the compensation bill led the opposition in the conference last night. It was said that the vote in favor of the measure was about six to one.

PENNSYLVANIA SENATE PASSES SUFFRAGE BILL

COURT'S TERM CLOSED TUESDAY

Decker-Mack-Pulver Case Lost Before Adjournment of March Session

Justice Edgar C. Emerson in Supreme Court late yesterday directed a verdict in favor of the plaintiff in the case of Maude Decker and James Mack against William Pulver for ejectment.

The plaintiffs, brother and sister of Jennie Pulver, who died at the village of Minetto on January 1, 1902, were by the verdict successful in their effort to eject the defendant, husband of Jennie Pulver, from property left by her in the town of Oswego.

They also asked for $1,400 damages, rental at $20 a month from November 8, 1907, to November 8, 1913, when the action was started.

The defendant in the ejectment case is an elderly man and is suffering from cancer. His physical condition appears to be serious and he was not required to take the stand when examined, being permitted to sit near the clerk's desk facing the jury. The plaintiffs are relatives of Mr. Pulver's late wife, he being her second husband, and claim ownership of thep roperty in question in the town of Granby by heirship rights

Mr. Pulver asserted that he is the owner of the property in question, the land being purchased by Mrs. Pulver and he building the house. The deed was drawn by Justice of the Peace John F. Brown of Minetto and it is alleged that although it was intended that both should be tenants in the entirety this clause was left out.

Mr. Pulver testified that he earned the money to purchase the property and that prior to his wife's death papers were drawn to vest the title in both husband and wife. The papers were defective, but the defendant contended that the intent was apparent and asked the brother and sister, plaintiffs, be compelled to give up a quit claim deed to the defendant

The plaintiffs being relatives of Jennie Pulver, the defendant's late wife, he being her second husband, contended that they were the owners of the property by heirship right.

At the completion of the case Justice Emerson adjourned the term sine die. Although the court was in session sixteen days only a few cases out of a total of eighty on the calendar were disposed of.

The case of Mary E. Wolz and Katharine Ryan vs. Francis J. O'Brien was dismissed on motion of the defendant's attorney, D. P. Morehouse. This action was for damages for injuries alleged to have resulted from driving into an excavation for water mains on an east side street last summer. It was stated that the complaint had been withdrawn.

An inquest was taken in the case of Albert and Onna Southworth vs. John Kennedy, and a judgment for $170.42 returned in favor of the plaintiff.

The case of Walter T. Rinker and Ulysses Lewis vs. John F. Bresemer was put over the term.

The action to set aside the will of Patrick McCriskin has been put over the term.

F. G. Spencer of Fulton represented the plaintiffs and Judge C. N. Bulger appeared for the defendant.

VOLNEY PAPER CO.'S SUIT AGAINST RAG MAN

An order for a bill of particulars to be given the defendant by the plaintiff in the action of the Volney Paper Company vs. Peter C. Campbell, was filed in the County Clerk's office yesterday. Justice Andrews signed the order and a memoradum accompanies it detailing the subjects to be particularized.

The company alleges that Mr. Campbell, who is a New York dealer in rag stocks, owes them $307.38, because of an alleged shortage in the rags sold the company between December 25, 1913, and September 9, 1914. It is alleged that by collusion with an employe of paper company the defendant defrauded the plaintiff.

Campbell and his alleged accomplice are both under indictment for grand larceny in connection with the alleged fraud, it being claimed that goods to the value of seyeral thousand dollars were not delivered as charged for.

Mr. Campbell, through his attorney Harris, Simons & Rofano of New York, denies the allegations of plaintiff, and asks that the complaint be dismissed.

McGRAW'S MEN ARE INOCULATED BY DOCTOR

Marlin, Texas.—Nearly all of the Giants were inoculated by Dr. Allen yesterday with typhoid serum. The tubes gave out, but there was soon a new supply. There were few players who did not take an injection.

The regulars and colts played a six inning game yesterday, the colts winning, 3 to 2. The batting and fielding of Piez had much to do with his side's victory. He drove out a home run in the third inning and a spectacular catch he made spoiled the regulars' chances to tie the score. McGraw is working his players to the limit in these warm, pleasant days, and good results are seen daily.

Score by innings:

								R.	H.	E.
Colts	1	0	1	0	0	1	—3	8	3
Regulars	0	0	1	1	0	0	—2	6	3

CUBS DEFEAT PHILLIES

Tampa, Fla.—The Chicago Nationals outhit the Philadelphia Nationals here yesterday and won, 9 to 4. The Cubs left tonight for Jacksonville to play a series of three games with the Philadelphia Athletics.

NOTES OF THE DIAMOND

The storm clouds which have been hovering over the Eastern Baseball Association broke yesterday when three of the directore met at Hartford, Conn., and declared forfeited the franchises of the New Haven, Hartford and Springfield clubs. This leaves as a nucleus of the league—Bridgeport, New London and Pittsfield. An adjourned meeting may be held in New Haven next Friday, when the matter will be discussed further. The league probably will receive applications forf ranchises from Waterbury, Danbury and possibly from Hartford.

PAPER COMPANY GETS BACK LANDS FROM STATE

The land appropriated by the State for barge canal purposes belonging formerly to the Oswego Falls Pulp and Paper Co. has by resolution adopted by the Canal Board reverted to its original owners. This action was taken March 12, a copy of the resolution being filed yesterday in the County Clerk's office. A settlement for the tract was made last year and arrangements were made to deed back that portion not used.

SEASON AND VITALITY

Public Health Hints by the New York State Department of Health

There is a general impression that in the late winter and early spring the vitality is at low ebb. We feel tired and out of sorts and the unwise turn to spring medicine for relief instead of building up their health by following the simple rules of hygiene.

Common knowledge of this time of physical and mental depression in late winter has recently been strikingly confirmed by scientific investigation.

Prof. Ellsworth Huntington of Yale university has been making a careful study of the effect of weather and season upon efficiency. He has obtained for this purpose the records of the earnings of over 500 operatives engaged on piece work in three factories in Connecticut, as they varied day by day for a period of four successive years. The results show that the operative's earnings follow a regular seasonal curve, which is lowest in January, February and March, rises to a high point in June falls off again in the hot months, rises to its highest value in November and then falls off rapidly again.

Professor Huntington has also studied, as a measure of mental achievement the average daily or weekly marks of nearly 1600 students for a period of six years at Annapolis and for two years at West Point. These figures show just the same thing, high points of efficiency in fall and late spring, and a low point in late winter.

When we study the death rates at different times of year we find just the same seasonal change. Year after year the death rate for March is greater than for any other month in the year. At this season tuberculosis and pneumonia claim the greatest number of their victims and so do the diseases of the nervous system and the circulatory system. Particularly March is the most dangerous month for old people. All of us are in poor condition after the long winter, the severe cold of outdoors and the overheating indoors, and perhaps after the special strain of a season of specially hard work.

This is the time of year to avoid excesses of any kind with special care. Overwork and particularly worry sap the vitality and prepare the way for disease, and an active but not hurried mind and body will accomplish most in the end.

Alcohol is perhaps the most important of all factors in bringing on pneumonia and hardening of the arteries, and the other diseases of later life. Chancellor Lloyd George estimates that the abolition of Vodka will increase the efficiency of the Russian people by from 30 to 50 per cent., and experienced physicians agree that he is right.

People who get their share of rest and sleep and avoid stimulants and get out into the open air for moderate exercise will soon build up their strength again and enter on the spring period of renewed vitality; but this is a bad time for those who forget that good health rests on Fresh Air, Good Food, Exercise and Rest.

MOTOR CYCLES AND RELATION TO WATER

"Pure water and fresh air usually are taken for granted and many people do not realize that in some cities the maintenance of a pure water supply is quite a problem," said James W. Bogue, local Harley-Davidson dealer. "The motorcycle is being used to great advantage in many water projects, especially in the West. Colorado Springs for example, has ten storage reservoirs high in the mountains. It is incumbent upon the superintendent of the water department to see that the reservoirs are kept constantly in good condition and free from contamination of any sort. The inspector uses a Harley-Davidson in patrolling the reservoirs having a 'beat' more than twenty-five miles long. There are many stiff grades to be climbed in reaching the various water sheds but the motorcycle is equal to the rigorous demands made upon it in daily service.

PLEASING THE COOP.

Hens Have a Sense of Humor, and They Should Be Amused.

An eastern psychologist who devotes a good deal of time to practical applications of his theories declares that hens have a sense of humor. He says they would lay more regularly if properly amused.

Unfortunately he fails to suggest the forms of amusement that hens could be expected to appreciate. Of course roller skates are out of the question, and so are Teddy bears and paper dolls. A hen might learn to play hop scotch and tag and blind man's buff, but that would be about the limit. Of course the comic supplements could be hung around the coop and the "Lays of Ancient Rome," and other entertaining pabulum might be mixed in with the daily pan of mush.

But it's all experimental. Hens are so different. There have been hen owners whose whiskers alone were funny enough to prompt a hen to crawl into the hay mow and lay a hatful of eggs. Yet they never do.

That's the great trouble with psychologists.

FORM LEGION FOR NATION'S DEFENSE

Many Noted Men Are Back of the Volunteer Movement.

TO TAKE IN TRAINED MEN.

Former Soldiers and Sailors Are In the First Line—Major General Leonard Wood and Colonel Roosevelt Are Enthusiastic Supporters—No Spirit of Militarism Aroused.

New York.—The first definite step toward the establishment of a military and naval reserve for national defense has been taken in the formation of the American legion, an organization which makes its bow to the people of this country with the enthusiastic indorsement of former President Theodore Roosevelt and Major General Leonard Wood.

Its plans and purposes have been worked out at Governors island under the guidance of Captain Gordon Johnston of General Wood's staff and Commander Robert K. Crank of the United States navy. There its headquarters are temporarily located, and from there will come presently an announcement of the names of those who are to serve as members of the executive committee and board of honorary advisers. Colonel Roosevelt has already accepted the chairmanship of the latter body. It is the answer of patriotic and practical men to the agitation which has been going on ever since the outbreak of the European war called attention to the fact that the United States is not prepared to defend itself.

It is the purpose of this organization not only to enroll the fighting men of the country, the men who have seen service as soldiers or sailors, but also to enroll the men who have special training in any one of the half hundred callings which under the conditions of modern warfare are as essential to success as are military and naval equipment. The membership of this organization is to be made up not of those who are willing to defend their country, but of those who can defend it.

Those who are behind the organization are not imbued with the spirit of militarism. They agree with those who say that at a word from the president of the United States millions of men would swarm to the colors and that it is not necessary in time of peace that this country maintain a great standing army such as one associates with the word militarism. No military training in time of peace is involved, no increase in standing army, navy or militia, but there is contemplated a taking stock of resources so that in time of war the government would be able to lay its hand immediately upon those who would be best qualified to cope with the emergency.

There will be two active branches of the legion. The line of the legion will be composed exclusively of men who have had army or navy service or who can handle a high power rifle and are seasoned in taking care of themselves in the open.

It is a fact not generally known perhaps that the United States army and navy keep no account of the thousands of men who are annually dropped from the service, either by resignation or by expiration of term of enlistment. They simply melt away into the great body of the population.

It is of course generally known that in this country no data are kept of the activities of citizens that would enable the government in time of war to pick out at once the man or body of men especially adapted for a particular service. The selection is made after the man enlists and his professed qualifications are discovered only by actual trial of his abilities in the service of his country.

The American legion proposes to do beforehand just what the government would have to do after it had enlisted a great volunteer army and navy. Men who have been trained as soldiers or sailors will be classified in detailed records as to physique, education, character of training and length of service. Men of special training in other fields will be classified in the same way and every applicant for membership will be carefully questioned and the nature of his qualifications thoroughly investigated.

THE NEW STATE CONSTITUTION—3.

One State Administration Instead of Six.

The most familiar Short Ballot proposition which will come up before the Constitutional Convention in April is the one which proposes to cut out the tail of the state ticket. That is, to give the Governor the power to appoint the Secretary of State, State Comptroller, State Treasurer, Attorney General and State Engineer and Surveyor. This will leave on the state ticket simply the Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, corresponding to the national government where we elect only a President and Vice President.

This proposal has been before the State for a number of years. Governor Hughes repeatedly demanded it in his message, and Governor Whitman also advocated it in his inaugural address. Senator Wadsworth fought for it when he was speaker of the Assembly. At the last session of the legislature it passed the Assembly but was buried in committee in the Senate. Practically all the fifteen Republican delegates at large to the Constitutional Convention are thoroughly committed to the principle as are also a great number of the district members. Its passage by the Constitutional Convention seems reasonably well assured. In fact the need of this Short Ballot measure was one of the first things that was urged as necessitating the calling of the Convention to begin with. Something of the sort certainly must be done, not only for the sake of wiping out a nest of obscure politics but to improve the state administration.

Six Governments Instead of One.

New York has six state administrative establishments—a big one, (the Governor) and five little ones—and six separate, loosely-connected administrations all going on at the same time, sometimes harmoniously, sometimes not. This year they seem to be far from a happy family. This six-headed scheme has been tried since 1846 and is a proven failure. The minor state offices have been political booty and have been divided up on a geographical, or a racial basis to get a "well balanced ticket." In the round of politics good officers have been repeatedly displaced for no reason that had any connection with their conduct. Even the delegates to the old state convention never took much interest in them and many of the convention practically broke up and went home as soon as the Governorship was settled, leaving a disorderly and diminishing remnant to make the minor nominations. Even serious scandals have been insufficient to bring these officers into prominence before the people of the state.

Such obscurity is dangerous. It is a perpetual invitation to corruption, and the invitation has been accepted more than once. None of these minor offices are truly political. They are technical, routine offices, and their incumbents ought to be selected for fitness and kept during good behavior.

To reduce the state ballot to two offices, Governor and Lieutenant-Governor will bring the state ballot within the field of real oversight by the voters. They will have only two state officers to keep track of instead of seven. It will be a great internal reform in the state administration, it will unify under a single head the offices of the administration and the executive policy of the state can be carried out with a harmony and consistency which is not now possible. The national government has one executive establishment; why should the state of New York require six separate and independent ones? It will be an aid to popular control too, to give the Governor power to choose his own instruments for then the people can hold the Governor responsible for carrying out his constitutional and statutory duties. The appointive system will not necessarily get these offices out of politics, but that is not any argument for retaining a system which necessarily keeps them IN politics.

Would Governor Be Too Powerful?

Would this method give too much power to the Governor? Superficially it looks as though the Governor's power was being multiplied by six. But this is not true. The Governor already has a large appointive power amounting to 924 exempt and unclassified positions not subject to civil service restrictions. This amendment would add 164 offices. This is a total increase of 18 per cent measured in numbers. The real increase is more nearly 5 per cent by reason of the fact that these offices are nowhere near as important as many which are now on the Governor's appointive list, such as the Public Service Commission, and the Highway Commissioner. When the legislature passed the Public Service Commissions bill it gave to the Governor a greater gift of new power than this amendment would.

Nor will the Short Ballot amendment cause any vast administrative change in the Government. The big change will come in state politics which from the politician's viewpoint will be a dreary desert waste in place of the present convenient jungle.

[This is the third of a series of nine articles prepared jointly by the Municipal Government Association, the County Government Association and the New York Short Ballot Organization on questions to come before the Constitutional Convention.]

About Sports Generally

Philadelphia, March 17.—For the first time in years two real boxing champions will meet each other here tonight. Johnny (Kid) Williams, champion of the bantamweights and Johnny Kilbane, king pin of the feathers, mix before the Olimpia A. A. in a six round no-decision contest.

Only a knockout will bing the two titles to one man, and even the most arden supporter of either of the combatants does not claim that such a result is likely. Kilbane, on account of his advantage in height, reach and weight is generally conceded a winner on points by unbiased critics. The supporters of the doughty little blonde from Baltimore—and they are legion—maintain, however, that their favorite's rushing, whirlwind tactics will sweep the featherweight's offensive aside and return him a victor, even in the six round clash.

Each of these youngsters has proven himself complete master of his class. Kilbane, since he wrested his title from the once famous wizard of the ring, Abe Attell, has won handily from everyone he has met except one. That one—Johnny Dundee—has since outgrown the featherweight ranks and can no longer claim to be a rival for Kilban's crown. Dundee got a draw with Kilbane a year ago in twenty rounds at Los Angeles.

Williams won his title by knocking out Johnny Coulon, for years the demon of the little fellows. Coulon was all in when he fell before Williams, being but a shadow of his former self. But since then Williams has proven that he had a real right to the title. He has beaten every challenger he has met, a great many of them falling via the knockout route.

It took a great deal of money to bring these two together. Kilbane demanded $5,000 and, as he was a champion, too, Williams wanted as much. The promoters at first could only see their way clear to giving $6,000 for the bout. They raised that to $7,500 and finally they are said to have put the figure up to $10,000. Indications were, by the advance sale, that they would clear that much in receipts.

JACK JOHNSON AS SEEN IN CUBA

He's Not Welcomed by "The Cuban News," a Havana Newspaper

The Evening Times is in receipt of a clipping from the "The Cuban News," a newspaper published in Havana. The article makes plain the unpopularity even in Cuba of the negro pug. The article follows:

Johnson landed in Cienfuegos from Barbadoes on his way to Mexico, where he was scheduled to fight Mar. 5. He struck his first difficulty here hunting a hotel. None of the first class places had room for him and few of the second class ones wanted him and his kind around. He finally secured quarters at a theatrical boarding house, La Estrella, at Neptuno and Consulado. Then he had his troubles in making his arrangements to continue his journey. He wanted to go to Mexico, but if he went on the Ward line he would be liable to arrest, for he would then place himself under the American flag. The Hamburg-American line agents for a Dutch line of steamers, refused to sell him passage on general principles, as they had no assurance he would be allowed to land in Mexico, being a fugitive from justice; besides, they "didn't like a nigger nohow." Then came the word that President Carranza had said that in case Johnson landed in territory he controlled he would be handed over to the United States authorities.

Havana's fight promoters then saw their opportunity to drive a hard bargain, and negotiations were at once opened to have the Johnson-Willard fight pulled off in Cuba, and this may be accomplished, if the authorities can be induced to continue to ignore the law.

There are many who really enjoy witnessing boxing contests who will refrain from supporting the Johnson match on general principles. Self-respecting Americans, who appreciate the sentiment that will be created by having Johnson in Havana are quite indignant over the way things are developing and are by no means silent in their denunciations of the ones responsible for the present state of affairs. It is true Havana is now receiving a lot of free advertising, but it is expensive advertising at that and it will prove in the end.

Johnson's wife, who accompanies him, is the second white wife the negro has had. The first one committed suicide by shooting herself because of despondency over the fact that she was absolutely ostracised from all classes of society, no white woman, no matter of what character, would associate with her; negroes even would have nothing to do with her. The present wife was a Wisconsin country girl of good family, and it was because Johnson induced her to come to go to Chicago that he was arrested for violating the white slave law. The girl was arrested and held as a witness, but after being held some time she managed to secure her liberty by promising to return to testify in the case, and hoping to defeat justice Johnson married her, she running away from her home again where her mother had taken her. The federal authorities, however, had other counts against Johnson for other offences of equal character and he was convicted and sentenced to a year in the penitentiary and to a heavy fine. He secured his release on bail pending an appeal jumped his bond and fled to Canada. Since that time he has been in Europe and soon after the European war broke out he went to South America. The only way he can return to the United States is to give himself up and serve his sentence, which he says he will not do, as long as he can keep from being extradited.

OSBORNE TO STAY ON JOB AS WARDEN

Nose Trouble No Obstacle to Sing Sing Work, He Says

Albany, March 16.—Thomas Mott Osborne, warden of Sing Sing prison, who is recovering from an operation on his nose at the Homoeopathic Hospital here, denied to-night that he had been advised by physicians to resign from the wardenship of Sing Sing prison to save his health.

"I am sure I do not know how such a report came to be circulated, unless some one wants to offer his services to the state in my place," he said. "My nerves are as good as ever, but I don't know that I can say the same for my nerve. I don't approach an operating table with the same pleasure I once did.

"I don't want my friends to think I am a quitter, or that I will have to quit. I will be back and hard at work again Wednesday."

BRYAN PLEDGES 10,000 MEN

Secretary Overwhelmed by Recruits for No-Liquor Army

Philadelphia, March 16.—At the end of a temperance meeting in the Billy Sunday Tabernacle last night, Secretary of State Bryan's appeal for recruits in a total abatinence army was answered by 10,000 men of all ages. Billy Sunday, who was to speak from the same platform, was unable to be present because of his exertions durin gthe day and the need for rest to complete his campaign here.

Secretary Bryan was swept off his feet by the thousands who rushed down the sawdusttrails in response to his appeal for signers to pledge cards circulated through the audience. In the scramble to enlist in the temperance army, the Secretary was caught in the middle of the throngh and had to be rescued by a detail of police.

The audience of more than 25,000 persons filled every seat in the tabernacle. The meeting was opened with a song, "The Brewers' Big Horses Can't Roll Over Me." Then Secretary Bryan delivered a temperance address which stirred the throng to great enthusiasm.

In closing he called for recruits. Kneeling down on the platform beside the pulpit, where Billy Sunday many times has colled for converts, Secretary Bryan endeavored, pen in hand, to keep pace with the temperance "converts" as they filed down. For half an hour he autographed pledge cards, but he soon found himself in the center of a surging mob when a portion of the crowd swept into the choir loft and descended upo nhim with a flank movement. Then the police arrived, and whisked the Secretary outside to safety.

HOPE TO INFLUENCE THE NEUTRAL NATIONS

"The Royal Flying Corps obtained further successes during the last few days, although the fog at times interfered materially with their work. On March 12 the railroad junctions at Don and Douai were attacked with bombs and damaged and on March 13 a train in the Don station was blown up."

Berliner Says Allies Hope to Influence the Neutrals

London, March 17.—Herr Theodor Wolf, the chief editor of the Berliner Tageblatt, contributes an interesting article to his newspaper dealing with the bombardment of the Dardanelles, from which it is clear that he is one of the few German journalists of eminence who really appreciate the situation which the Allies' progress in the straits will create.

Herr Wolf says he has no illusions about the intentions of the Allies in forcing this passage and admits that if they are successful the result will be of tremendous import. There is first, he says, the intention to cause uneasiness in Constantinople and strengthen the hands of the opponents of Enver Pacha and Talaat Bey. This might force the Porte either to conclude a separate peace with the Allies or to withdraw the army threatening the Suez Canal.

The second object in view, Herr Wolf believes, is to stiffen Roumania and Bulgaria against the central monarchies. Field Marshal von Hindenberg's recent victory and the evauacation of the Bukowina have, according to the editor, taken the strength out of the movement led by Mr. Take Jonescu, but it requires a little imagination to see that both Roumania and Bulgaria will sing another song, presumably a song of welcome, when the Allies' war ships appear before their barbors in the Euxine.

It is Italy, however, he says, which the Allies have mainly in view. Herr Wolf asserts that for months the agents of the Allies have been at work whispering in Italy's ear and warning her that the Power which declines to take part in the conflict cannot expect any portion of the spoil."

Italy seems to be Herr Wolf's chief hope. The Italians are a nation, he says, who reckon coolly and carefully, and it is just possible that the British politicians, who are counting on Italy's cooperation are in the position of the milkmaid of fable who engaged too prematurely in counting her chickens.

Besides, asks Herr Wolf, will not the possession of Constantinople be decided on the European battle fields and not in the Dardanelles? He recognizes, however, the danger and reluctantly quote from a leading Swiss journal, which roundly declares that war is unavoidable if Italy is not squared with the Trentino, and if the Trentio is not ceded revolution is certain as well as war.

Herr Wolf takes a most serious view of the situation and reproves the optimism of his journalistic colleagues, who smile at the news from the Near East, and pooh-pooh the possibility of forcing the straits. He has confidence of a kind in the wisdom and restraint of the Italian government, but fears the safety door will be opened only after the house is on fire.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

troops broke down in the face of the German fire. The French losses were heavy. To the north of Beausejour German troops took possession of several French trenches. An engagement begun yesterday in the Argonne continues today. Also in the Vosges there are several places where the fighting is still going on.

"On the Orzyc, to the northeast of Przasnysz, Russian attacks everywhere have been repulsed. There was an especially violent engagement for the posssion of Jeduorozek. Two thousand Russians were taken prisoners.

"South of the Vistula there is nothing to report."

RUSSIAN

Petrograde, via London.—The following official communication was issued from general headquarters today

"We have destroyed advanced parties to the enemy from Kopeiowo. The offensive of our troops on both banks of the Orzye river is progressing successfully. After a very stubborn battle our troops captured the villages of Stegna and Yednorozec and repulsed a vigorous counter attack by the Germans, capturing one heavy gun, three light guns, seven machine guns and at least 700 prisoners.

"North of the Przasnysz-Groudousk line our troops have had partial successes.

"On the left bank of the Vistula the enemy has been more active in bombarding our fortifications in the Beura region, but has attempted a fruitless offensive in the Pilica district.

"In the Carpathians our troops have continued their offensive operations in the Smolnik region, in spite of deep snow, heavy snowstorms and severe cold. They have carried the last positions of the enemy, taking 2,400 prisoners, including thirty-six officers. Seventeen machine guns were also captured.

"This success was gained in the center of the chief Austrian offensive, and the enemy was forced to retreat in [illegible] of Beligrod. Toward [illegible] our offical troops of the enemy. In the region of Zawadka and Rozanka the enemy persists in his attacks.

"In Eastern Galicia the battle is developing to the east of the Stanislau-Kolomea Railway. At dawn on Sunday our infantry, marching breast high in the snow, captured the enemy's fortifications near Tarnowice and Polno, taking more than 2,000 prisoners, including twenty officers.

"At Przemysl there has been artillery firing. Our troops on the northern front carried the heights within rifle shot of the forts protecting the town."

"The Germans continue a violent artillery fire, but their infantry is unable to resist our attacks. We are holding the enemy on almost the entiref ront, with particular success in the wooded sectors bordering on the River Orzyc.

"Bzura region:—The enemy is active at night, possibly reinforcing his artillery.

"The Carpathians:—Conditions are extremely difficult for an offensive. Owing to the deep snow troops can be moved only slowly. The men use beaten paths, moving in Indian file which involves heavy losses. Troops on both sides are using skis. In spite of the conditions which exist the Austrians continue their vain attempts to relieve Przemysl, where our heavy batteries are active."

AUSTRIAN

Vienna, via London.—The following official communication from headquarters was issued today:

"Attacks of the enemy against our positions east of Sulejow, near Lopuszno (in the Kiele region) have been repulsed. Attacks near Gorlice also have failed, while our artillery caused heavy losses to the Russians.

"In the Carpathians yesterday artillery duel prevailed for the most part. North of Ussok Pass it has been comparatively quiet since March 14, when the enemy suffered heavily. On that occasion two Russian battalions were almost annihilated. Eleven officers, 650 men and three machine guns were captured.

"To the northwest of Wyszkow we captured a height, taking 380 prisoners. The battle south of the Dneister continued.

"An attempt by the enemy to capture the heights held by us east of Otynia, in the direction of Kolomea, was repelled, after several days' fighting, with heavy losses to the enemy. After receiving large reinfortements, the enemy again, during the afternoon, advanced on these heights and attacked our forces three times They again suffered heavily."

"IL TROVATORE" COMING

The possibility of giving high class performances of grand opera at prices within the reach of all classes of music lovers is due entirely to the fact that the European war has so reduced the demand for operatic artists, that they have sought engagements in this country and are willing to make sacrifices in their compensation in order to fill up their time. Such another opportunity to secure high class artists for a road tour, may not ever occur again. Among the artists who will be heard here, when the Royal Grand Opera Company appears at The Quirk Theatre Friday, March 19, are Mme. Ortensia Dorvalle, who has appeared in Havana, Mexico City, Buenos Aires, and Milan, where she won distinction in Carmen, Mme. Lina Casti, a dramatic soprano of rare attainments; Mme Cecilia Zavaschi a colorature soprano, who has appeared in many of the European capitols, a dramatic tenor of unusual ability, is Sig. Giuseppe Tricario; Sig. Attilio Decrescenzo, lyric tenor; Dorothea Edwards, a contralto and others of equal ability. A selected orchestra of grand opera musicians will be under the direction of Sig. Giovanni Leotti. There will be a powerful and well trained operatic chorus and a ballet for the incidental dances. The operas will be staged in a fitting manner with all the special scenery and property effects. The opera to be given in Fulton will be "Il Trovatore" with Mmes. Dorvalle, Edwards, Sigs. Mauro, Ansalone and Turner singing the leading roles.

NORTHERN CHURCH OPEN TO SUFFRAGE MEETING

Watertown, March 17.—For the first time in the history of northern New York the use of the pulpit has been offered to the Watertown Suffrage League as a means of exploiting the party's principles. At the invitation of Rev. J. S. Eldridge, pastor of the Methodist church at Lafargeville, Mrs. Francis H. Lamon, president of the local league, will speak from the pulpit next Sunday evening. The talk will supplant the usual Sunday night sermon. Members of the league were overjoyed today at the invitation and are now anticipating like opportunities being given them from other villages of this section. Mrs. Lamon will be the only speaker Sunday evening.

The Scent of Flowers.

As a rule the scent of flowers does not exist in them as in a store or gland, but rather as a breath, an exhalation. While the flower lives it breathes out its swestness, but when it dies the fragrance usually ceases to exist. The method of stealing from the flower its fragrance while it is still living is no new thing, and it is not known when it was discovered that butter, animal fat or oil would absorb the odor given off by living flowers placed near them and would themselves become fragrant.

"CABIRIA" FOR GENERAL WELFARE WORK HERE

Constructed by Gabrjelde d'Annunzio, Ttaly's foremost poet and dramatist, with a special score by Signor Manlio Mazza, produced at a cost of a quarter of a million dollars, a sum exceeding the production expenses of ten of the largest comic operas and being presented only in the high class theatres, with a symphonic orchestra and chorus, "Cabiria," has gratified the ambitions of the directors of the Itala Flm Company, by reaching the highest point attainable in the amusement world. Their previous production, "The Fall of Troy," was unanimously declared a wonderful photographic achievement, but "Cabiria," surpasses them all and can only be compared with "The Passion Play," as played by Anton Lang at Oberammergau, and "Jean d'Arc" as played by Maude Adams at the Harvard Stadium.

It would have been impossible to have produced "Cabiria" in the same manner as the two aforementioned spectacles, as 5,000 actors and supers were necessary to the completion of the picture and it is doubtful that any particular spot in the world would have afforded the unusual scenic investure which became a part picture only after six different countries had bee nvisited and two years' time had been spent.

If "Cabiria" had been presented in that way, only those with sufficient resources to enjoy a European trip could have witnessed the exhibition, as in the case of "The Passion Play." It was the intention of the Itala Company to present this romantic, historical drama as an educational feature for the masses and that they have succedded is proven by the capacity audiences that have witnessed the performances at the Knickerbocker Theatr, New York and the announcement that "Cabiria," will bep resented at The Quirk in Fulton for one night, Thursday, March 18; continuous performance from 2 to 10.30 p.m

FIRE IN GRASS NEAR LEE HOSPITAL

The fire department was called today at 1.55 to quell a blaze in dry grass in the vacant lots east of 4th st. at Division, directly opposite the Lee Memorial hospital.

The origin of the fire is unknown by the person who discovered it, Mrs. Robarga, who is the nearest neighbor to the place.

An application of chemicals made short work of the fire, saving telephone and other poles nearby.

Why the Hen Cackles.

"The accepted theory that a hen cackles after laying an egg because she is proud of herself is a mistake," said a naturalist. "The explanation of the rooster's answering crow as one of congratulation is also a mistake.

"The cackle is a relic of bygone days when fowls were wild. Then a hen, desirous of laying an egg, retired from the rest of the fowl community. By the time she was ready to join the other fowls they had wandered some distance, and she did not know where they were. She then cackled, and the rooster, hearing her, answered with a crow and thus informed the hen of the whereabouts of the tribe."—Chicago Herald.

AN AERIAL BLOCKADE THE ZEPPELIN L5 HOLDS UP THE DUTCH STEAMSHIP HELENA IN THE NORTH SEA. © BY THE NEW YORK HERALD CO

In this picture, drawn especially for this newspaper, the New York Herald and the London Sphere, is shown an entirely novel feature in the attempted German blockade of the English coast—the use of Zeppelin airships, which have endeavored to co-operate with the German submarines. On February 15 a Dutch steamship, the Helena, was held up by a German airship described as Zeppelin L5. The steamship was then some forty miles from the Haaks lightship, which is anchored about fifteen miles to the westward of the entrance to the Texel. The Zeppelin came down quite low over the sea and hovered above the Dutch vessel, which "hove to" in answer to signals from the airship. A megaphone conversation then took place between the two captains, the commander of the Zeppelin finally expressing himself satisfied with the nature of the Helena's cargo and destination. The men on the Helena could see the crew of the Zeppelin, watching them from the gondolas and from the windows of the central cabin. The Zeppelin then turned about and disappeared from the Helena's sight.

...peaker Says This Town Can-not Be Remade in One Day. Today's Total Membership 251

The total membership reported today is two hundred fifty-one. The captains reported as follows: Dr. Whitbeck, 6; H. Bristol, 6; D. Lipsky, 1; L. W. Emerick, 6; Willis Morin, 1; Jesse A. Morrill, 3; N. L. Whitaker, 39.

Willis Morin acted as chairman and J. G. Berger was called upon. Mr. Berger pointed out the various industries and points of interest which he, as a stranger, had noted that make Fulton a city worth livinig in. He suggested that each one present work out a list of Fulton's valuable assets and send them to the Chamber, that a bulletin may be issued.

Mr. Wilson, when called upon announced as it would be necessary to leave the city shortly before noon tomorrow that he would not have the opportunity to speak of the things to be realized at the close of the campaign.

"I would first plead with you for patience with the Chamber of Commerce, for the tendency of the public is to demand on the morning following the campaign that the millenium shall arrive on the first train. It must be borne in mind that a town that has been in the making for a hundred years can not be remade in one day.

"In regard to factory-getting, it is not of supreme importance. It is a hazardous task to begin with, and your Chamber of Commerce should not be judged by factory getting. In other words, you must not expect the Chamber to be a composite Santa Claus who will hand you from time to time things from a well stocked pack. Having paid for your membership is but the beginning of the game and to succeed you must stay in the game to the finish.

"The Chamber of Commerce service exists for three things, namely:

1. To create a willing appreciation for a public work well done.
2. To establish an attitude of enterprise.
3. To establish the habit of giving.

"You cannot expect men to give up themselves if you constantly knock them, and look behind each act for some motive. Do not scorn, blame and censure the man who has a public spirit. Don't deliberately misunderstand, the man who is trying to give his effort, for you can not expect your generous men to live with you. You can't ask your public-spirited men to help you. You can't raise a floral plant in the frigid zone.

"If the big men of the country were to come to your town you would drop all to live near them, feeling the crumbs that fell from their table would be worth while. Public opinion cannot complain when failure to cultivate carrying without support.

[illegible] be cultivated continually. If you can cultivate the belief that a town believes in itself you will make for its success. Carry the idea to the young men of the community; they are your asset; keep them with and let them work with you. Do not discourage them; let them have their fling in business here that they need not go to other lands to vent their spirit of adventure. Keep the young man with you and you will restore to the community the asset which you may be seeking.

"In slavery times a good slave was worth $1000; today the young man who makes good is worth many times that to his community. You must create a willingness to let the young man try if you want to keep him. Don't discourage him in his plans, for initiative and creative ideas are the finest things in the world. Optimism, belief and a willingness to try is the saving grace in communities, as well as in individuals. In the west whole towns have gone bankrupt, but ten years later have been on the top shelf of prosperity.

"Pessimism is a thing which does not build a town. It would be a real good to the world if all the real dyed-in-the-wool pessimists were to be killed off. A Jewish Rabbi once defined a pessimist as one who seeing two evils chooses both. The judicious use of the cemetery was once suggested as an aid in the growth of a city, and again a discriminating epidemic would have been considered a real help in town building.

"There are to be found in many places people who are investing their money in interests other than in the town in which they live. Is there no money from Fulton being used to build up outside industries? Is there no money from this city doing work for other places? If not, you are to be congratulated. If your community offers to the young man something to keep him from chasing a get-rich-quick idea, you will be doin ghim and yourself in turn a great good. The average young person seeks a bonanza. The average American seeks bonanzas in proportion to his age. The older you are the more likely you are to wait for a bonanza to come to you. We learn with age that hazard increases with distance and you can teach the young man this, but you must do it in his own way.

"The most valuable thing to be had out of the work you are doing is to learn the spirit of giving. The man without a public spirit suffers a reaction when for the first time he is separated from his $25; the second reaction is less and the third time he enjoys himself. It is not the rich man who gives alone and it is not the rich community who gives alone. To remake yourself and your town the spirit of giving must be learned. It makes a man out of one with sympathies, ideals and interest, and then a community becomes a community asset. The men who are willing to take their business lives in their hand and go through with it get somewhere. Dayton, Ohio, today has its charter for that reason. The man with a wishbone in place of his backbone never gets anywhere; neither do communities so constructed get anywhere. It is to be remembered, a man who stakes his all on material things loses and so with communities. Paul did not, we find, urge that men stake their future on skyscrapers, railways, etc. Rather did he say: 'Be ye therefore transformed by the renewal of your own minds.'"

Rev. Dr. Buck following spoke in appreciation of Mr. Wilson's fine helpfulness and asked the chairman to call for a vote of thanks. The entire assembly responded.

N. L. Whitaker urged the captains to work with all diligence for the final report of tomorrow, and stated the necessity of remembering that any business to succeed must have the right financial backing.

E. R. Redhead was called upon; he fittingly replied that he is in entire sympathy with this broadening movement, and quoted a motto he had recently seen, "Push if you can; if you can't push, then pull, and if you can't do either, get out of the way." This, Mr. Redhead though applied to the present situation here in Fulton.

...Burned Out

The home of Abram Aroneck, 365 Broadwell ave., West Side, was damaged by fire last night between [illegible] and 10 o'clock. The alarm that sent the department scurrying across the river was struck at Oak and 3d sts.

R. M. Blake, owner of the house, lives almost in the rear of the Aroneck residence. Upon hearing the barking of a large mastiff owned by Mr. Aroneck. Mr. Blake rushed to the house arriving there about the time the fire fighters who made a record run reached the scene. The cellar door was broken down and the fire in the furnace quickly drawn. The firemen then rushed up stairs where they found the wall and ceiling around the chimney blazing furiously. They set to work at once with chemical and axes, tearing away the burning chimney flue all the way up to the roof. Prompt work, and efficient handling is the only thing that saved the house from total destruction, after almost one hour's work the smouldering embers in the flue and floors were smothered and the house while considerably mussed up was not damaged to any great extent. The loss may reach $300, which Mr. Blake states is fully covered by insurance. The Aroneck family were all on a visit to Oswego and did not arrive home until after peace was restored. Mr. Aroneck's loss in water-soaked carpets, rugs and upholstery is fully covered by insurance.

Opinions

Perhaps He Could.

The proprietor of a big grocery and market in a western city advertises in a half-page to his customers that if they will all consent to carry home their own purchases and put him to no charge for delivery of everything from a yeast cake to a barrel of sugar, he will guarantee to sell goods six and one-half per cent. cheaper than now, and to undersell any public market they can possibly maintain.—Springfield Gazette.

Tribunal Should be Impartial

It is apparent, from the attitude assumed by Frank P. Walsh, chairman of the United States Commission on IIndustrial Relations, in an adress at a meeting in New York Sunday, that the inquiry now in progress in that city to investigate the affairs of great educational and benevolent organizations is not intended to be conducted with the impartiality and candor which should mark proceedings of this character.

It is of course true that Commissioner Walsh has a clear right to express his personal views regarding humanitarian enterprises which, on the surface, are intended to make for the betterment of humanity. He is, further, at liberty to differ from the promoters and administrators of these foundations regarding the ethics of the work engaged in by these bodies. But in this instance, Mr. Walsh is carrying on, ostensibly at least, a Federal investigation. If such investigation is to be of value it must, from the very nature of the case, be judicial and deliberative. The chairman of this commission, though, demonstrated clearly by his utterances at the New York East Side meeting, that he had already, in his own mind, passed upon and decided the question at issue.

It is never wise to combine the offices of judge and prosecuting attorney, any more than it is to unite the offices of judge and attorney for the defense. It is not necessary, nor desirable, to question the integrity and sincerity of Mr. Walsh, or deny him the right to his personal views on educational, socialogical and humanitarian matters. At the same time it would be in accord with the fitness of things if, in the process of investigating methods of distributing private funds for humanitarian purposes, such investigation shoud be conducted without reference to the investigator's personal views.—New York Sun.

Italy's Disaster

The world mourns with Italy. The disaster grows as fuller details are learned. A warm stream of human sympathy flows toward the devastated land. No one finds fault with the Red Cross nurses and other devoted women who have gone to the help of the sufferers, or tells them that "a woman's place is at home."

Any great catastrophe that is unusual and striking appeals to the imagination and goes to the heart. People realize then that everybody who can help may rightly do so.

But the number of lives lost in Italy by the earthquake, even at the highest estimate, does not come near the number lost in the United States every year by tuberculosis—due largeto bad housing and ventilation—by impure food and bad water; by preventable industrial accidents; by poor sanitation; by a score of things which go back in the last analysis to bad government. When Tammany came back to power in New York and the street cleaning was neglected, there was an immediate increase in the deaths from disease due to breathing putrid dust. The death list in Italy is not half so long as the annual death list of babies in the United States. In New Zealand, where women vote, every mother is taught by a government-trained nurse how to keep a baby healthy, and the infant death rate is the lowest in the world. In every-day life, the huge toll of deaths from preventable causes does not startle us, because we are used to it. But the women who are seeking the vote as an aid to good government are as truly within their sphere as any Red Cross nurse in Italy.—Woman's Journal.

THE LETCH IS OUT!

If you have an article of value to humanity, and you desire to sell it, you must make the fact known. You must make plain just why it should be bought and how and where. The best known way for creating demand is by advertising. The reasons are so obvious that they need little discussion.

The daily paper is the most intimate and the best medium in which humanity is interested. Your home daily is doubly intimate and more interesting to the people of Fulton and vicinity than any medium you could possibly use.

Get in line with public opinion, then figure out your problem. If you want a longer story of more detail, wend your way up the "beaten path" to The Evening Times' headquarters and you shall not be disappointed. The letch is out!

THE FOE WITHIN

Most American cities have little to fear from earthquakes. Jane Addams says: "The enemies which our cities must face and overcome are unsanitary housing, poisonous sewage, contaminated water; infant mortality, the spread of contagion, adulterated food, impure milk, smoke-laden air, ill-ventilated factories, dangerous occupations, juvenile crime, unwholesome crowding, prostitution and drunkenness. Logically, their electorate should be made up of those who can bear a valiant part in this arduous contest." She goes on to show that the women are particularly needed as voters in order to increase the efficiency of government on its human welfare side. Men are highly efficient on the business side, but in developing the humanitarian end of it, the women's special gifts and special viewpoint come into play. Miss Addams says:

"A city is in many respects a great business corporation, but in other respects it is enlarged housekeeping. May we not say that city housekeeping has failed partly because women, the traditional housekeepers, have not been consulted as to its multiform activities?"—Alice Stone Blackwell.

UNION AND THE MAN

The effect of the Supreme Court decision in the labor case under the so-called coercion statute of Kansas simply puts the rights of all parties—employers, employees and labor unions—on a basis of equality. A labor union accepts or rejects its members on its own conditions. An employer engages his men or discharges them on his own conditions. The worker has the utmost freedom in choosing between the two, but he cannot force himself upon either.

If both the employer and the union are agreeable, he may adhere to both. If the union makes it a condition of membership that he abandon the employer, he must comply. If he refuses, the union may cut him off. Conversely, if the employer makes a condition that he shall leave the union, he must comply. If he refuses, the employer may discharge him.

The rule seems to be absolutely logical and ethical. It is in accord with the strict demands of fair play. It is not a blow at the reasonable operation of the unions. It simply dissolves an alliance between unionism and the law-making power which left the employer helpless to choose his own assistants.

The decision draws the teeth of the Kansas statute which made it unlawful for any one to coerce or influence another to make an agreement not to belong to a labor union as a condition of employment. Fourteen States altogether have similar laws, so the decision will have potentially a sweep effect. It must be remembered, however, that the extreme position assumed by the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway of Scott, Kan., in this case is very unusual, being the reversed case of the closed shop. The attitude of the employer who does not freely accept unionism is usually in favor of the open shop.

This the unions habitually combat by the exclusion or expulsion men who are willing to work with non-unionists. According to the reasoning of Justice Pitney such action would seem to be prohibited from this time forward. Thus, perhaps, the most important effect of the present decision may be in the long run to promote by protecting the open shop idea rather than to encourage the extreme policy of exclusion on the employers' part.—The Sun.

PEANUT BUTTER TO BE AN OSWEGO PRODUCT.

Oswego, Jan. 27. This city is to have a factory for the manufacture of peanut butter. Former Mayor D. D. Long announced yesterday that preparations are being made at the present time for manufacturing several hundred tons of this commodity, which is coming into general and popular use, at the plant of Long's Chocolate Works commencing the coming week. Samples have already been manufactured and sent out to the trade, resulting in a large number of orders, and, from present indications, the peanut butter business will soon reach the extensive proportions of every other product turned out by the Chocolate Works and the Oswego Candy Works. According to experts in the manufacture of peanut butter the local plant is better equipped to make and put on the market a better grade of the butter than any other in the country at the present time, and so a big business is looked for at once. The new brand will be known as "Ox-Heart Peanut Butter" and the name, alone, ought to be a guarantee of purity and excellent quality.

FORMER FULTON MAN ON THE PACIFIC COAST

Hon. Oscar Ayres, well known in Fulton and vicinity and former state senator of Minnesota, has written local friends that Oakland is an ideal place in which to live, and that he likes the place so much that he will make it his home.

The former senator of Minnesota is 78 years old, but he carries his age lightly and looks less than 50. His wife was in ill health and he traveled all over the United States looking for a suitable place to live. He found it in central California. Fulton friends wish the Senator and his good wife may indeed find in that sunny clime the "fountain of perpetual youth."

WHISTLER'S CLEVERNESS.

The Artist Could Fix In His Mind Any Effect In Nature.

It was Whistler's habit to memorize an effect in nature, and Mr. T. R. Way, in his "Memoirs," gives an example of his cleverness at it.

I shall never forget a lesson he gave me one evening. We had left the studio when it was quite dusk and were walking along the road by the gardens of the Chelsea hospital, when he pointed to a group of buildings in the distance, an old public house at the corner of the road, with windows and shops showing golden lights through the gathering mists of twilight.

"Look!" he said.

As he did not seem to have anything to sketch or make notes on, I took out my notebook and offered it to him.

"No, no; be quiet!" he said, and after a long pause he turned and walked back a few yards; then, with his back to the scene, he said:

"Now, see if I have learned it," and then he gave a description of the scene, perfect in every detail of arrangement and color, as he might have repeated a poem he had learned by heart.

Then we went on, and soon there came another picture that appealed to me even more than the former. I tried to call his attention to it, but he would not look at it.

"No, no," he said; "one thing at a time."

In a few days I was at the studio again, and there on the easel was the picture.

FINALLY SHE BALKED.

It Was a Good Scheme, but She Thought It Was Going Too Far.

It was an extraordinary notice:

"Eleemosynary Typewriting Institution.—Anybody wishing typewriting done, but having no money to pay for same, will be accommodated in this office between the hours of 5 and 10 p. m."

A young woman was tacking the sign on the office door when the man in a plaid suit stopped.

"Who is the public benefactor?" he asked.

"Me," she said. "I thought I might as well advertise and save my employer's friends the trouble of hunting me up. They always have something for me to do. Even on days when I am so busy that I hardly have time to breathe they come in with rolls of manuscript and ask the manager if I have time to copy it. Sometimes that makes the manager squirm.

"'Are you quite busy, Miss Jones?' he asks. 'Quite,' I say. Then the manager thinks. But he always gives in. 'Oh, well,' he says, 'I guess that isn't very important. Just let it go and copy this for Mr. ——.' So I copy it, and Mr. —— says, 'Thanks; you are very kind.' He never thinks of paying. It is the easiest way in the world to get typewriting done. I was afraid there might be a few men who had never heard of the scheme, so I have put this sign out for their benefit."—New York Post.

Catching a Thief.

In Dewsbury several years ago a gentleman present at a public gathering had the misfortune to have his watch stolen, a magnificent gold repeater. Standing up, he announced his loss and added: "It is now two minutes to 9. At 9 o'clock the watch will strike the hour, and as it is loud I ask every one to keep quiet. We shall then be able to put our hands on the thief." A dead silence ensued, and one individual, seized with a bad fit of coughing, endeavored to leave the room. He was promptly accosted, searched and the missing property found in his pocket. It afterward transpired that the watch would not have struck, as it was out of order.—London Express.

A Thorough Case.

Every schoolroom is supposed to have its romancer, or boaster.

There was a mild epidemic of mumps in an uptown school not long ago, and a teacher asked the pupils in her room how many remembered having the disease.

A few remembered it, but most of them had never heard of it.

Then the romancer attracted the teacher's attention.

"I get the mumps, teacher," he smilingly said. "I get it around my face so. And I get one by each eye—and one under my neck."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Crude Petroleum.

Roumania holds the honor for the earliest production of crude petroleum, having put it on the market in 1857. Two years later the United States produced its first petroleum, 2,000 gallons. Italy was a producer the following year, and Canada, within twelve months, entered the field. Russia quickly followed, and for years these countries were the sole producers. Russia is now second only to this country.

Hawaii's Crater Lake.

Waiapele, or Green lake, on the island of Hawaii, is a body of fresh water in the pit of an old crater near Kapoho. This lake covers an area of about five acres and is fed by springs below the surface. A pumping plant takes water from this lake for domestic use and for irrigation purposes.

Whales.

The whale is not a fish. In everything which characterizes a true fish and separates it from other classes, as reptiles, birds and mammals, the whale resembles the last named (the mammals) and differs radically and fundamentally from the fish.—New York American.

VON SPEE AT THE NAVAL BATTLE OF THE FALKLAND ISLANDS

Montivideo, Dec. 30 (By mail to New York—Details of the great naval battle off the Falkland Islands when the British fleet of Vice-Admiral Sturdee sank the German vessels Scharnhorst, Gneisenau, Leipzig and Nurnberg, were given here by a Lieutenant aboard the dreadnought Invincible, the English flagship, which called here.

Sturdee's vessels were coaling in Port Stanley, Falkland Islands, leaving the Cruiser Canopus to perform scout duty outside, when at 7.30 a. m. a lookout aboard the scout spied the first German craft on the horizon. Sturdee was informed and ordered the cruisers Glasgow and Kent to put to sea at once.

The three cruisers served as a lure to Admiral Von Spee. Believing the enemy was inferior he advanced at full speed and opened a cannonade.

Half an hour after the first German had been seen from the Canopus the entire British squadron suddenly appeared, led by the great dreadnoughts Invincible and Inflexible.

Von Spee realized he was about to be trapped and ordered a retreat. It was too late. The German vessels scattered as they fled, but the British also divided forces and rapidly overhauled them.

The Glasgow got within range of her quarry first and began firing at the Leipzig. The latter fought with her stern guns, but rapidly displayed an inferiority as the shells of the Britisher landed with precision.

The cruiser Kent came up with the Nurnberg and did considerable damage; while the cruiser Cornwall steamed close to the Dresden.

The latter had reached a position far in advance of the rest of the German fleet and she won the only advantage of the Germans in the battle. She sent a broadside into the Cornwall below the waterline and hurt her so that the Dresden escaped, as did also one of the German auxiliary cruisers.

The principal struggle centered about the Scharnhorst and Gneisenau. Those were the largest of the German vessels, although vastly inferior to the Invincible and Inflexible.

By 1 P. M. the Scharnhorst and Gneisenau had been brought to bay and were forced to turn and fight. They attempted to concentrate their guns to the Invincible and with a howitzer shell cut one of the British four inch guns in two. They also sent a ball through the two decks aft and into the provision storeroom and the administration room of Vice-Admiral Sturdee.

The commander of the Invincible and several sailors were wounded by other Gorman shells.

But this availed the Germans little. At the end of an hour's firing it could be seen that the Scharnhorst was settling forward, while her fire slackened.

"Surrender!" Sturdee signalled.

"Never!" was the reply.

Not sixty seconds later the Invincible sent a shell into the Scharnhorst which caused her to disappear beneath the waves, firing to the last moment. As she went down the crew formed in perfect order above the deck rail.

There was no time to rescue the survivors who dotted the water with the Gneisenau still refusing to strike her colors. It was an hour before the hardy German, pitted with holes, went down as the Scharnhorst had done, full of fight as a wildcat.

Then the British sailors set to with a will to save all the Germans possible. Only a hundred, a few of whom were officers were picked up.

Meanwhile the fight continued between the cruisers Glasgow and Leipzig. The latter defended herself valiantly. She gave her pursuer several light injuries and caused a number of casualties amid wild cheers from the crew of the British cruiser. At the same time the cruiser Kent, after six hours of pursuit, came up with the Nurnberg and sank her. The Glasgow was able to save the sailors of the Leipzig.

At 6 P. M. the battle ended. Of the five German vessels only one remained. All the vessels of the British squadron except the Bristol, which was chasing the Dunston with great speed, returned to assemble at Port Stanley.

Vice-Admiral VonSpee had two sons with the German fleet, one of them then his adjutant on the Scharnhorst, the other an officer on the Leipzig. Both died with father.

When Vice-Admiral received word that the German squadron had been sighted while the British cruisers were coaling he very calmly ordered the work stopped. While the ships were getting under way the crews washed, changed their clothing and ate breakfast. During the pursuit lunch was served at the usual hour and the normal routine continued up to the moment of going into action.

Admiral Sturdee, speaking before the British committee, said: "I am proud to see how splendidly our men, with those of France and Russia, are holding their own against superior odds.

"In olden days we did better than at present, for we were able to capture ships. Now we had to sink them and all their crew of hundreds of souls. In this fight we had only eight men killed and fourteen wounded. The enemy's ship fought gallantly and went down with their colors flying.

"At the start our squadron divided in a certain way and the pursuit began, for the enemy had discovered what they were up against and made off. We steamed at twenty knots and in six hours had them within range. When they saw there was no escape they turned and accepted the inevitable. The first ship, the flagship, was sunk at 1 o'clock after five hours fighting. The Glasgow sank the Leipzig. The Nurnberg and Dresden got away, but the former was followed by a swift cruiser and sank. We saved some of the men.

"And so we have done our little bit and are ready to do more when required."

ELKS GETTING BALLROOM FLOOR READY FOR DANCE.

Work was started today on the new floor in the Elks' home and which is to be completed before February 15th the date set for the charity ball. FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

SORROWFUL WAIL.

BACKWARD, turn backward! oh, Time, in your flight. Make me a boy again just for to-night. Let me forget that the gas bill is due (doctor's bills make a fellow feel blue). The wife needs a dress and the kidlets need clothes. I'm chock full of sorrows and raindrops and woes. The high cost of living will drive me insane. Oh, Father Time, make me a youngster again. The papers are full of the horrors of war. I'm tired of reading of shooting galore. I want to forget all about tango teas. Oh! Father Time, make me a boy again, please. I'm sick and weary of politics, too. I want to repeat what I once used to do. Oh! take me once more to the old swimming hole, for winter is coming and I will need coal. The roof needs repairing, the butcher will sue—oh! debts and blazes, now what can I do. My daughter from college is dropping her "R's." She soon will be married. I'm thanking my stars. My wife joined the "vote seeking women's throng"—it's nothing but argue the blessed day long. The furniture man wants a dollar each week. Now, where is it coming from, gentle friend, do speak? I long for the taste of a cool cigar—the three for a nickel kind from a jar. The barber's dull razor pulls just like a hoe. I dare not complain, 'cause he trusts me, you know. Backward! turn backward! oh, Time, in your flight. Make me a boy again just for to-night.

CUT OFF HIS OWN HAND

Denver, March 18.—How he cut off his own hand at the wrist with a penknife, after being caught in the cogs of an electric pump was told here by Wallace E. Riitenhouse, who is suing the Colorado Fuel & Iron Company for $35,000 damages.

Rittenhouse claimed that the place where the electric pump was located was badly lighted. It was his duty to oil the pump. He slipped on a car wheel, catching in the gear wheel of the pump. Rittenhouse said he dropped his miner's candle and was left in total darkness. Held fast in the machinery, he struck a match with his free hand, relighted his candle and, drawing his knife, severed his arm at the wrist in order to free himself. He claims he then had to walk about 1,000 feet to reach aid.

STICK, STICK, STICK!

Every reader of The Evening Times knows by this time that the paper is designed for the promotion of the best interests as they appear of the city of Fulton. The Evening Times is no preacher, no teacher, but every reader probably knows how hard The Times is trying to get others to work for the campaign of making Fulton a better city in which to live, work and play. Now right here it should be noted that play is essential to the well being of everybody; and furthermore, it must be conceded that in the matter of playthings the city of Fulton is a little bit remiss. Most all of us, however, are optimistic, believing that with the pushing energy of the men who have come forward, girded about with the will to do or die, a real new era is bound to come to the city we all love to call "Our Home Town." The preachers and the teachers are interested in the new Chamber of Commerce. Isn't it jolly and bully, for in the work being done and to be done in the next three years every one of us—father, son, mother and daughter, is indispensable.

Think of it, Mr. Doubter, you who may have said, "It can't be done"; think of what The Evening Times is handing each of the six days of the week, as only a home paper can hand it to you—the stories of what the men of Fulton are doing to put this good old town of ours where she belongs. Think of the honest appeals the men are making for your support and, incidentally, remember The Evening Times is helping those men to help each one of us to get busy, and then, busier.

There is so much being done now in Fulton, and so much said about what is being done, that it might not be out of place to mention what is meant to be done. Transgression upon the duties of the American City Bureau is not intended, but in the language of The Evening Times here it is:

The new Chamber of Commeree is trying to awaken in our think-tanks more self-confidence, more self-reliance, more self-strength. And now, this very hour, is an exceptional time to begin to improve this self-command, this self-government!

Thinking over the work of the new Cchamber of Commerce since the beginning of the campaign, isn't it good to know that we have decision and a lot of faith in the old town. Knowing all this, there remains but three things to do, stick, stick, stick.

To stick is to win. There may be other ways of helping ourselves to help others, but mention of them would be out of place, so why not, each one of us, do all in our power to stick a pin wherever it will help to bind closer the ties of community building. If we do this we may be the means of furnishing employment for others, and then we shall become greater even than the greatest philanthropist.

Sticking IS winning.

THE BUSINESS IN HAND

In these days of masterful concentration in life's game the losing hand is played by the man who cannot keep his mind on the problem before him with something like the fixity and continuity of an Edison on the trail of an idea. It is so easy to be diverted. It is so natural and so human to give excuses. It is a constant temptation to allow the energies to be dissipated in a thousand and one directions—to scatter one's fire and hit nothing. These calm, self-controlled captains who go from one thing to the next, letting the past rest in its place and the future await their attention in its own time, are those whom enterprise are intrusted, in the confidence that they will be put through. Causes of moment are not committed to those who wear and tear themselves to pieces with petty worriment.

It is surprising how the chosen leaders seem to rise above the complexity of details and the pursuing multitude of cares that bewilder and overwhelm the underlings. They do not seem flurried or hustled. They leave the fuss and feathers to the little fellows. They have no time for the foolish wrangles that embroil committees about things that a week hence may be as dead as Pontius Pilate. "A hundred years hence what difference will it make?" is the question those with a faculty for getting things done have a way of asking, though they may not put the query audibly.

Parliamentary forms of debate, recognizing the right of the least to protest and the force of the will of the majority, have been evolved as part of the understood procedure of civilized folk, bringing the modern man far from the Stone Age habit of debating things with a hairy hand on the adversary's windpipe and a knee upon his chest. Laws have been made as representing man's effort to discern and proclaim right relations between a man and his fellows in a world that is the private estate of none. But behind printed statutes and forms is the figure of a man, with a soul indwelling, that counts for more than the learning of the ages which he carefully and rightly applies to the guidance of his conduct.

New machines may crowd out workmen here and there; never can they wholly obliterate the human element and make the most intelligent of created beings altogether a supernumerary. There will forever be a place for him who sees clearly what has to be done, and gets it done. The directors will always be men with a genius for brushing away the non-essentials. The reason why these busy men you know always appear to have time to undertake new concerns is that they know what to keep and what to discard. They concentrate. They are "all there." Their mental faculties in a crisis are assembled and focused and not wool-gathering. Their words go like arrows to the point; they have no use for roundabout speech and tergiversation, the windy talk of one trying to cover up the broad, plain track that leads to his mistake.

These men that succeed do not waste their time on long-winded bores, and they do not neglect their own concerns to poke into the business of others and perhaps make a mess of things. The reason they get through so much in the hours of daylight is that they are never in arrears with their tasks and they do not procrastinate. They decide and they do not reverse their decisions. They made up their minds and they act, holding no post-mortems upon their own speech or conduct. Their sleep is sound because they dismiss things past mending from their minds, and they wake brain-clear and conscience-clear to the light of each new day.—Public Ledger.

Opinions

Mr. Wilson's Secretary of State

On Monday night, at a moment when the foreign relations of this country were reaching a crisis unparalleled in half a century, the Secretary of State was conducting a temperance revival in the Tabernacle of "Billy" Sunday in the city of Philadelphia.

Whole volumes of comment could not add to the humiliation of such a spectacle to every patriotic citizen of a great nation passing through a moment of international danger and menace. The revelation of actual conditions contained in the incident passes any possible amplification or elaboration.

By a convenient, if cowardly, device, the American public has come to attribute all the disgrace of the Bryan affair to Mr. Bryan himself. On the pleasant theory that "guilt is personal," it has been customary to blame the Secretary of State for continuing to be himself under all circumstances and in thee face of all responsibilities.

But the time is surely at hand when this fiction must be dropped. This country owes it to Woodrow Wilson that at the moment the British note was being transmitted to the State Department, at the precise time when a great international problem was posed for the nation, the Secretary of State was on his knees on a revival platform appending his signature to total abstinence pledges.

Was there ever in American history a spectacle more shameful, more completely illustrative of the spirit of the present administration? Mr. Bryan's influence made Mr. Wilson President. Mr. Bryan's assistance is of present and future political value to Mr. Wilson. This is conceded. But can Mr. Wilson find no other way to pay his political debts than by prostituting the great office of Secretary of State to such a service?

Again, if such prostitution could be passed over in time of peace, when the fidelity of subordination could cover with a thin but pleasing veil of decency the comic opera performances of the successor of Root, of Hay, of Seward, of Webster, of a line of great and distinguished American statesmen, must it be continued now in a world crisis?

If it must be continued let no one blame Bryan. An empty vaudevillian, without other virtues than those which vocal perfection have provided for the utterance of platitudes, he continues to do exactly what one of his kind is bound to do, what is to be expected of the Bryan-like all over the world. He is neither worse nor better than he was in 1896, in 1900, in 1908. The shame, the heavy, abiding shame, belongs to Woodrow Wilson and should henceforth be his to bear.

There are abuses, there are humiliations, there are scandals which neither time nor custom can quite make a nation tolerate. Mr. Bryan is one of these in his present office. A whole world has in this great crisis mobilized its statesmen, its leaders of thought and action. Europe has abolished party fines to recruit its ministries from the best of all political groups.

Yet in one of the great hours of world history, in one of the most momentous periods in the life of all nations and of our own nation, Woodrow Wilson maintains in the State Department a secretary whose highest possibilities are comprehended in the fact that on Monday night the larger part of an audience which came to see "Billy" Sunday stayed to hear Mr. Wilson's Secretary of State.— Tribune, N. Y.

Two Schools in Place of One

While Mr. William Wirt, Superintendent of Schools in Gary, proceeds with his work as expert adviser to New York's school system, the belief grows that his scheme of planning two schools in one building has nothing to do with providing part time. That is the correct impression. Mr. Wirt believes that even where there is ample room for all the pupils in a single school, this school should be converted into two duplicate schools, using only a part of the building, in order to give the pupils the greatest opportunities.

Under the single-school regime in this city a pupil cannot spend daily eight hours in study, work, and play, with the aid of teachers and directors. But unite two schools and two corps of teachers in one building, and, by a right distribution of time for classes, they can keep the classrooms, auditoriums, shops, library, and playground occupied all the time from 8:30 o'clock in the morning to 5:30 in the afternoon. A student may choose which of the two schools he will enter, and with it whether he will take all his regular subjects in the morning or afternoon. If he is in good health, and wishes to make up back work in another grade, he may enter the other school for the back work. Or, he may spend half a day at work in school shops or outside of school. Or, he might spend the full eight hours equally divided between study, vocational work, and play. A mother with two children might arrange to have one at home all the time by sending one to School X, the other to School Y, which have interlocking schedules.

A signal advantage of the scheme is in permitting the inexperienced teachers of one school to be assigned as assistants to the experienced teachers of the other. Initiative and responsibility may thus in large measure be given to strong teachers. Moreover, private teachers of music, and so on, may secure hours for their students at any stated time, organizing their classes as part of the school program. Churches, also, may secure hours for the religious instruction of children in their faiths. Meanwhile the school board operates and maintains only one plant in place of two; therefore, it can use the cost of operation and maintenance of the second plant to keep the one plant open longer hours and better equipped. Instead of erecting a second school building, the building money can be utilized for equipping workshops, playgrounds, gymnasiums, and swimming pools.

In Gary, where the children live a complete life eight hours a day in school pursuits and diversions, directed and helped by well-trained men and women, they assume the responsibility for equipping and maintaining the school plant by their own labor. Thus an industrial and commercial school for every pupil is provided without extra cost to taxpayers. Apprentices and masters do only enough work to cover the cost of salaries, materials, and tools. There are no evils of "child labor" in these model industrial shops. The secret of this training lies in conserving the time of children which in this city has been worse than wasted in the wild life of the streets.—Times, N. Y.

The Dardanelles and American Commerce

President Wilson believes there is something else for the United States government to do than to devote any great amount of its time or energy to academic protest against conditions it cannot hope to change. While there will be formal representations against the principle of Great Britain's "long distance blockade," just as there were against Germany's deathdealing submarine "war zone" whicch made necessary this British reprisal, these representations will have as their purpose keeping of the American record straight and obtaining for legitimate neutral commerce the best treatment it can reasonably expect in all the circumstances.

In the meantime there is work to be done and the President has set about doing it. Steps are already being taken at Washington to prepare the way for American commerce to take full advantage of the opportunity for new markets that will come with the opening up of the Dardanelles.

According to the Washington view, the forcing of the Dardanelles by the fleets of the Allies will be of greatest commercial importance to the United States. Russia which has been buying manufacturers from Germany to a valuation of more than $200,000,000 a year, will then present large possibilities to the American manufacturer. The President believes the American manufacturer should have this trade and under his direction the Department of Commerce is paving the way for its capture.

Success in this direction will, it is confidently believed, more than offset any deleterious results that may flow from the hampering of commerce by conditions in the North Sea.

Modern Times or The Unreal

BY L. E. HYDE FULTON N. Y.

And now that Easter's drawing near, the hen may go on strike we fear, or, raise her price, I'll bet. It's our most earnest deep intention, to start a strictly new invention. We'll call it—pure Eggette. We have a substitute for land, and butter that you can't keep hard, and sugar made from beets. Our maple syrup's made from barks. We fill ourselves with frauds and larks. We're (Wiley) of our eats. We have our milk without a cow. We take it from a tin can now; they call it St. Charles Cream. We know it is not watered stock, nor yet come from a diseased flock. It must be—pure milkeen. Our buns, we think, are made from wheat. We're not quite sure just what we eat. But, this is (swell)—puffed rice. Our seasoning we squeeze from tubes. Our soup we make from bouillon cubes, or, broth condensed from mice. They've packed all velvets on the shelves, so now, we drape and wrap ourselves in goods called velveteen. Instead of silk, we buy silkette. Some things are pure, I know, and yet, our satin is sateen. I wonder what the trade will be in twenty-hundred ninety-three. They'll call the world—spherette. For man and woman will have grown. They'll thrive on crops that we have sown. So, you and I "should fret."

Aerial Squadrons Ordered for Army and Navy Use

Aerial Age, a new weekly publication on aeronautical topics, issued by Henry Woodhouse, will announce in its issue this week that the United States navy has placed an order with Burgess Company, of Marblehead, Mass., for a squadron of six hydroaeroplanes, and that the United States army has ordered another composed of eight tractor biplanes from the Curtiss Aeroplaning Company, of Hammondsport, N. Y., with Curtiss of 90-horse power.

The Burgess Company, of which W. Starling Burgess is the head, produces a type of inherently stable tailless biplane, developed from the patents of Lieutenant Dunne, formerly a British officer. One of these machines, with landing chassis, using a French motor of 120-horse power, was bought by the army last fall and has been giving good service. The Burgess Company bid with five other constructors recently to furnish a squadron of six hydroaeroplanes required by the navy. Their bid for six was $9,675 each, with $280 additional each for instruments.

One Bid Lower

There was one lower bidder, the Peoli Aeroplan Company, a neew enterprise, which is just producing its first aeroplan at Washington. The proposals included two additional engines, for which the Burgess Company bid 4,325 each.

The navy's requirements were considered very exacting by designers, particularly that of delivery in two months' time, and this prevented many from bidding for the squadron, though seven others offered to build three in the time allowed. The chief difficulties were to give the required speed of eighty miles an hour to a heavy craft lifting about 1,100 pounds, besides its own weight, and equal to buffeting of rough water and floating in a twenty-five mile wind. No heavy seaplane in use by any European Power produces the eighty mile speed required. Only light one-man machines of foreign armies and navies are equal to it, the designers all declare.

For the army there has been no open competition of bidders, much to the dissatisfaction of several who were prepared to enter such a contest. The competition advertised for last October, with $30,000 to be expended on successful aeroplanes, was abandoned on technical grounds. A sample order was placed with Glenn H. Curtiss for the tractor biplane which he took to San Diego for the army trials and which he demonstrated with Raymond V. Morris as pilot.

This machine gave America a new altitude record, with Captain H. Leroy Muller, U. S. A., as pilot, at 17,185 feet. In addition a new American duration record was made by Lieutenant Byron I. Jones, U.S.A., flying one of Glenn L. Martin's biplanes, in which the Curtiss water cooled V type, 90-horse power motor had been installed. This same machine, with some alterations, it is believed, a few days ago gave to the army a world duration record for aviator and two passengers, seven hours and fifteen minutes, the pilot again being Lieutenant Jones.

Further details of the exact requirements for the new army and navy machines will be awaited with great interest in the aeroplane industry, particularly as to the motor, owing to the rivalry of the air and water cooled types. The army orders are for the water cooled stationary cylinder Curtiss motor, but the navy's choice is unknown, though it has hitherto favored the same type. Mr. Burgess himself has recently developed an air cooled stationary motor, and the army has placed a sample order for Emile Berliner's gyro rotary air cooled engine of 110-horse power, which has been giving good results near Garden City on the Heinrich and Huntington military tractor biplanes.

Greece Issues Order Affecting Parcel Post from U. S.

Hereafter the parcel post will accept no firearms destined for Greece unless the sender presents a certificate from the Greek Ministry of the Interior. This announcement was made yesterday following a letter from the postal administration of Greece.

"In conformity with an act recently put in force" the letter says, "the importation into Greece of pistols and revolvers by parcel post is permitted only on the presentation of a certificate of the Ministry of the Interior of Greece. If a parcel containing any of the articles in question is not acccompanied by such certificate, and if the addressee fails to present such a certificate within the period of one month after receipt of the parcel in Greece, the parcel will be returned to its origin."

ROBERT LANSING WOULD OBSERVE LAKE'S DISCOVERY

Robert Lansing, counselor to the state department, Washington. D. C., strongly advocates the observance of the 300th anniversary of the landing of a white man on the soil of what is now Jefferson county. He declared that the discovery of Lake Ontario by Samuel de Champlain was a noteworthy event in history.

The proposition to celebrate the anniversary is meeting with much favor among the patriotic societies of the county. The women are particularly interested and there is every prospect that some fitting observance of the landing of Champlain will be celebrated. The landing of Champlain at Henderson bay also marked the discovery of Lake Ontario by the white man and it is pointed out that this is one of the most important events in American history.

Mr. Lansing at thee Old Home Week celebration in 1905 prepared an article on early evplorations of the Jefferson county region, and he is particularly interested in the movement to celebrate the anniversary.

In a letter to The Times today he says:

"I saw in a recent issue of The Times an article and editorial proposing a public celebrathion of the tri-centenary of Champlain's discovery of Lake Ontario and his expedition through the region now occupied by Jefferson county.

"The discovery of the Great Lakes by the famous Freench explorer seems to me an event far worthier of commemoration than his visit to Lake Champlain in 1609. whicch was publicly celebrated five years ago. The expidition of Champlain to the Huron country and thence to the northern and eastern shores of Ontario possesses great historical value, in that it introducced French domination over the territory about the Great Lakes and opened up the Far West to French enterprise. The visit to Lake Champlain was a mere incident. The visit to Ontario was one of the great events in American history.

"I sincerely hope that the movement which you have launchel may succeed and that Champlain's passage along the eastern shores of the Lake three hundred years ago may be commemorated with appropriate ceremonies, and that some substantial memorial may be erected, which will be to future generations a constant reminder of the enterprise of the intrepid Frenchcman who first stepped foot on the soil of Old Jefferson, and gave to thee civilized world the first knowledge of the great chain of lakes which today constitutes the largest system of inland waterways in the world.

"If there is any way in which I can be of assistancec in carrying forward the plan proposed, which ought to appeal to all who take pride in our country, I will be only too glad to be of service.

"Very sincverely yours,
"Robert Lansing."

1915 STYLES IN NEW YORK

Princess Models, Scallops and Binding; Return to Shapeliness

New York, March 18.—No one epoch is responsible for present styles, though early Victorian and Directoire influences predominate. It is a queer mixture, Victoria and Josephine, but the woman of today considers only the appeal which the various models make to her taste and requirements.

The Directoire influence is responsible for the striped skirts, topped with little coats of plain material. With these the various tricorne and high turban hats are in perfect accord while with the Victorian flaring skirts and tightly outlined bodice, the prettiest hats have wide brims touched up with groups of pink roses suggesting dainty gowns that should smell of lavender. Slim yellow gloves have been brought out in Paris for this type of costume, and oddly shaped small parasols that will give them the proper cachet when Summer arrives.

Accessories

Black velvet belts caught with smoked pearl buckels, and prim velvet bows with ends, fastening below turnover collars of stiff white organdie and lace berthas around the round decolletage caught with full blown roses or Camelias are all Victorian trifles reviewed. Then there are dancing skirts with old fashioned lace flounces festooned under roses, and long lacce sleeves prolonged over the hand into mits with thumbs.

While long tight sleeves are very much worn there is, so far, no indication of leg of mutton styles, but elbow sleeves are undoubtedly on the way, as indicated by new smart models. There is a delightful liberty in the way of arm covering, to each arm its sleeve, seems to be the prevaling motto. If the arm is lovely, the Greek shoulder drapery is a fitting setting, since it hides no fraction of the arm. Then there are the various wing sleeves, with their filmy floating draperies to match or contrast with the gown. These have a most enticing effect in the dance. Sometimes these draperies are caught to the wrist with bracelets of chrystal or they may be left swaying to form a graceful veil for the back of the figure.

McCall Design

Skirt Lines

With all the prevalence of circvular flares in skirts and coats, the tunic topping a quite narrow skirt is not yet out of the running for many women are loth to abandon its specially becoming lines. They like the tunic and have still the backing of some of the most noted designers, but it is a waning, not a coming style.

No one who sees the way in which street gowns or coat dresses as they are often called—are being taken up by the smartly turned out crowd here, can doubt that Princess lines are coming rapidly to the fore.

One very new model shows the full skirt hung to the tight fitting bodice with many gathers, but rows of shirring held in with cords preserve the princcess silhouette to the knee line.

The Return of Shapliness

The woman with a fine figure and an erect, graceful carriage has come into her own this season, for however diverse the models they one and all depend upon the lines beneath for their proper effect.

Plain tailored or fussy styles, loose fits or those that show the revived nip-in at the waist, all need to be worn over a corset built on authoritative style lines. The new Spring models in Warner's rust proof corsets show a higher top and new boning cleverly designed to bring the figure into line with fashion's latest demands, without sacrificing comfort or the wearing qualities guaranteed in this make.

Embroideries in self color with a touch of silver or gold braid are very much employed for trimmings of all sorts of gowns and tops. The prevailing fancy for pockets, yokes, and similar empiecements lends itself to this form of decoration.

Perhaps nothing else gives such an air of elegance and distinction to a wrought on the dress material. Clever needlewomen are taking advantage of this mode and turning out embrodiered empiecements at only the cost of a little time, which would add greatly to the cost of their garments if the work had to be paid for.

The Scent of Flowers.

As a rule the scent of flowers does not exist in them as in a store or gland, but rather as a breath, an exhalation. While the flower lives it breathes out its sweetness, but when it dies, the fragrance usually ceases to exist. The method of stealing from the flower its fragrance while it is still living is no new thing, and it is not known when it was discovered that butter, animal fat or oil would absorb the odor given off by living flowers placed near them and would themselves become fragrant.

No Use.

When you fail to wind up your timepiece there is no use to swear next morning like a pirate when you discover that it has served as one of the silent watches of the night.—New Orleans States.

BILL TO MAKE GOOD LOSSES

Under It Merchants of City May Secure Redress for Loss Incurred by Firm's Failure

A bill that will interest merchants and others who furnished to the McDermott contracting company material and supplies for barge canal work is to be introduced, it is expected next week, in the Assembly.

The bill is before the committee on claims and is known as No. 347. Speaker Sweet is confident the bill will pass, as it has been already reported favorably by the committee. No. 347 will give the Board of Claims power to hear and determine all claims for work, labor services and material performed and furnished to the debtor firm. Its context follows:

"Jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the board of claims to hear and determine claims of all persons heretofore performing work, labor and services or furnishing material to the McDermott Contracting Company, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in connection with that portion of the improvement of the Oswego canal, at Fulton, as authorized by chapter one hundred and forty-seven of the laws of nineteen hundred and three and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, known and designated as barge canal contract number ten; such campany having failed, as elleged, to pay the amounts due for one or more items of such accounts. The state hereby consents to have its liability determined in regard to such matters by such board, and that such board award against the state and in favor of such claimants such amounts as may be just and equtiable. Na claim shall be allowed unless supported by legal evidence that would establish the claim against such company. No such claim shall be heard or determined unless filed with the board within six months after this act takes effect.

PULASKI LAWYERS WIN VERDICT FOR $33,000

Pulaski, March 18.—One of the largest, if not the largest, verdicts ever returned by a jury in the northern or western part of the State, and which was for $33,000, has recently been awarded the plaintiffs in the action of Blaine J. Snock of Walker and several insurance companies against the New York Central Railroad Company, which was tried in Supreme Court at Rochester. Surrogate Clayton I. Miller and his law partner, Attorney William K. Bentley, were the atorneys for the plaintiffs.

The damages were asked for loss through fire and the novel feature of the case in question was water coming in contact with lime, thereby slacking it and causing the fire. The water was backed up on account of a culvert becoming clogged and which was under the right of way of the railroad company. The case in question was one of several causes of action which emanated out of the same fire. Miller & Bentley represented the parties who are the plaintiffs in the other cases.

WERE YOU THERE? WHERE? AT BALL

If You Were Not Then You Missed Something Novel and Entrancing

The Elks' ballroom was last night a scene of splendor. It was the occasion of the second ball of the season, but at no other ball in this city of recent months has there been witnessed a scene similar to that of St. Patrick's day evening, 1915.

"In the first place, the room was massed with decorations of bunting and rosettes, and protruding from vantage spots were the green and gold flags of the Emerald Isle. As a man guest entered the Elks' home he was presented with a "shove-pipe" hat, which he wore during the evening cocked upon one side of his head. Green silk handkerchiefs were handed the men, and these were stuffed in a vest buttonhole.

Small green poke bonnets were handed the women guests, and these were worn, all of the evening.

With 8 pieces in the orchestra all the Irish airs were played—old melodies as well as "It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary," which was used for all the latest trots. At midnight a buffet luncheon was served by the committee, after which dancing was resumed. The entire affair was voted a most enjoyable one and all who were present hope for a repetition on next St. Patrick's day.

THE GIROUX FAMILY GAVE BIRTHDAY PARTY

The birthday party given by Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Giroux at their home last night was a most enjoyable affair, more than forty persons being present.

The dining room, which was tastefully decorated, was gotten up in a green and red color scheme, all the daintiest blending in a harmonious softness with the deep red shades on the candles placed about the flower bedecked table. At the supper the host and hostess were made to tell all the trials and triumphs of their courtship, which they did to the great enjoyment of all present. After supper cards occupied the attention of the guests and prizes were awarded to Mrs. Elsie Post, Mrs. Merton, Mrs. Blodgett and Mrs. DeBoise.

The evening's entertainment closed with a piano selection by Miss Grace Bond accompanied by her son Master Russell who gave a demonstration of his whistling ability. Mrs. Ernest Villanove of Syracuse was the only guest from outside of Fulton.

Constructive Patriotism

Constructive patriotism is the greatest asset any community can possess. The same type of patriotism which inspired the issuance of the Declaration of Independence; whih sent the Continentals of 1776 into the heat of battle and into the activities of statesmanship, is the very type of patriotism needed to build cities. Our national forefathers not only declared their love of country, but they proved that love by the loftiest example of action. They were constructive patriots. They did not satisfy themselves with words. They demonstrated their patriotism by laboring to build a nation.

There is no difference between the patriotism of 1914 and the patriotism of 1776. The world is a little older, but the propelling forces of human action are the same. The public-spirited man of today is public in action, as well as public in thought. He is identical with the soldier-patriot who abttled to build a nation a hundred and thirty-seven years ago. The man who today talks and does little is like the boaster of 1776, who did his fighting with his tongue. The man who lauds the flag and then grasps the flag in hand to advance it triumphantly is a hero. The man who lauds the flag and then waits for some one else to carry it forward is not the man to whom monuments are erected.

A single man who plunges in and does things is worth a whole carload of men who never cross the line of useful action. The man of action is like a lever—he helps to lift his community. He is a constructive patriot of precious value. He is sure to be a member of the Chamber of Commerce.

W. J. PENTELOW LEADS CORONA

Former Resident, as Mayor of Corona is Actively Engaged in Building Corona

W. J. Pentelow, a former Fulton resident, now of Corona, Cal., is, according to reports received thru press and by letter, showing our western neighbors that one from the east can become a most useful citizen in the west.

Corona and Los Angeles recently celebrated with a banquet the completion of a trolley line joining the two places. The Riverside Daily Press says:

The club house was beautifully decorated in evergreens, potted plants and cut flowers, At each plate had been placed a beautiful pink carnation. From one end to the other of the main banquet table a miniature railroad was laid. A miniature trolley car with "Corona" on one end and "Los Angeles" on the other, traversed the system and the novelty was very appropriate for the occasion. The car was run by electricity. Instead of the over-head trolley wire, a third rail system was used. For an hour this car ran between Los Angeles and Corona, by way of Riverside.

Mayor W. J. Pentelow, spoke in the highest praise of the work done in accomplishing great things for the city of Corona. When the mayor was introduced he was warmly received, and the subject of his talk was "Our City."

When Mayor Pentelow had finished every man seated at the banquet was convinced that Corona was not only the most beautiful city, but the busiest city in the Golden State.

"We have no knockers in Corona," he said at the start of his talk. "What few of this class we do have are 'pounders.'

"This day has been a record maker for Corona. Today we are making a great start for our future development. I have prayed for this end. When I came to Corona eleven years ago I was assured that the Southern Pacific would be extended to Corona in less than a year. I can say now that it was misplaced confidence.

For the benefit of the Pacific Electric officials who sat near him, Mayor Pentelow went into statistics to prove to President Shoup and General manager McMillan that their company made no mistake in building its line from Arlington to Corona.

Corona is indeed to be congratulated on her progressive and active citizen, W. J. Pentelow. Evidently what has been Fulton's loss is Corona's gain.

GRAND OPERA TOMORROW

Never before in the history of the North American continent has there been such a rush of grand opera singers to this hemisphere, hence the impresarios have been able to secure the most expensive artists for this season in America. This is naturally accounted for on account of the European conflict which has upset all the big musical centers of the old country. Realizing this the ever alert management of the Royal Grand Opera Company, secured many of thesefamous song-birds, for a spring tour of the United States and Canada, who under ordinary conditions, could not be secured for such a tour, on account of the enormous salaries. While many foreign countries are striving for might, America will enjoy a rare treat, by having the opportunity to hear such famous grand opera singers as never before appeared with a traveling operatic organization. Messrs. Farrara and Odierno known the world over as impressarios of rare genius have spared no expense in causing this to be the one great, big treat to music lovers of the higher class. The Royal Grand Opera Company will be seen here at The Quirk Theatre Friday, March 19, in "Il Trovatore" with Mme. Dorvalle, Edwards, Sigs. Manro, Ansalone and Turner.—Adv.

The women of Rebekah Lodge will serve one of the suppers for which they are famous Saturday evening, from 5 to 8 o'clock. The dinning-room in I.O.O.F. hall will be opened to the members and guests, and the following appetizing menu will be served:

Clam chowder; scalloped potatoes; macafoni and cheese; white rolls; brown bread; salad; apple pie and cake; tea and coffee.

HYDE'S TEAM WON

In the Modern Woodmen of America membership contest, which terminated last night, Captain Hyde produced five candidates against Captain Middleton's one, making the total 39 to 35 in favor of the first named gentleman.

No pool games were played last night, as Captain Ives was absent, but next week it is expected that he will be on hand with a few good shots in one sleeve to be put over the other fellows.

BELIEVES IN DEFENSE

Bishop Olmstead Gives Out Statement on Peace Movement

Utica—As leader of the Peace society movement in this city, the Right Rev. Charles Tyler Olmstead, Bishop of the Central New York Episcopal Diocese, gave out a statement in which he expressed the belief that, while militarism is detestable, lack of proper and rational defense to protect the country from raids of nations little more than barbarous, would be suicidal. Bishop Olmstead said:

"I feel convinced that universal peace will never come until we have learned as individuals to follow the teachings of Christ, and I hope that it may be one of the best lessons of this war that people should learn to teach these principles to their children.

"But of course, that is going to take a long time for its accomplishment and in the meantime the question is, what is the best thing to do with regard to armaments?

"Militarism is by all means to be avoided, but I suppose that until the warlike nations have learned not to impose upon peaceful ones, and so long as there is danger of bombardments and bombs, both by land and sea, there will have to be some means of defending the peaceable and quiet inhabitants and of protecting ourselves from tyrannical raids of more or less barbarous people.

"So that while I believe in peace societies and in all the teachings that they can give and the sentiments that they can inspire, I am not prepared to say that there should be no means of self-defense.

"I understand that that is recognized in the New York Peace Society, which is said to have members who hold some to one side and some to the other side of that question. We all detest what is called militarism and would like to abolish it as soon as possible, but we should have some means of self-defense."

OSWEGO WOULD EXACT LICENSE FROM HUCKSTERS

Oswego, March 18.—A delegation of at least twenty Oswego merchants was present at the Council meeting Tuesday to give strength to a widely signed protest against allowing hucksters from out of town to peddle their wares in the city streets during the summer season. The petition was to the effect that a license of $75 per year be exacted. Remarks favoring the high license were made by Patrick Dowd, S. C. Dutcher, George B. Clement, W. C. Gange and Allan W. Davis.

Mayor Hennessey and several of the aldermen said they were in sympathy with them ovement and that City Attorney McCaffrey was now at work off an ordinance which would prevent the out of town invasion. Mayor Hennessey said it was a big problem, that the State laws gave certain rights, and furthermore that such rights could not be interfered with by ordinances. The matter was referred to the city attorney and license committee. Copies of ordinances govering hucksters in Syracuse and Fulton will be secured to assist the committee.

NEW INDUSTRY'S QUICK GROWTH

The Fulton Auto Top Works Seeks Larger Quarters; 50 South 2nd st. Will House New Concern

One of the new industries of the city, the Fulton Auto Top Works, which was established about a year ago, has outgrown its present quarters in North 5th st. and will within a few days be moved to 50 S. 2d st.

O. A. and J. F. Perchway are the progressive managers. J. F. Perchway has for some time been associated with the O. Henderson Co., but on Monday becomes manager of the New York shop. He will also have charge of the business management of Auto Top Works.

The new company is engaged in an exclusive line of work in this section. The remaking of auto and carriage cushions, rejuvenating of tops, and the making of dust covers, slips, top curtains, etc., will be the line of work followed.

At present the works have orders for the relining of one of Fulton's finest cars, and several other prospects are on hand, and will be taken up as soon as the removal has been effected.

STATE PAY ROLL MADE PUBLIC

Senator Sage's Committee Made Public Today the Report of Each Department

Albany, March 18 .—Senator Sage, Chairman of the Finance Committee presented in the Senate today the following report of the study which the Committee has been making of the payrolls of the State departments:

To the Senate:

Thee Finance Committee, whicch has been investigating the causes of the large increase in the cost of administering the State government thinks it due to the Senate at this time before the big appropriation bills are presented to it for consideration to lay before it some of the results of this investigation. Your Committee desires to say at the outset that it entered upon this investigation with no preconceived notions and with no theories to which it was bound to make the facts accord. Immediately after the appointment of the Committee letters were sent to the head of every administrative department asking him to furnish for the use of the Committee detailed facts as to the payroll of the department from and including the fiscal year 1906 to and including the first quarter of the current fiscal year.

From this examination were excluded the judiciary, the State charitable institutions and the National Guard outside of the office of the Adjutant-General because of the lack of time to receive the necessary returns; the Departments of Efficiency and Economy and the State Fire Marshal because their contemplated abolishment would make the figures which they might furnish useless for purposes of comparsion, and the Workmen's Compensation Commission because of its recent establishment. In making this investigation the Committee was not concerned with the personnel of the departments. It did not ask for the names of the employees; simply for the number under each title with the salaries.

105 Per Cent. Increase

A tabulated statement of the returns to this letter from thirty-two of the departments is made a part of this report. The tabulation is made by two-year periods, with the exception that the proposed payroll for the current fiscal year is estimated on the payroll of the first quarter as it was returned to this Committee. Summarized this tabulation shows that while from 1906 to 1910 the increase in the payroll was 32 per cent, the increase since 1910 has been 55 per cent. while during the total period the increase has been 105 per cent.

Another subject for study and comparsion by your committee has been the percentage of the total appropriations for the general fund for each fiscal year which has been used for the payment of salaries, in the departments considered. Of course, if the entire State's pay-roll were considereed these percentages would be muche larger. This study has proved as illuminating to your committee as has the other study of the totals. In this study your committee has used the appropriations made in the preceding year out of which the State's employees are paid. This percentage kept along evenly at between 16 and 18 per cent. until the current year when it took a sudden jump to 23 per cent., showing conclusively that upon whatever foundation may rest the claims to economy of those who were responsible for the appropriations of last year it was not a reduction in the salary list. This is further shown by the fact that while the pay-roll for the fiscal year of 1914 for these departments was $8,855,569 they were organized on the first day of January on an annual pay-roll basis of $9,284,756, a contemplated increase of $429,187, or nearly 5 per cent. in a year while the total appropriations decreased about $9,000,000 from the preceding year.

That a good share of this increase is due to the entrance of the State upon new fields is undoubtedly true but it by no means accounts for it all, for the increases are not confined to the departments upon which new burdens have been placed. An examination of the table which is attached to this report will show that this increase is general. It will also show that may of the departments upon which no new duties have been placed by statute have increased their payroll out of all due proportion to some upon which new duties have been added. For instances the Department of Education is constantly increasing its field of labors. The pay-roll increase is this Department since 1910 is but 22 per ccent. TheState Board of Charities for the performance purely of its administrative functions shows an increase during the same period of 86 per cent. The increase of the number of persons holding office during the past four years has added to the duties of the State Civil Service Commission. Its annual payroll has increased 81 per cen. while that of the Fiscal Supervisor has increased 107 per cent.

While the pay-rolls of both the State Board of Charities and the Fiscal Supervisor show this remarkable increase in the past four years, an examination of the appropriations made by the last Legislature show a remarkable lack of consideration for the hpysical needs of the property of the State which is under their care.

Where Increases Were Made

Enough has been presented in this report to show that the pay-roll increase has been general and not confined to those departments whose activities have been increased by statute. It can be demonstrated even more emphatically, however, by eliminating from calculation the increases in departments whose activities have been increased by statute. Reference is had to the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Health, the Department of Labor, and the Department of Architecture. It is in these departments that the largest pay-roll increases are noted and the claim is made that they are justified by an increase in the activities of the departments. Without attempting to pass upon the merits at this time of these increases, they could all be eliminated from consideration, the departments left on the same pay-roll basis they were in 1910 and still the total pay-roll of the State would show an increase of 41 per cent. since that time as compared with an increase of 32 per cent. from 1906 to 1910.

Two things are apparent to the Committee from a careful study of these pay-rolls: First, that in departments whose activities have been increased by statutes there has been a steady increase in pay-rolls, these increases being much accelerated during the past four years. We believe that an administration of these departments having due regard to economy and at the same time to the efficiency of the department could very largely decrease these expenses. There is no question that there are useless mploys in very department in this State. There is no question that many salaries have been unduly increased for reasons entirely outside of the best interests of the department. This matter can be cured but only with the full co-operation of the responsible heads of the different departments.

Second, in those departments where some of the largest increases occur there is no question that an appreciable part of these increases is due to the passage of laws necessarily increasing the work of these departments. We call attention to the increases immediately above in the departments of Agriculture, Health and Labor.

Agriculture in 1906 had a pay-roll of $111,298, in 1915 of $335,316. The pay-roll of the Department of Health in 1906 was $33,131, and in 1915, $263,060, and that of the Department of Labor in 1906, was $99,601, and in 1915 it was $536,500.

There is no question that the pay-rolls of these departments could be cut down notwithstanding their added activities, but we submit these figures principally to show the burden that the new laws governing these departments have put on the taxpayers of the State. It is a grave question and worthy of careful consideration as to whether the benefit derived from these new laws is commensurate with the expense that they entail. It is only fair that the people of the State should know exactly what these new activities are costing them and it is for them to say whether they desire these large increases to continue.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By Frederic T. Cardoze

Albany, March 18.—That another State prison is imperative, is the conviction of John B. Riley, superintendent of State prisons. Superintendent Riley lays stress upon the fact that the increased population of the penal institutions of the State is a matter which requires immediate attention and says that preparation should be made by the present legislature to construct a modern prison to take care of the overflow of convicts.

Since the term of office of Superintendent Riley began he has endeavored to secure an appropriation far a new cell block for Sing Sing prison in the face of the fact that there has been a movement to abolish that prison. He holds that there are not enough cells to accommodate the prisoners already there and that to do away with the prison entirely would make it practically impossible to care for the men convicted of crime.

The housing of the prisoners at Sing Sing is such as to meet with the emphatic disapproval of Superintendent Riley and yet he has been unable to secure an appropriation to build a new cell block for that institution.

A movement was started some years ago to erect a new State prison. In 1906 the legislature made provision for the establishment of a commission to secure a site for a new prison to take the place of Sing Sing and such a site was located at Bear Mountain. Construction work was commenced there but never completed. In 1910 the legislature set apart a site as an addition to Pallisades Park and authorized the selection of still another site. The commission then purchased what is known as the Wingdale site and awarded a contract for the erection of a new prison there. The construction work was stopped in 1911 upon the ground that the site was unsuitable. The members of the commission resigned in 1911, and in June 1913, the vacancies were filled. The legislature, however, has not made any provision to carry out the work for which the commission on new prisons was created.

All this leads up to the present overcrowded conditions at the prisons of the State which condition does not bid fair to be immediately relieved. At no time in the history of the State has there beens uch a large number of prisoners confined at one time. This fact has again led Superintendent Riley to make an effort to secure a sufficient appropriation for the construction of a new State prison or at least for the erection of a new cell block for Sing Sing.

At the present time there are five hundred more prisoners than the normal capacity of all the penal institutions in the State can accommodate. This does not take into consideration the female prisoners. Superintendent Riley points out that although the average daily population of the State prisons is from three thousand three hundred to three thousand four hundred, there are today nearly five thousand three hundred serving time in the four State prisons for men in New York State.

The Republican party is adhering rigidly to its promise of economy and it does not appear probable that much will be done to further the ambitions of Superintendent Riley along prison building lines. It has frequently been pointed out by the legislative leaders of the party that the expenses of the State must be curtailed and that an earnest and effective effort will be made to do so.

Curfews and Kids

The irreconcilable antagonism between curfew laws and the city kid, is expressed in lively fashion by the Around the Town man of the Albany Times-Union, who says:

We are advised that the object of the proposed curfew law is to protect from harm the many youngsters who play on the streets after dark. But why spoil the children's fun with a curfew law? If the youngsters are in danger of harm, why not "curfew" those who venture to harm the kids. The children naturally feel that they have the same right on the street after dark as their pas and mas, and as all youngsters have not the good fortune of having desirable back yards in front of their homes in which to play, they should be allowed to play on the streets where they may shout to beat the band and develop their vocal pipes.

Boys and girls who are chased indoors by curfew laws are sure to grow up to be boobs, and boys who are restricted from romping and roughing it on the streets after dark will eventually develop into that undesirable class of gents commonly known as "henpecks." It strikes us that the rising generation of Albany is just as safe on the streets after dark as they would be indoors annexed to their mothers' apron strings. The streets are well lighted and well policed and the cops carry big night sticks a yard long, and any pesky cuss who would attempt to molest the kids would be sure to get all that is coming to him, and more, too.

We all of us played in the streets and made mud pies when we were kids, and there were no blue laws to chase us in doors and spoil the fun. "Them were the happy days!" We had few cares and troubles then to mar our youthful bliss. Those of us who were buoyant boys in those days may have been afflicted with large ears, or maybe we toed in some and those who were girls then may have had turned up noses or freckles on their faces as large as a griddle cake, but we kids didn't bother much then about little things like that, for we felt that we were very fortunate that there were no curfew laws to jar us.

While the Albany writer might not feel quite that way if he were speaking of conditions in a city the size of Buffalo, it is hard to put the curfew to a better use that the one to which Gray reduced it of tolling the knell of parting day, and there is plenty of argumentative force, as well as inherent justice, in the Times-Union plea for the right of the kid to the sidewalk.—Times, Buffalo.

Still the Same.

He—Miss Onceyounger doesn't seem to change much with the years. She—Well, it isn't for want of trying. She has endeavored to change everything from the color of her hair to her last name.—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

"CABIRIA" TONIGHT

Local theatre-goers, having heard of the success achieved by "Cabiria," and having read the critic's accounts of the beauty and splendor of this masterpiece photo spectacle, from the pen of Gabriel D'Annunzia, Italy's literary genius, crowd theatres where it is shown twice daily, to witness the projection of a $250,000 motion picture in which 5,000 actors and supers participated, and which it took two years to complete.

Beginning with the eruption of Mt. Aetna, in Sicily, in the first part, the audiences sit as if in trance, watching, spellbound, spectacles that have never before been equalled, and closely following the interesting story of the sweet little Cabiria, who, losing her home during the eruption, is rescued by her nurse, only to fall into the hands of Phoenicia pirates who carry her to Carthage, where she is sold in the slave market to the High priest of the Temple of Moloch, who wishes her as a sacrifice to the god. Twice saved from the burning fire of the sacrificial altar, by Fulviue and his giant slave Maciste, Cabiria, grown to beautiful womanhood is called Elessa and brought, a bride, by Fulvius, back to her native land. At the Quirk tonight, benefit of public welfare work. —Advertisement.

ELKS' BIG ELMS GETTING A GROOMING

The Thompson Bros., experts in the care of trees, of Sodus, have been awarded a contract for the trimming scraping of the stately elm trees which adorn the front of the Elks' home.

The firm began the work yesterday. Each tree will have its bark scraped in order that bad spots may be detected. This work is often the means of discovering worm holes or growth, which might be injurious to the life of the tree. An insect called the elm bark beetle is the one to be most feared, for it bores through the bark in many places, gradually reaching the very heart of the tree. Thompson Bros.' representative says that some cavity work will be done as well as a large amount of trimming. The four great elm trees, one maple and one beech now standing on the lawn will all be thofoughly gone over giving them, new vigor and preserving them from a parisitical death.

CONSCRIPTION IN ENGLAND

London, March 1, (by mail to New York).—There is no conscription in England. But there is a form of "Persuasion, that is just as effective, by which Lord Kitchener's army has, in part, been made up.

The big landowners of England are among the most effective recruiters that England has today. There are parts of the little island of England where one may stand on a high hill and look about him with field glasses and know that every inch of land, as far as he can see, is owned by one man. On this land are small villages. These villages have their homes, their business streets, their public libraries, their hotels and railroad stations and postoffices, but every institution in the village and every person exists in that district by permission of the duke or lord who owns the land. To these persons in such villages the goodwill of the landowner is of more importance that the goodwill of the king. "His Grace," as the tenants call him, possesses an almost unlimited power over the lives and actions of the tenants.

"His grace," in one of these small towns, has only to publicly express his wish that every able bodied young man in the place shall enlist and after that wish is expressed woe betide the young man, who, several weeks later, without good reason, is still found within the village precincts. The old men and the women revile him and the girls of the village "cut him" dead. There is only one thing for him to do and that is to go to war.

The village of Arundel, on the estate of the Duke of Norfolk, who owns 49,000 acres in the south of England, is an example of the small English town where young men are not to be seen. What influence the Duke of Norfolk used in helping his king to secure recruits is not known. But the fact remains that Arundel has contributed all of its young men, who could possibly get away, to the army.

As you pass through the streets of Arundel you see, hanging in the windows of the cottages, large and gaily colored cards bearing the name of the men in that household who have gone to war. It is not unusual to see three or four cards in the window of a little home.

"Who are those cards for?" I asked a woman standing at the door of her cottage.

"My two sons and my husband," she said proudly. "I haven't any more and they're all at the front. Those cards are all I've got to show that any men ever lived in this house."

In the great million-dollar cathedral of the town, which the duke built with his own money, there were eighteen black-bordered cards on the bulletin boards, bearing the names of men who have fallen in battle. And the congregation of the church numbers only 1,000, a large majority of them being women. There are few churches in England that can show a record like that of the Duke of Norfolk's cathedral.

The verger of the church tells visitors:

"Almost all of the young men have gone to war. I've got three sons and two grandsons serving."

This "persuasion" of the English landowners may indicate a condition bordering on feudalism but the young men march off singing and happy and their families remain, proud and full of assurance that they are doing their duty by "his grace."

Plenty of members of parliament are mad at the English government. How many there are of these would-be insurgents and how mad they are cannot be learned; the fog of war hides these facts. Every now and then some member of the insurgent part gets up in parliament and says he thinks that parliament ought to be taken into the confidence of the leaders.

Everbody says, "How interesting!" the mad member sits down again and that ends it.

But just transfer the situation to Washington and see whether our congressmen and senators wouldn't be mad, too, under the circumstances. Suppose the United States were at war with some foreign nation and suppose that:

President Wilson and Secretary Bryan and Speaker Champ Clark and all the democratic leaders shut up as tight as clams and wouldn't tell anybody in congress what they were doing. And suppose that:

The President and Bryan and Clark called into their councils Senator Bois Penrose and Uncle Joe Cannon and Elihu Root and all the leaders of the Republican "opposition" and planned with them what should be done but still refused to tell the Democratic members of parliament what was doing. And suppose that:

The Democratic members of congress called Bryan and Daniels and Garrison before them demanding information about what the state department and the navy and the army were doing and these gentlemen said, in effect:

"We can't tell you what we're doing. It wouldn't be wise."

Wouldn't congress be mad?

And suppose that Wilson was able to keep the lid down on the angry speech of all the Democrats and Boise Penrose and Uncle Joe Cannon helped him, wouldn't congress be still madder?

That's exactly the situation of the members of the English parliament. Both the Liberals, who in our country would be Democrats and the Unionists, who would be members of the Republican party, have this anger.

And then suppose, on top of all this, the general election was due within a few weeks and Wilson and Penrose get together and decided that congress must vote to postpone the election until after the war. And suppose congress had to follow their orders.

Wouldn't congress believe that everything that General Sherman had said about war was true?

GOOD TASTE IN MOURNING GARB

The Vogue of Somber Color In Europe's War Stricken Cities Affecting American Fashions. An Authority on the Proper Way to Wear Crape.

In spite of efforts to discourage the wearing of mourning in Europe, there are hosts of women who insist upon it. The women of the higher classes no less than those of the middle and lower classes feel that they must pay, if in only a modified form, this tribute of respect to the relatives who are slain on battlefields or die in hospitals.

The somberness of garb this season adhered to by English and French women has influenced American fashions. It has also brought about the more scrupulous wearing of mourning on the part of those who belong to the smart world. This mourning is a modified form in which white is tastefully combined with black.

One might as well expect the soldiers of France to desert their colors and leave their country to its fate as to expect Frenchwomen to lay aside their mourning wear.

For many years it has been the custom for Frenchwomen to wear what is known as complimentary mourning—that is, they wear crape for a friend for thirty days. In Germany the custom is quite as common.

For many decades the Englishwoman has not only worn mourning for her friends and relatives, but it is customary for her to wear court mourning at the death of a king or queen. There are in this country many families that are more or less distantly related to people on the other side of the water, and it follows that they will wish to wear the appropriate mourning garb when they learn of the loss of their friends and relatives.

Mourning has been brought into disrepute more on account of the ridiculous manner in which it has been selected and worn than because of the somberness of it.

There are certain rules that must be adhered to for mourning wear. Crape is the only material that is absolutely correct. It is a material that is manufactured for this purpose and no other. Gowns may be made of any one of several dull finished black materials, but the trimmings and finishings should be crape.

The woman who wears a black chip hat with a ribbon bow and possibly a feather with a crape bordered veil hanging down the back is a caricature. Therefore if one desires to don the mourning garb it should be done correctly or not at all. If a long veil is to be worn the hat should have a rounded or dome shaped crown.

With the wearing of a draped veil no other garniture is permissible. Even the length of time for wearing mourning is established. The custom of the present moment is, however, much more lenient than it was in the past.

For one wearing mourning for a father or mother, sister or brother, the length of time for deep mourning is one year, six months for second mourning and six months "going out."

For children the wearing of mourning is one-half this length of time, but the conditions are the same.

Undoubtedly the newest veil on the market is the one named in honor of the ex-Empress Eugenie of France, who has been dressing in deep mourning since 1879. The veil is of silk brussels net bordered with English crape. It has a collar attached to one corner of the veil, which is finished around the neck, after which the veil is thrown back over the small hat, covering the face and then draping in careless folds in the back.

Quite a number of the very newest hats of crape foundations are more or less elaborately trimmed in either ornaments or wide fancy bands of dull jet.

ORA CNE.

Banana Tapioca Pudding.

Cook for fifteen minutes one quart of milk, three tablespoonfuls of granulated tapioca and a little salt, stirring frequently. Beat together two egg yolks and one-half cupful sugar. Let all cook together until thick like cream. Remove from fire, add the beaten whites of the eggs, flavor with lemon or vanilla. When cold pour over sliced bananas and serve plain or with whipped cream.

HOW TO DRESS CHILDREN'S HAIR

Hot Irons Should Never Be Used Nor Little Heads Be Made Uncomfortable In a Foolish and Harmful Effort to Achieve Waves or Curls.

No mother should apply hot curling irons to a child's hair. The "doing up" process at night often causes real torture to little heads that cannot lie comfortably on the lumpy "done up" knobs that promise tomorrow's curls. If the little girl's hair is straight the best way to arrange it tidily for school is to part it at one side and tie the topknot at the opposite side of the head with a ribbon.

When the locks have grown long enough to reach the shoulders two braids may be made, the hair being parted evenly from forehead to nape of neck. The short braids should be turned back and fastened firmly with bits of baby ribbon—never use elastics on a child's hair, or the tender ends will split and the healthy growth of the hair be interfered with—and over the stubby little braids tie big bows of crisp ribbon. This arrangement of twin bows is very becoming to a bright childish face, and the neatly braided and tied hair will remain in presentable condition all day long.

If the child's hair is curly and falls about her face and on her shoulders in soft waves and lovely curls the braiding process, which takes time, is unnecessary. In fact, curly hair should not be braided at all, since braiding will tend to destroy the curl in the hair. Part the locks far over at one side of the head and draw the hair softly and loosely across the top, fastening it at the opposite side over the ear with one of the small shell pins. The ends of the drawn across lock will form a loose curl, hanging a little shorter than the other curls which rest on the shoulders.

Over the shell pin, if desired, may be tied a ribbon bow. Since the constant tying and untying of the hair bow soon reduces ribbon to a limp rag, one resourceful mother has made a little band of ribbon which snap fastens around the pinned back hair. A crisp bow is sewed firmly to the ribbon band, and there is no necessity for untying the bow when the hair is arranged.

When the hair reaches below the shoulders and the girl has attained the dignity of ten or eleven years another coiffure is ready for her. The front hair is softly parted in the middle and drawn back in loose waves to the crown, where a shell pin holds it; then all the ends, curly or straight, are caught together just below the shoulders under a bow of wide ribbon.

HAND PAINTED NOVELTIES.

Accessories of Wood Decorated to Match the Fancy New Furniture.

The popularity of painted furniture may be responsible for the demand for painted wooden accessories, the small and useful articles in wood harmonizing in treatment with the room's decoration.

One may find numbers of practical articles, such as the three cornered telephone bracket, a useful device for holding a telephone where a limited floor space does not conveniently allow for a table.

These are decidedly decorative, painted in soft gray or green, with an Italian floral decoration, or in a cream ground with the same effect of flowers and old blue appearing in the design.

An attractive feature for the open fireplace is the painted wooden bellows. The painted yellow sides show a floral decoration or conventionalized design, and with red leather sides and brass mountings the bellows are most unusual.

The lamp screen is an effective adjunct for the table where a low light shines at an unpleasant angle. In this screen, about sixteen inches high and consisting of a framework on legs, a panel is affixed, which can be raised at any necessary height to protect the eyes.

Removing Sinews.

Remove the sinew from the legs of a fowl when it is drawn and the meat of the leg will be as good as that of the second joint.

Dainty New Creations For Dinner or Dance Wear

Cotton satins are used for foundation garments under sheer dresses.

The useful black evening gown may have a girdle of gray.

Belts and girdle are worn at the natural waist line; also above and below it.

The sheerest materials are used for dancing frocks.

Dance frocks are extremely full in the skirt.

There is a fad for decorating the back of the corsage with artificial flowers.

One of the most useful evening costumes a woman can have is the black net over a white satin or taffeta foundation.

Silver and gold braid and silver and gold ornaments, especially roses, are desirable in the matter of style. Even fruits and some vegetables are made of silver and used in small bunches or clusters as decorations for costumes.

About Sports Generally

BALTIMORE'S YEAR

Baltimore, March 18.—Baltimore is looking for her Federals to show the rest of Jim Gilmore's teams something this season. They finished well up in the race last year and now the fans are clamoring for a pennant winner. And on paper it seems they stand a very good chance of having their clamoring satisfied. Otto Knabe's crew is looking mighty sweet.

The Baltimore pitchers stack up favorably with any in the league, bar none, and a whole lot better than some. The infield last season was easily one of the best, if not the best in the league, and it will hold its own in the coming pennant flight unless hard luck overtakes it. Otto Knabe is the pivot of the works at second, and he has an able lieutenant in the inimitable Mickey Doolan on his right. The pair has stood the acid test time and again in the old Philadelphia days and there isn't a team in any league, with the possible exception of Evers and Maranville, that has anything on them.

Big Harry Swancina on first showed what he was worth last season. He is a fast, but withal steady, man on the first corner and can pickle the pill with steadiness. Jimmy Walsh, who played third bag last season, may have to battle to retain his berth as a regular. Guy Zinn is back on the job, besides Kirkpatrick, and either can be expected to put up a battle. Zinn, it will be remembered, broke his leg early in the season while training, and was out all year. He was counted a nifty third baseman when he came to the Feds from the International League. The Diamond Backs look awfully good in the infield.

Knabe has a steady pitching staff, rather than a flashy one. Chief Bender is going to add a lot of strength to the corps despite vociferous outbursts from Ban Johnson that the old chief is through. Last season was the best the Indian ever had, and if he is through, then there are a lot of hurlers holding down berths in the other two leagues who would do well to get into a like condition. Any man that can win 17 and lose only 3 games in the American League looks pretty good. Backing up the Chief are Wilhelm, Suggs, Quinn, Conley, Bailey, Smith and Yont. The first three are well known; all were with the club last season and are steady rather than brilliant. Smith flopped around so much between Baltimore and Montreal last season that he is rather an unkown quantity. Bailey and Conley did good work last season, especially towards the latter part. Yount is as yet unproven.

The veteran Jacklitsch will, it is presumed, bear the brunt of the catching as he did last season. He had an able understudy in Russell.

"Hack" Simons and Johnny Duncan are a pair of heavy hitting outfielders, besides being fair fielders. Myer will have one patch, probably although it is possible Knabe may shift Kirkpatrick to the outfield.

The Feds are not going to have any opposition here this season and will have the solid support of the fans. Jack Dunn took his International Birds and went to Richmond. Baltimore believes it is a major league town and the Feds are the nearest thing to a major league team it has since the days of the famous old Orioles.

Solid support is going to do a lot in keeping the players pepped up. Anyway, Baltimore is pretty well satisfied with the way things are shaping up.

WIRE NETTING ON PALACE.

Royal London Home Protected From Aerial Attack.

London.—The north wing of Buckingham palace is now being covered with a wire netting about twenty feet above the roof. This is the wing containing the living apartments of the royal family.

Additional anti-air craft guns have been placed in the neighborhood of the palace, one having been set up in the center of Green park in the last week.

If a Zeppelin should be seen hovering over the palace there are at least a half dozen guns which would open fire upon it.

Additional preparations are being made almost every day to fight airships over London.

While many of the art treasures in the museums have been removed to places of greater safety, there have been vigorous complaints in some newspapers that valuable pictures, sculptures or objects of art should still remain exposed to the possibility of aerial attack on the galleries.

WHO SWALLOWS DICTIONARY?

Question Disturbing Missouri Legislators—Have Already Lost Three.

Jefferson City, Mo.—The house discovered recently that it was struggling along without a dictionary when a resolution was introduced to buy a new one for use of members.

"I'd like to know what became of the big dictionary we bought two years ago?" Representative J. M. Bowers asked.

No member volunteered information.

"I'd like to know what became of the dictionary we had four years ago," Bowers persisted.

Silence.

"I'd like to know who took the dictionary we bought six years ago," he demanded.

More silence.

"Well, it's getting pretty tough when they steal a dictionary from a Missouri legislature," remarked the gentleman from Wayne.

Whereupon the house bought another dictionary.

Hard Luck.

"Terrible predicament Jones was in."

"What was that?"

"Got in hot water and couldn't get anybody to bail him out."—Baltimore American.

DEATH RATE STATISTICS.

14.1 Per 1,000 in 1913 Compared With 13.9 In 1912.

Washington.—A death rate in 1913 of 14.1 per 1,000 of the estimated population in the registration area of the United States compared with 13.9 per 1,000 in 1912 is shown in a report by the census bureau. The number of deaths in the registration area, containing about two-thirds of the population, was approximately 890,948.

Washington state showed the lowest rate, being 8.5 per 1,000, while New Hampshire's was the highest, with 17.1. The lowest rate shown in 1913 by any of the fifty registration cities, with populations of 100,000 or over in 1910, was that for Seattle, which was 8.4, while Memphis showed the highest, with 20.8.

The average age at death for both sexes from all causes combined was 39.8; for males alone, 39.2; for females, 40.6. Nearly 18 per cent of all deaths were of infants under one year of age, and more than 25 per cent were of children under five years.

The death rate from tuberculosis declined from 149.5 per 100,000 population in 1912 to 147.6 in 1913. The rate from cancer rose from 63 per 100,000 in 1900 to 78.9 in 1913. The number of suicides was 9,998, the rate being 15.8 per 100,000 compared with 16 in 1912.

ANY SHAPE TRUNK CAN GO.

Baggage Smashers in Despair, but Commerce Commission is Firm.

Washington.—The ladies triumph again and carry to victory with them the trunk makers, costumers, actors—everybody who uses those newfangled five sided trunks with conical protuberances, slant sides and unconventional tops.

The interstate commerce commission told the railroads they cannot exclude pentagonal trunks from the regular baggage service. The railroads wanted to charge excess rates on any trunk not cut on the square.

The commission's decision has filled the baggagemasters with despair. Lamented one in the Pennsylvania's service:

"Just imagine trying to fill a baggage car with conical trunks, trunks with slant sides and trunks cut in every shape from a doughnut to a starfish. What are you going to put on top of a trunk shaped like the pyramids, eh?"

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL

GARDEN CITIES REDUCE ANNUAL DEATH RATES.

Benefits of Good City Planning Accrue Most to Small Towns.

"The death rate in Wisconsin is fifteen per thousand, while that of the planned 'garden cities' of Europe is only five," according to Professor L. S. Smith of the University of Wisconsin.

"The benefits of good city planning accrue most to the small towns," said Professor Smith. "The town that starts to plan when it is still small will have to expend less in tearing down and as it grows will constantly reap more and more."

Students of city planning at the university have been collecting data on Wisconsin cities and in several cases will show how much money the city would save by starting now. Madison will be used as the bad example of a city which when it wakes up to the economic importance of the movement will have started too late to get the full benefit of good city planning without excessive cost.

"The annual death rate of children less than two years of age in Munich before city planning was started was 649 per thousand," continued Professor Smith. "After the city had been properly replanned this rate dropped to 249 per thousand. The death rate of children between two and five years of age was reduced from fifty-two to sixteen per thousand.

"City planning is a practical proposition. It means something more than mere beauty. It indicates farsightedness for future developments of trade and commerce. It provides for the best handling of traffic. It prevents haphazard building which may have to be torn down when the city has grown to demand more streets. It means parks for the children, sunlight, plentiful and clean air, garden room and sanitation."

MAKING WINTER GARDENS.

Movement of Woman's Municipal League For Beautifying Cities.

Helping the unemployed and developing winter gardens to make a city beautiful is a new work which the Woman's Municipal league, with headquarters in New York city, has undertaken. An experimental garden, the architectural design of which has been prepared by Frederick Junius Sterner, has been made in the yard of a residence in New York city.

The yard has been adorned with a border of barberry bushes, which hold their red berries through the winter. The fence of the garden has been painted a dark green and in front of it is a trellis of a lighter green upon which are trained honeysuckle, which holds its leaves well into December. At the rear of the yard is a garden seat painted green, and on either side of this are terra cotta vases, each holding a lignum vitae tree.

It is the Yorkville branch of the league, of which Mrs. F. Robertson Jones, who is corresponding secretary of the league, is chairman, which is doing this particular branch of work.

"We consider that these gardens should be architectural rather than the work of a florist," said Mrs. F. Robertson Jones. "I have seen so many gardens which are beautiful in summer, but which are desolate places in the winter. Flowers that are put in are only getting started the first of May, when we are beginning to leave home. There should be something bright in them that will last through the winter. The league is greatly interested in this work of making the city beautiful, and the unemployed can be used to do this garden work under supervision. We should advise people who wish to do it to come to the league to get their workers, and we can assist them to have the work done to better advantage and at lower rates than they could do it for themselves. As the work develops we want to get young architects to take charge of it."

Methods of Purifying Water.

American cities for the most part draw their water supply from rivers which carry a large proportion of silt and clay. It is therefore necessary to remove such impurities, which are of a purely inorganic kind, as well as to purify the water of bacteria and other organic growth. Various methods and combinations of methods are employed for the purpose. In some plants the process consists of prefiltration, coagulation and final sand bed filtration; in others coagulation and mechanical filtration, while in others sterilization is employed in addition to the other methods.

Another process coming rapidly into vogue is the ozone treatment. It is an electrical treatment of the water, which produces the effect of aeration in a much more rapid manner than by oxygen. It is much employed on the continent, and an especially notable plant has recently been installed in Petrograd, where the capacity is 50,000 cubic meters per twenty-four hour day, or 13,200,000 gallons.

Bureau For Social Research.

The Seybert Institution of Philadelphia has organized a bureau of social research, under the direction of Carol Aronovici and with the promised cooperation of other social agencies. Work has been commenced on the records of the children's agencies in the city with a view to standardizing their work and focusing their activities on the problem.

ROSES TO ENHANCE THE CITY BEAUTIFUL.

Plants Are Offered at Cost by Committee of Portland, Ore.

Thirty-one thousand rose plants of the finest quality, roses of the kind that would ordinarily cost from 25 cents to $1 per plant, were recently sold to the citizens of Portland at prices of 12½ cents or 15 cents for a single plant.

This was brought about by the city beautiful committee of the Rose Festival association in its movement to make this the greatest rose planting year that Portland has ever seen.

The committee, under the leadership of Julius L. Meier, chairman, arranged with all of the leading nurserymen to get Oregon grown roses for this purpose, to be sold to the residents of Portland and vicinity who desire to join in the planting movement. All of the bushes that have been obtained are two years old and will bloom this year.

In case the supply already procured does not meet the demand the committee contemplates getting more roses and still more roses, so that everybody who is interested in the city beautiful movement and willing to support it by personal work may have all the roses he needs. It is expected that the 31,000 plants already procured will be soon exhausted when the public begins to enter fully into the spirit of the movement.

These plants will be turned over to the public at exactly what they have cost the committee. The idea in obtaining the plants has not been to make a cent of profit from them, but simply to purchase in such large quantities that a price could be had that would be within the reach of every one.

The variety of roses embraces practically every type that is successfully grown in Portland, ranging from the ever popular Caroline Testout over a list of several hundred that will prove good in almost any garden.

MUNICIPAL PLAYGROUNDS.

They Can Be Conducted In Way to Remove All Objections.

There are always people living near playgrounds who object to them as ugly and noisy, says the American City. There is no doubt that an unfenced playground, where all the grass has been worn off by constant use and no adequate supervision has been furnished, will cause property in the immediate neighborhood to depreciate in value. The natural answer to objectors is fencing and beautifying the playground and providing adequate supervision. If this is not done the play movement cannot get the enthusiastic support which it needs.

There are natural limitations in beautifying a playground. It cannot be turned into an ornamental park or a series of flower beds without destroying it for play purposes, but it is not necessary playgrounds should be ugly.

URGES CITY TREE PLANTING.

Syracuse College of Forestry Tells How Streets Can Be Beautified.

The New York State College of Forestry at Syracuse university is urging the municipalities of the state to take up public control of street tree planting and preservation in the same manner as public control is exercised over other street improvements. During the past year the college has made investigation of the shade trees in many cities and towns of the state, including New York city, Syracuse, Binghamton, Amsterdam, Mount Vernon, Newburg and Olean. It has been found that thousands of shade trees are dying along the streets of the cities due to past mistakes in selection of varieties and in spacing the trees at the time of planting.

Within the cities of the state there are, it is said, 20,000 miles of streets capable of sustaining a growth of 5,000,000 shade trees, which can be made worth $100,000,000 in increased property value.

Almost a half of the land area of New York state is better suited, it is said, to the growing of timber than to agriculture. Agriculture alone cannot solve the land problems of the state. Forestry and agriculture are co-ordinate, and together will bring about the most effective utilization of the soils of the state and of the country. New York maintains the only state forest experiment station east of the Mississippi. Nearly 2,000,000 trees have been planted at this station for experimental purposes.

THE NEW STATE CONSTITUTION—4.

An Appointive Comptroller, or Elective?

Most of the opposition to the proposal to give the Governor the power to appoint all the minor state offices centers on the comptrollership. It is argued that the comptroller is a financial check upon the other state officers and that he must accordingly be independent in order to preserve independent audit. The Short Ballot advocates however argue that this cannot be conceded without running into a greater danger than the lack of an independent audit.

Independent audit by a separately elected comptroller has, they declare, been amply tried out and found ridiculously wanting. It would seem pretty difficult to find anyone who would justify the present method of audit as a preventive measure! The present particular variety of independent audit has certainly not succeeded in preventing gross abuses! It has not been the comptroller who has investigated these abuses or exposed them. It has not been the comptroller's office that has stood between the state treasury and the thieves. Look back on the history of these exposures and you will not find the state comptroller figuring largely as the exposing agency in any of them.

Make the Comptroller Politically Independent.

On the contrary the state comptroller's office has succumbed to what the Short Ballot advocates believe to be the real and great danger—the danger that the office will be filled usually by a transient political hack—an amateur at auditing who never stays in office long enough to learn his job and who receives his job from perhaps the very men who are conspiring to rob the state. In other words, it is more desirable to make the comptroller independent of the politicians than it is to make him independent of the Governor!

Public sentiment plays no prominent or constructive part in the selection of a comptroller, although it does do so in the case of the Governor. Any respectable nonentity seems to be available timber for nomination to a comptrollership. The people have no way of knowing whether he will make a good comptroller or not. He is carried into office regardless of his individual merit on the tail of the Governor's coat. He serves his little day in office and disappears from politics and the people still have no way of knowing whether or not he has been a good comptroller.

To say that he owes his election directly to the people is sheer nonsense. It is true only on paper. In reality he owes his election to certain private political powers within his party machine who were gracious enough to select him for the honor of being the party nominee. The whole matter is fixed up in a back room somewhere, nobody knows where. The situation remains under the direct primary system just as surely as under the old convention system, for a public demand can address itself only to two or three problems at a time and never gets down to a detail like the comptrollership. And out of this obscure intrigue comes the "independent" comptroller who is to audit the accounts for the State of New York! It is not the right way to select a man for a technical job. Under such circumstances can it be said that we get independent audit now? Will there be anybody in the Constitutional Convention with so defective a sense of humor that he will venture to get up and acclaim that the independent audit of the past has been either "independent" or "audit?"

Political Audit Dangerous.

Undoubtedly larger losses have accrued to the state from slovenly audit than from any deliberate conspiracy involving the comptroller's office. An easy-going political heeler, trying to do the work of a competent expert accountant, can, with the best intentions in the world, allow more money to be stolen right under his nose than a corrupt man in his position would actually help to steal!

Unable to secure the prompt attention of the public as a Governor can, the comptroller is in no position to resist the demands for patronage and pie which come to him from the men who put him on the state ticket. So long as the office stays elective it will be again and again a nest for political hacks whereby the party in power pays its political debts out of the public payroll.

To make the comptroller appointive is as important as all the rest of the Short Ballot amendment put together.

[This is the fourth of a series of nine articles prepared jointly by the Municipal Government Association, the County Government Association and the New York Short Ballot Organization on questions to come before the Constitutional Convention.]

GOVERNORS URGE SHORT BALLOT.

Simplification of citizenship and responsible unified state administration are the pervasive ideas in the messages of many of the governors this year. In several states—as in Iowa, Illinois and Minnesota—efficiency committees have been at work on the reorganization of the state offices. The results of these investigations have been noted with interest by executives of other states. These governors have pleaded for the Short Ballot as a basis for efficient organization.

GERMAN PRISONER RELATES HARDSHIPS

A German who sailed from New York last August on the Dutch liner Potsdam, bound for Rotterdam, gives the following account of his experiences:

"On August 24, at 5 p. m. the Potsdam, of the Holland-American Line, was stopped in the English Channel by the British cruiser Diana and was ordered to proceed to Falmouth. The next morning all Germans abroad — about 375—varying in age from seventeen to sixty, were ordered to disembark, and were placed under military guard. The passengers were separated according to the class in which they travelled, and were accommodated in cold sheet iron sheds, where they spent the night without any provision for sleeping, such as mattresses and blankets. In fact, we were supposed to find rest on the bare stone floors. This appeared to be too much even for the English authorities, and at 11 o'clock at night we were ordered abroad a train for Dorchester, and were quartered in parties of eight or ten in round tents.

"We were furnished in our tents, with a rubber sheet, dirty and old, sometimes with torn horse blankets, and eating utensils; mattresses did not exist. The camp had formerly served as a barracks for artillery, but had been unoccupied durig the last ten years. There were two long two story buildings containing stabling for horses, over which were sleeping places for petty officers and soldiers. Between the two larger buildings there was a smaller house for bureaus and hospital. Small tents were arranged on the grass plot around the buildings and later on five large tents were erected where we could spend our time during the day and where the mals wre served.

"The camp was inclosed by a high wall, inside of which there was a barbed wire fence. On the walls were small platforms for sentries, at intervals of about 150 feet. The sentries carried loaded rifles so that none of us should attempt to escape. The sentries were regular troops, but seemed to be exceedingly careless with their firearms, as on different occasions they dropped their weapons from the wall and the rifles went off.

"Fortunately most of the captives had money enough to provide additional comforts, and we purchased some timber with which we built some sleeping berths as you find them on board ship. This was necessary as in the meantime the autumn had arrived, and the nights had become too cold to sleep on the stone floors.

"The bill of fare provided for us by the British government consisted in the morning, of tea, bread and a kind of butter which was a great deal worse than oleomargarine. Stewed prunes were added sometimes, but there were more stones than prunes in the stew. The evening meal was about the same. The mid-day meal consisted every day of beef soup without any vegetables.

"There were a number of cases of sickness, and the Dorchester doctor who attended them could get no assistance in the way of medicines, etc., from the War Office. Even the seriously ill were provided with the same kind of food as the others. We made up a collection among ourselves in order to provide milk to give those who were ill additional sustenance.

"Every Sunday morning at 8 o'clock a Catholic priest would read a sermon and in the afternoon, at 3 o'clock, a Protestant clergyman would officiate. These clergymen would permit us, after the service, to sing our national hymns, but this was later forbidden by the colonel of the camp. These clergymen took a great interest in us and visited us daily — they were not, however, in a position to bring about any improvement in our situation. Because the Protestant clergyman showed such exceptional interest in us we made up a collection and presented him with a silver writing outfit and two candlesticks.

"On December 11, after 111 days of detention, the hour for my release arrived, and, together with thirteen Germans, forty Austrians and Hungarians, I was dismissed on account of my age. At the last moment four German captains and two mates were again detained, although they were all over the age limit, one of the captains being sixty-four years old. It was said that these officers were detained on telegraphic instructions from London."

FAMOUS OUTLAW IN HIDING IN OKLAHOMA

Tulsa, Okla., March 18.—Hiding in the Osage hills, northwest of Tulsa, with a price of $1,000 on his head, is Henry Starr, descendent of "Belle" Starr, the most dashing woman outlaw of western pioneer history. Starr is specifically charged in the State's offer of the reward with having robbed the Carney State Bank of $2,853 last December. Seventeen bank robberies, daring in the highest degree, have been perpetrated in Oklahoma and other nearby states within a year and the hunt for Starr is the beginning of a determined effort by the authorities to wipe out this class crime.

Starr was convicted of murder in the early Indian Territory days and afterward spent his time at the Leavenworth federal prison until pardoned by President Roosevelt. Starr served prison terms in Kansas, Oklahoma and Colorado. In 1913 he was paroled from the Colorado penitentiary. He broke the parole and resumed his career as bank robber, detectives claim. They assert he could explain the robberies in Kiefer, Carney, Keystone and Baxter Springs, (Kan.). Oil town gambling houses have also been a fruitful scene of his robbing activities.

THE KNIFE IS UNCLAIMED

Boulder, Colo., March 18.—No one knows yet which member of the Boulder City council carries—or used to carry—a knife with a corkscrew attachment. During a recent meeting of the council such a knife, which some member of the council had lost, lay on the table in their midst without being claimed, all fearing that by admissing ownership of the knife they would disclose an accasional thirst. The city marshal finally confiscated the knife.

SUBMARINE IN ATLANTIC HITS BIG STEAMSHIP

The Ocean and Prince George Suffer Casualties; Mine Sweepers Work to Clear Channel

London, March 18.—A German submarine has rounded the British Isles and torpedoed the British steamship Atlanta in the Atlantic ocean, off the coast of County Galway, in Ireland. The attack occurred on March 14. The crew was landed on Inishturk island and the vessel is now in the harbor. This is the farthest point yet reached by a submarine from her base, and indicates to naval observers that the reports early in the war that the new German underwater craft were constructed for a cruising radius of 3,000 miles have been verified.

A new element in the German blockade of Great Britain appeared on Tuesday when the steamship Blonde was attacked in the North Sea by an aeroplane. The aviator dropped a bomb on the deck of the vessel, killing one of the crew. The Blonde reach South Shields yesterday and reported the incident.

The British steamships Fingal and Leeuwarden have been sunk in the North Sea by German submarines. The Gingal was attacked off the Northumberland coast on Monday and sixpersons, including the stewardess, were lost. The Leeuwarden was sunk yesterday by the U-28 four miles from the Maas (Holland) lightship.

A statement on two of the disasters issued by the Admiralty yesterday reads:—

"The British steamship Altanta, 519 tons, owned by Messrs. J. and P. Hutchinson, of Glasgow, was torpedoed by a German submarine off Inishturk, on the west coast of county Galway, Ireland, about noon of March 14. The crew was landed on Inishturk Island and the vessel is now in the harbor.

"The British steamship Fingal, of 1,562 gross tons, (661 net tons), owned by the London and Edinburgh Shipping Company, of Leith, was torpedoed and sunk at ten minutes to eleven o'clock on the morning of March 15 off the Northumberland coast. Twenty-one of her crew were landed at North Shields, but six lives are reported to have been lost, including the chief mate and the stewardess.

The Atlanta was badly damaged and was towed to port. Her captain is quoted as saying there was no doubt that his vessel was struck by a torpedo. The crew of sixteen men was driven from the Atlanta by fire; which started soon after the explosion. The men took to the small boats and were picked up later.

The survivors of the Fingal were landed at North Shields yesterday. They declare that the casualties on board were due to the fact that the vessel went down before the starboard boat could be freed. The Fingal as she sank dragged this boat under with her, leaving the occupants, including the captain, struggling in the water. The port boat picked up the captain and several others, but six persons lost their lives.

The Fingal was proceeding in a northerly direction, with fine weather, when she was struck by a German torpedo. She at once began to settle, and went down quickly.

The Leewarden was bound from London for Harlingen, according to a Reuter correspondent. The crew of seventeen men was given five minutes to take to the small boats, which the submarine towed until a pilot steamship was met. The men then were transferred to the pilot vessel and landed at Hook of Holland.

The Leewarden was a cross Channel steamship of 374 tons, and was owned by the Steamship Navigation Company of London.

The Sstandard shippings records contain no mention of a British sailing ship or steamship named Atlanta. They do, however, mention the British steamship Fingal. This vessel was built in 1894, was of 661 tons and 280 feet long. She was owned in Scotland and was engaged in the coasting trade.

THREE BRITISH WAR SHIPS ARE STRUCK

The reported dash of the British light cruiser Amethyst through the narrows of the Dardanelles to Nagara is not regarded seriously by naval observers here, but the Admiralty statements have made plain the activity of the vessel in the work of the allied fleet. To reach Nagara, which lies at the northern end of the narrows, the Amethyst would have to run the gauntlet of the forts on both shores at ranges of from 900 to 2,000 yards.

It is believed in naval circles that the cruiser has been used as a shield for mine sweepers in their operations. The Admiralty last night published a casualty list in which losses aboard the Amethyst are placed at twenty-three killed, nineteen severely and eighteen slightly wounded. The battle ship Ocean has had two men killed at the Dardanelles, and the battle ship Prince George two men wounded. Two trawlers, used form ine sweeping, have had three men killed and two wounded.

A dispatch from Dardanelles yesterday, through Constantinople, says:—

"The British met with a reverse today in an attempt to clear the Dardanelles of mines. They lost three mine clearing ships and one sailing vessel. Considerable damage was inflicted to one British cruiser, under whose protection the operations were undertaken. The identity of this cruiser has not been established.

"The British vessels arived well inside the entrance to the Dardanelles, off Kum Kaleh, at about eleven o'clock last night. The cruiser immediately began a heavy bombardment of the searchlight positions of the Turks. This was contniued for some time, but without effect. At three o'clock this morning the mine sweepers proceeded from shore. The Turkish gunners permitted them to come in close and then opened fire, sinking the three mine sweepers and damaging the cruiser.

"The sailing vessel had been sent into the mine field to take observations. She struck a mine and sank. The cannonading was unusually heavy and lasted until five o'clock in the morning.

"No further bombardment was undertaken today by the allied fleet. One war ship entered the bay in the forenoon, but withdrew soon afterward. On March 8, 9 and 10 there was no bombardment.

A message from Constantinople, by way of Berlin, to London, says:—

"Only unimportant operations have been undertaken by the allied fleet operating against the Dardanelles for the last few days. The activity of the war ships has been limited to demonstrations. Two new attempts by cruisers and destroyers to approach the outer fortifications and clear the channel of mines are reported to have been futile because of the effective fire from the defenders.

"The civilian population of Constantinople appears quite calm and almost indifferent to the efforts which are being made to force a passage of the Dardanelles."

A dispatch from Athens says the Vali of Smyrna went on board the British flagship after the bombardment of that Turkish port and held a conference with the British commander, during which the shelling was suspended. No agreement was reached and the Vali, on landing, gave out a proclamation saying he would resist to the end.

All subjects in Smyrna of countries hostile to Turkey have been interned, the correspondent says.

An Athens despatch to Paris says a British mine sweeper was blown up in the straits on Tuesday, with the loss of several lives, when a mine exploded as it was being removed from the straits.

BRITISH CENSOR SAID TO IRRITATE AMERICANS

London March 18.—"There can be no question that reasonless censoring of messages sent by American press correspondents in London many of them English by birth and practically all of them English in their sympathies, has not only irritated America but it has caused it naturally to be believed that things are not going well with us and that there have been many disasters we are eager to hide," says the Daily Express, in an editorial headed, "Let Us Be Candid."

"The corresponding interference with letters and cables from America," continues the Express, "makes it impossible for us to be sure that we have, to quote Lord Bryce, a just and complete picture of public opinion in that country.

"There is no reason why the censors should hesitate to determine what is America's real mind, particularly as the Press Bureau feeds America with news and arbitrarily decides what it is able to digest."

LATE WAR BULLETINS

FRENCH

Paris via London.—The War Office made public the following official communication:—

"To the north of Arras, despite a third counter attack delivered by the enemy durin gthe night of March 16-17, we maintained ourselves in the trenches which we had captured on the height of Notre Dame de Lorette.

"In the region of Albert, at Carnoy, violent fighting took place around the excavation, the sides of which we have consolidated.

"In Champagne our successes have been brilliantly maintained and the enemy, despite his effort, has not succeeded in retaking even a part of the ground conquered by us.

"On the Yser the Belgian army has made fresh progress and has repelled German counter attacks.

"On the British front there has been fairly violent artillery firing.

"To the north of Arras the enemy unsuccessfully attempted late in the afternoon to deliver another counter attack on the trenches on the spur of the hill of Notre Dame de Lorette.

"Soissons and Rheims again were bombarded. two shells striking the Rheims Cathedral.

"In the Champagne, north of Le Mesnil and west of Hill 196, we have taken posession along a front of some five hundred metres of an important eminence held by the enemy.

"In the Argonne several German counter attacks between Rolane and Four de Paris have been repulsed.

"There has been an artillery duel in the Woevre.

"One of our aviators dropped bombs on the barracks at Colmar (capital of Upper Alsace)."

"In the region of Perthes we have continued to make progress in the woods extending between Perthes despite three counter attacks, we have held the trenches captured yesterday, which are of greater importance than the preceding communication indicated. In fact, we have gained possession of Hill 196 for a length of 800 metres, and some ground to the south, 400 metres in depth.

"This advance gives to us not only the height, but command of all it overlooks on the northern side of the ridge, which extends from Perthes to Maisons. The enemy has felt the importance of this, because this morning he attempted to recapture the lost ground. A most violent counter attack was led by a regiment of the Landsturm, supported by the Guard. The Germans were literally mown down by our mitrailleuses. The few survivors regained their trenches pursued by our fire.

"To sum up, all these fruitless attempts caused the enemy considerable losses.

"In the Argonne and in the region of Vauquois there was a violent cannonade but no infantry action. All the gains previously made have been consolidated.

"At Bois le Pretre some German contingents who had maintained themselves near our trenches in excavations caused by the explosion of March 15 have been definitely driven from them."

GERMAN

Berlin, byWireless Telegraphy).—The German War Office today gave out an official report on the progress of the war, reading as follows:—

"The contest for the possession of an eminence on the southern slope of the Lorette Heights, to the northwest of Arras, has been decided in favor of the Germans.

"In the Champagne district, specificially to the west of Perthes and to the north of Le Mesnil, the French yesterday delivered several unsuccessful attacks. North of Le Mesnil the attacks were renewed with stronger forces, and the engagements still continue.

"In the Argonne the fighting has not yet come to an end. French forces have been driven back from the slope to the southwest of Vauquois occupied by them. Two French attacks in the Le Pretre forest, northwest of Pont-a-Mousson, resulted in failure. In the Vosges there has been nothing more than artillery duels.

"The Russian advances against Tauroggen, in Kovno province, northeast of Tilsit, and Laugszargen, in East Prussia, just across the border from Tauroggen, have been repulsed.

"Russian attempts to break through the German lines between the Skwa an dthe Orzye rivers, north of Warsaw, also have been repulsed.

"There is no change in the situation south of the Vistula."

RUSSIAN

Petrograd, via London.—The following official statement from General Headquarters was issued today:

"Our offensive on both banks of the Orzys river continues to develop in spite of the stubborn resistance of the enemy.

"The number of prisoners captured by us in increasing. Near Yednorozec we took from the Germans seventeen guns.

"In the Carpathians, in the region of Rabbe, our offensive also has made progress. We have again repulsed German and Austrian attacks in the direction of Stry and Munkaos.

"At other points there has been no essential change."

"Our troops on the coast have captured the village of Archawa (on the Black Sea, about twenty-five miles southwest of Batum) and have occupied the district at the source of the River Archawa.

"In the direction of Ardanoutch and Olti the Turks have been vigorously repulsed."

AUSTRIAN

Vienna, via London.—The Austrian War Office today made public the following official statement.

"Today and yesterday the enemy made isolated attacks in Russian Poland and western Galicia, which were repulsed. No important events have occurred on the Carpathian front.

"Near Wyszkow enemy detachments repeatedly attempted during the night to retake positions captured by us, but their attacks miscarried.

"South of the Dniester engagements continue in some places, but the situation is unchanged.

"Attacks by enemy infantry on the southern bank of the Pruth near Czernokitz were soon checked by our fire.

"BRITAIN MAY YET BE INVADED"—CREW

London, March 18.—The Marquise of Crew, Lord of the Privy Seal, addressing a delegation of the volunteer trained corps which has been raised for home defence, said that while there was a possibility of a hostile landing in England, this was considered more fikely some month ago than now. There was no telling, he added, what form the latest stages of the war might take or to what devices or straits Germany's desperation might drive her. Therefore, he said, it would be unwise to dismiss from consideration the possibility that a hostile force might land in no great numbers, but in sufficiently formidable force to make a strong resistance necessary and possiblying the invoking of the assistance of the volunteers.

COLORADO CONVICTS HAVE BASEBALL TEAM

Warden Rewards Good Prisoners by Allowing Them to Play.

Canon City, Colo.—Warden Tom J. Tynan of the Colorado penitentiary, described as "the man who put 'man' in humanity in prison reform," announces that he is organising a baseball team among the convicts—his "wards," as he always calls them.

Tynan was the first penitentiary warden to install moving pictures and the first to try the system of rewards for good conduct by sending the best behaved convicts to build and improve the roads of the state. He proposes to have a baseball team to compete with teams of the state league and other teams from the surrounding towns and cities. Tynan is a baseball "fan" himself.

"I've got some crackerjack material down here," says Tynan, "and I'm going to utilise it. Got a housebreaker that can outrun Ty Cobb. Join the Feds? No chance. No bush leagues for us. We'll be in the AA class or none at all."

The convict team will go into training as soon as a wall is built around four acres of ground which the warden has laid out for the purpose. Teams throughout the state will be invited to play the convicts on the "home grounds." Later in the season the warden may take his team on two or three short trips. If possible he will arrange a game with the Denver Grizzlies of the Western league.

"I will use the prison baseball team to encourage good behavior among the men," he says. "To be permitted to play on the team or to watch its games will be a privilege bestowed only on the best behaved. The moment a player breaks a prison rule he no longer will be considered a member of the team, and the fan who is recalcitrant will be barred from the games.

"Since we have had moving picture shows for the prisoners there have been 470 less reports of bad behavior. For a slight infraction of the prison rules the privilege of attending the prison movie entertainments is taken away for a certain period. We have a houseful of movie fans, and most of them would rather suffer any kind of physical punishment than miss the pictures thrown on the screen in the chapel every two weeks."

When you fail to wind up your timepiece there is no use to swear next morning like a pirate when you discover that it has served as one of the silent watches of the night.—New Orleans States.

What Is Your Dominent Motive?

This is not a sermon. It is just a little good, hard business sense.

If you want to make money for yourself, you must find more people who will buy your goods or people who will pay more for your services.

If you want more happiness for others, you must make them able to buy goods or pay for services. You must help to increase their buying power, their working power, their playing power.

In the long run, making money for yourself and making pleasure for others amount to the same thing. Temporary profits may be made at the expense of the community, but the lasting success of each is based upon the success of all. The health of none is secure unless the health of all is secure. The beauty of the city as a whole depends upon the beauty of every street and every home in it.

So, if you want more money for yourself, it pays to work for a better town, and if you work for a better town it will help you to make more money. Your dominant motive should prompt you to be a member of the Chamber of Commerce.

"A power has been created here in Fulton that none would have dreamed a month ago."

—N. L. Whitaker

Three hundred and one memberships—and more coming, was the report at the close of the campaign today. The captains reported as follows: Dr. Whitbeck, 6; H. Bristol, 4; D. L. Lipsky, 2; L. W. Emerick, 2; Willis Morin, 2; Jesse Morrill, 11; N. L. Whitaker, 17. Total 50.

N. L. Whitaker acted as chairman, and called upon E. J. Penfield for remarks. Mr. Penfield, after speaking of the postponement of the election of the officers at the anuual meeting of the chamber, announced the three remaining directors had resigned, thus leaving the reorganization complete for the chamber.

Chairman Whitaker accepted the announcement stating appreciation for the spirit in which the resignations were made. He then called upon Attorney F. G. Spencer for remarks. Mr. Spencer said he wished to congratulate the men who had worked so faithfully during the campaign and felt great good could be the outcome of the effort, and in closing said, "The man who lives in Fulton and can't see the benefit of this movement is blind indeed."

L. W. Emerick was next called upon and spoke lightly of the reference made to the good work he had done during the past week. He stated his belief in the movement and urged all to continue in the effort.

Rev. H. D. Holmes spoke briefly of his belief in Fulton, and in the men he has known here who will strive for bigger, better things yet to come.

Mayor Fox when called upon stated, Fulton had been "transformed" and believes great things art to be accomplished for the city's good.

F. A. Emerick, a former Fulton man, now of Oswego, was called upon and responded in a happy manner. Mr. Emerick's expression showed Fulton occupies still a warm spot in his heart.

"Some time ago," Mr. Emerick said, "Oswego started a similar organization and of which I was made a member and asked to aid in getting industries for Oswego. I declined and stated I was with Fulton first, last and for all time."

Mr. Emerick, in speaking further, said he did not know the exact plan of the Chamber, and suggested the outgrowth of a commission form of government might be in the minds of the workers. This form of government, Mr. Emerick believes, is the natural government in that it is continuous.

"The commission form of government does not necessarily criticise the present form," said Mr. Emerick, "but it brings a continuous government. Business would suffer, too, were it subject to the changes yearly, in management which our cities undergo."

Mr. Emerick expressed his pleasure in Fulton's present activity for better ways, and received hearty applause from the assembly.

Chairman Whitaker urged the captains to continue in their work for the next week and pleaded for a continued interest from all in the work to be carried on.

"A power has been created that none would have dreamed possible a month ago," said Mr. Whitaker. The question now that confronts us is how best to use that power. We must depend upon the members."

Ralph Stoddard of the Bureau read from a list the complete summary of the "Write it Down" [illegible] of the Fulton people. The complete list will be published [illegible] row's Evening Times:

Mr. Stoddard also announced [illegible] in regard to the election of officers for the chamber that [illegible] day night the primary ballot will be given each member that ten directors may be chosen by them. The ten directors chosen will elect the president on the following Friday. The by-laws will later be submitted for the approval of the entire membership. Five tellers will then elected to canvass the vote for the directors. They are: G. Adams, L. W. Emerick, H. Bristol, Jesse Morrill and Willis Morin.

Before adjournment Mrs. G. V. Braun addressed the chair and expressed in behalf of the women a sincere appreciation for the courtesy extended them during the past week.

A vote of thanks was tendered the newspapers, telephone company, Mr. McQuade and other sources which had contributed to the success of the week.

The meetings have been of intense interest to every public-spirited resident of Fulton who has been able to attend. Their close is generally regretted but other big and bright times are being looked forward to with interest. The committee back of the entire plan is deserving of a sound slap on its back by way of public approval. Each is an optimist.

"An optimist can't hurt a city, a pessimist never made one."
—Lucius Wilson.

THE CRUISER ORAMA SINKS AN ARMED GERMAN SHIP; CALAIS IS THE TARGET

British Auxiliary Cruiser Sends Navarra to Bottom After Brief Action in South Atlantic; Vessel Blown Up

Valparaiso, March 19.—The British auxiliary cruiser Orama, which steamed to this port on Tuesday with the wounded from the German cruiser Dresden, sunk at Juan Ferandez on Sunday, brought the first news of a battle off the River Plate, on November 11, in which the German armed merchantman Navarra was sent to the bottom.

The Orama, taken over by the British Admiralty early in the war and fitted with a formidable battery, was proceeding early in November to join the British squadron at that time seeking the German Admiral von Spee in the South Atlantic, when she sighted the Navarra off the mouth of the Plate. The Orama gave chase and the auxiliaries exchanged shots. The gunnery of the Britsh vessel was the more accurate and after a brief engagement the upper works of the German were seen to be aftre. The Orama redoubled her efforts, but her guns were silenced when the crew of the Navarra took to the water. Four small boats remained undamaged, and in these the crew pulled away from their vessel just before an explosion sent her listing far to starboard.

The Navarra's crew scarcely had been take naboard the Orama when the ship turned slowly over and disappeared. To prevent the possibility of her becoming a derelict the Orama before she sank steamed as close as safety permitted and sent a few more shells into the burning hulk. The Orama escaped undamaged from the action and without a wounded man among the crew. The casualties aboard the Navarra were few.

From the narratives of the German prisoners the men of the Orama gathered that the Navarra, one of the big Hamburg-American line steamships, was bound for South American ports when war was declared. She touched at Pernambuco early in September and stopped at Punta Arenas on October 10. She then was bound for the Pacific, where she got in touch with Admiral von Spee's squadron near Juan Fernandez Island just before the battle off Coronel, in which the British lost the Good Hope and the Monmouth. The men aboard the Orama are convinced it was not until the Navarra joined the German squadron that she received her armament and took her place as a commerce destroyer.

Leavin gthe war ships commanded by Admiral von Spee, the Navarra returned to the Atlantic, avoiding recognition and a report of her whereabouts from Punta Arenas by making the long trip around the Horn. It is understtod her disastrous meeting with the Orama occurred before she had an opportunity to prey on allied shipping.

The foregoing special cable dispatch is the first news to reach America of the battle between the Orama and the Navarra, although the London Daily Mirror in its issue of February 24 publish photographs of the sinking of the German ship.No date of the battle and no location was mentioned in the Mirror, and the British Admiralty has not announced the action. Accompanying its photographs, the Daily Mirror said:

"All the romance of the great war at sea does not get published, but we should not forget htat Britain is ruling the waves wherever she meets an enemy craft. Here are two dramatic sea incidents. When the armed German liner Navarra met the armed British liner Orama a sea duel took place, which resulted in the enemy's vessel being sunk."

The Orama, commanded by Captain John R. Segrave, of the royal navy, formerly was a merchant vessel of the Orient line. She is of 13,000 tons and was built at Clydebank by Messrs. John Brown & Co. She is a triple screw vessel, one of the latest additions to the Orient line fleet and the first turbine driven ship constructed for the Australian mail service. With the Kent and the Glasgow she attacked and sank the German cruiser Dresden last Sunday at Juan Fernandez.

The Navarra was one of the Hamburg-American line vessels, engaged principally in South American trade. She was 5,794 tons.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

FRENCH

Paris.—The combat at Carnoy, which began the evening of March 14 by the explosion of a heavily charged mine in one of the French advanced trenches, was vain and costly for the Germans, according to an official note issued by the War Office today.

"The battle lasted until the 17th," the note adds, 'and was marked by sharp fighting, numerous counter attacks and systematic bombardments. The German offensive was finally repulsed and the French succeeded in making a slight gain on this part of the front.

"A Zeppelin airship has dropped some bombs on Calais, aiming at the railway station. No serious material damage was done, but seven employes were killed.

"In Champagne we have made sensible gains to the west, to the north and to the east of Ridge 196, northeast of Le Mesnil. The enemy made a counter attack but was repulsed. Our gains extended eastward into a ravine which runs from Ridge 196 in the direction of Beausejour.

"In the wood of Consenvoye, north of Verdun, we have carried two German trenches and made prisoners.

"At Hartmanns-Weilerkopf we have gained a little ground in relation to our previous position. The enemy's losses were very heavy. His trenches weref ull of dead."

"The Belgian army continued its progress on the Yser. Its artillery bombarded one of the enemy's convoys on the road from Dixmude to Lessen.

"From the Lys to the Oise there was artillery action. The enemy bombarded in particular the spur of the hill at Notre Dame de Lorette and the village of Carnoy and Marjcourt.

"There is nothing new in the operations in the Champagne.

"In the Lorraine there was an artillery duel. One of our aviators bombarded the railway station at Conflans."

GERMAN

Berlin, via London.—The German War Department gave out the following statement today:

"Western theatre of war: A French advance against our position on the southern slope of the Lorette Hills was repulsed.

"Partial French attacks in Champagne, to the north of Le Mesnil, were brought to a standstill by a counter attack. A fresh French attack, which was begun there last night, has been repulsed with heavy losses to the enemy.

"In the Argonne yesterday the fighting abated. French aviators threw bombs on the undefended Alsatian town of Schlettstadt. Only one bomb took effect, falling on a seminary conducted by women teachers, killing two children, and severely wounding ten. In reply German vaiators last night dropped bombs of big size on the fortress at Calais.

"Eastern theatre of war: Russian attacks on German positions between the Pissa and Czyc rivers, in Northern Poland, as well as northeast of Przasnysz, continued yesterday without success. West of the Skwa river we took nine hundred prisoners of war, and east of the Skwa one thousand prisoners and four machine guns.

"Hordes of the Russian Imperial militia gained a cheap victory by invading the most northern corner of East Prussia, in the direction of Memel. They pillaged and burned villages and estates. As a retaliatory measure towns on Russian territory occupied by us will be compelled to make payment of large sums. For every village burned by the Russian hordes on German territory and for each estate destroyed three villages or estates on Russian territory occupied by us will be sacrificed to the flames. All damage caused by fire in Memel will be answered by the destruction by fire of Russian government buildings at Suwalki and other provincial capitals in German hands."

RUSSIAN

Petrograd, via London.—The following communication from General Headquarters was issued today:

"In Russian Poland, on the front between the rivers Skwa and Orzyc, in the region of the villages of Sereflin, Tartak, Wack and Iomek, and also in the region north of Przasnys, the fighting continues. We have taken several villages and heights and taken five guns, forty-two machine guns, many caissons and hundreds of prisoners.

"On the right bank of the Niemen battles have been fought near Tauroggen and on German territory on the roads leading from Gorzda to Memel. We captured here two guns, four machine guns, two automobiles loaded with ammunition and a number of prisoners.

"On the left bank of the Vistula there has been a violent artillery duel. On the Bzura river and in the Pilica region, near Rogozinoff and Opotchno, our fire dispersed the troops of the enemy who had opened offensive operations.

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

DANCING

THIS dancing craze has got the folks as dippy as stewed artichokes—they dance from morn to night. They spend three-quarters of a day in practising and half their pay to get the thing down right. No sooner do they learn to shake their pedals to the "twisting snake" than it is out of date. And then they've got to practise up to learn to spiel the "sliding pup," the "smash" and "swinging gate." They play in style for a day and then they do the same old way—a new dance comes to town. The dancing master reaps in coin by teaching folks the "tenderloin," the "scream" and "up and down." The violin works overtime while bodies sway to measured rhyme and soles are thinly worn. And daughter, ma and grandma, too, dance mad-ly till their domes are blue, from evening to morn. In days gone by ma used to sit beside the sewing stand and knit, while father used to read. And daughter used to stay at home to study, spell, or write a poem on "bloom forth, little seed." But now, as soon as pa gets work the family hustles like a shark to join the spinning crowd. They pump upon the polished floor and dance until their backs are sore to music fast and loud. The whole blamed world is dancing mad and ev'rybody's got it bad from Shanghai to Peru. The dancing master digs his head and lies awake at night in bed inventing dances new.

WISCONSIN UNIVERSITY BEGINS BIG EXPOSITION

Madison, Wis., March 19.—The only specimen of the foot and mouth disease the department of agriculture has authorized for public exhibition will be seen at the University of Wisconsin exposition which begins today. It is a tongue inclosed in a glass case, showing the evidence of the disease which has caused the lives of $3,000,000 worth of cattle.

There are numerous other exhibits in the exposition. Designed to show what the University of Wisconsin is doing and undertaking to accomplish, the exposition is a comprehensive study of the big university. Science, literature, arts, and agriculture science will be represented in the various exhibits.

"What Does Your City Need?" This is one of the exhibits and shows the needs of municipalities. An ideal fruit farm also will be shown. It will be a model of a ten-acre farm. A model milk plant will interest dairymen. There will be a model print shopof the country style.

LET US FIND OURSELVES

By the time this article appears upon the city's streets membership in the new Chamber of Commerce, it is hoped, shall have reached the three hundred mark. What a revival there has been in matters of local interest. What a swaying of even the tree tops has been noticed during the week just closing upon the campaign for the revival of community interest.

Fulton before the inauguration of the week of revival meetings was composed of individual units, who needed a little mental tonic. One man was a little grumpy, and he told his troubles to another man, and the endless chain reached further than we thought.

Fulton is decided upon becoming an athlete. It has been granted that she possesses good health, and is ready to run in the race with other towns for the golden goal—Opportunity.

The American City Bureau is the physician in the case. Its duty is to determine the events for which we are best suited. Often and often in the days of the old Chamber of Commerce men have been heard to undertake making answer to the questions raised about the ills of the city. All of us realized that something was wrong with the physical makeup of the city. We knew of certain of our powers, and we knew a lot about our powers of endurance; and again there were peculiar qualities about which we knew comparatively nothing.

For this reason certain of our broad-minded citizens decided that the city needed a doctor and some doctoring. They wanted the city of Fulton to become again a strong, young athlete, without specialties, but with the ability to keep up with anything of its size, weight, etc., in the Empire State, or in the entire country. These men desired to avoid specialists and specialties, therefore they weighed judgment with the experience of older hands in the game of town boosting—and who cares to say that they have not done well.

Yet in spite of the fact that we now have the physician at the elbow of the athlete to advise the proper course of training which this city needs, there crops up in the minds of most of us that spirit of advising to which Emerson refers. There is the man who tells you that the new Chamber of Commerce should select for its executive office a manufacturer. Merchants have been boosted for the place, and The Evening Times has been advised of its duty to the city—to take up the issue and work for a candidate for the position of president of the Chamber of Commerce.

The Evening Times makes but one simple reply to the importuning, which is, the city has now its trainer; it is in the hands of that trainer; it is becoming a promising athlete, and if we are to become worth while in the world of athletics we must go in for distance running. If we engage in running let us concentrate our energies upon the line best suited to us, remembering that a real capable president of our Chamber of Commerce can and will come from the logical source of supply.

Why not trust the physician in the case?

Let the Compensation Law Alone

The direct settlement amendment to the workmen's compensation act which is to be considered as a special order in the Assembly today should not be passed. Its adoption could not benefit the workmen of this state who have damage cases for injuries. Its passage could not benefit the State. It could only be regarded as a backward step; and that step New York State should not take.

Excuse for a change in the existing law could be found only in the fact that it was an acknowledged failure. Experience of the few months the law has been in effect has proved it to be far from a failure—indeed, all things considered, it is about the best and most workable and most advanced specimen of such statutes in the country.

By the passage of this law the State guaranteed that it would be the adjuster of damages arising out of the injuries to workingmen in the course of their employment. The system naturally has been subjected to a great strain, but it has not broken down, as has been alleged. Slight inquiry by the Legislature would disclose that, while at first the commission had a great mass of damage cases piling up, conditions in that respect have been steadily growing better, until at present there is no undue accumulation of cases awaiting disposal.

For New York State, under these circumstances, to go over to a system which would permit dickering over the amount of damages for an injury between the employe and the employer would be to betray the interests of the workman. Though the proposal which the Assembly will discuss is technically better than the Senate's original proposal, that the casualty companies which insure the employers against damages might dicker with the employes, it is very little different in principle. The employers have all the advantages on their side. If the workmen have not the backing of the State they are not much better off than they were in the old days of prolonged court damage cases and ambulance chasing lawyers who hogged most of the belated awards.

Two reasons present themselves for the untoward vigor with which the Republican majority is pressing this measure. One is a misguided desire to discredit the present law, which, non-partisan in its origin, happened to be passed under a Democratic administration. The other is a mistaken zeal to serve special interests which have suffered by this enlightened activity of the State. Neither could possibly commend itself to the public. If the Republican majority is wise it will drop this bill as too hot to handle.—N. Y. Tribune.

It is a "Long Range" Blockade

Critics of the methods adopted by the Allies to meet the extraordinary situation created by Germany's ruthless "war zone" destruction of merchant shipping who have been basing their criticisms on assumed failure on the part of the Allies to declare a blockade should be satisfied now that publication of the official correspondence between the United States and Great Britain reveals the interesting fact that a blockade is specifically mentioned.

The British notes, given out for publication at Washington yesterday show clearly that the Allies have not only declared their policy to be a long range blockade, but that they have made two important concessions to neutral nations that will operate to lighten the burdens upon neutral shipping. One of these is restriction of the "radius of activity" to European and Mediterranean waters the other is abandonment of the right of confiscation, which is conceded to belligerents establishing a blockade.

This leaves the Allies' programme a blockade shorn of many of the penalties to which neutral commerce is usually subjected. From the standpoint of the neutral nations the Allies' programme is much to be preferred to the old time blockade—and is, of course, infinitely less of a menace to neutral commerce than the German programme, which contemplates, not seizing, but sinking merchant vessels with their cargoes, crew and passengers.—Herald, N. Y.

Opinions

For Enlarged Counties

The suggestion made by The Times a few weeks ago that the sixty-two county governments of this State be abolished and six or eight be substituted for them has found an echoing response in eight of the other States, distributed between the Atlantic and the Pacific, as appears from a number of leading newspapers. In all the commonwealths the conditions seem to be similar. The county units are too many and they differ so materially in area, population, growth, and resources that the attempts to govern them by general laws or according to any one system have failed. In these other States, as here, is shown the same needless waste of public money combined with inefficiency of administration and, very frequently, fraud.

In the Constitutional Convention, which is to begin its sessions next month, it is already settled that the matter of county government is to come up for discussion and change. Concededly in its present form it is not worthy to be retained. County government as it exists is a chaos produced by general laws, tempered and tampered with by special legislation. The many-headed Boards of Supervisors, who are nominally supposed to be responsible for conducting county affairs, are simply a lot of dummies who go through the motions of administering without possessing either the power or the ability. They are constantly ignored when there is occasion for doing anything, and appeals are as constantly made to the Legislature to regulate the simplest functions or to determine the duties and fix the pay of minor subordinates. Any pretext of local home rule, if it ever was advanced, was long ago abandoned. The statute books of the State give abundant evidences of this.

Taking the laws passed by the Legislature during the sessions of last year as an illustration, it appears that, exclusive of such special acts as those making appropriations for particular counties and those affecting the counties in this city, special statutes were enacted for each of forty-three other counties in the State. The number of acts per county ranges from one to ten. Of such special and local laws affecting salaries alone there were thirty-nine. Similar laws pertaining to supervisors numbered thirty-one, and those applying to taxation were ninety-nine. There is nothing exceptional about these figures. Each year sees a great mass of this kind of legislation, and there appears in sight no cessation of it. Most of the statutes thus far enacted this year are of the same character.

This, however, is only one aspect of the matter. Another concerns the results which such a state of affairs leads up to. A year ago the State Controller sent to the Legislature a special report in which he showed what an incomplete examination disclosed in half a dozen of the counties This gave a record of illegal expenditures, defalcations, and general violation of law so glaring in some instances that Grand Juries indicted the public officers for the offenses committed.

What this kind of misgovernment costs is hard to estimate, since the financial statements rendered are not in such shape as to permit of analysis. For strictly county purposes, exclusive of those within the limits of the city of New York, the expenditures are about $30,000,000 a year. It is safe to say that at least one-third of the amount could be saved if the county system were broken up and a consolidation of offices and consequent reduction of incumbents effected, such as would follow the institution of a half dozen departments or enlarged counties in the place of the many now in existence. The abolition of the county system in this city alone would save several millions of dollars a year.

For years the vain effort has been in progress to try to fit some kind of uniform government to a set of units varying in area from twenty square miles to 2,880, and in population from about 4,000 to nearly 3,000,000, and differing as greatly, if not more so, in growth and resources. The effort was hopeless from the start, and the State itself has been obliged to assume many of the functions which the county authorities could not attend to. There has has been, in consequence, a centralization of power at Albany and a corresponding loss of the same by the people of the various localities.

Mere tinkering with the present system will not provide an adequate remedy for the deficiencies and misdeeds which are so apparent. It should be recognized that there are too many county governments, and that a consolidation which would make six or eight local administrations take the place of sixty-two must result in greater efficiency as well as economy. Not the least of the advantages of the new system would be that with absolute home rule in each of the enlarged counties or departments, there will be no need of appeals to the Legislature, which will be free to devote its whole attention to the passage of general laws, leaving it to the people of the several localities to attend to their own affairs.—Times, N. Y.

"A Livelihood for Every Man"

There have been two years of Democracy. At all times during the sessions of the "Long Congress" it has been apparent that but for the influence of the President himself and a few sensible leaders the party would have rushed into legislative excesses from which the country could not have recovered in a decade. The disasters which business has escaped render those which have been visited upon it unimportant in comparsion.

The President has tempered his party's radicalism. Whatever he has forced through has been less objectionable than it would have been had the majority taken the bit in their teeth.

There is no thought now that the Democracy as the Democracy would have even a fighting chance in the next presidential election. For Democracy Wilsonism has been substituted. It is on Wilsonism that Democrats rely for a fighting chance next year. They are hopeful that his personality has impressed the nation sufficiently to enable the party to ride to victory on it.

There never was and never will be a party, however, capable of surviving such a winter as the industrial centres of the Union have just experienced. There is no oratory that can convert a hungry man, no political program that can reconcile him to the loss of his bread and butter. "A livelihood for every man" will be the issue next year, and it is an issue that spells certain victory. In time of prosperity men have time to experiment and play with "isms." They become intensely practical when the larder is empty.

Mr. Wilson will be the Democratic nominee next year, and he will be hopelessly defeated.—Evening Ledger.

A Murderous Country

There is a lot of murder in the United States. Many of the murderers get away. Escapes have been observed in Central New York in recent years, but Central New York is only a speck on the map of the United States, considering surface dimensions.

An insurance journal puts the number of homicides in 1912 at 6,250, but admits that these figures are incomplete. The Chicago Tribune, which collects statistics on the subject every year puts the figures higher. Probably 10,000 persons are killed by other persons annually.

The pistol and the knife are still used lightly in this country. There are five homicides in New York city to one in London. There is only one civilized country where murder is more frequent than in the United States. That is in the toe of Italy's boot. Probably Memphis, Tenn., the most murderous city in the country, excels the section of Italy which touches Sicily.

Murderers do not get the swift and certain punishment in this country that they receive in other lands. A bank robber is apt to have to serve a longer term in prison than one who has killed another, particularly if there are "extenuating circumstances." And there are more apt to be extenuating circumstances in a murder than in a good sized theft. Men do not often kill without motives. There is a tendency to brush aside any reasons for stealing. There is no excuses for it. But a dead man may have "got what he deserved." So there are many to see that others get what they deserve.—Observer, Utica.

HOME RUN

BY I. E. HYDE FULTON N. Y.

I asked a man one day last week, if he had stopped to take a peek, or, if the thought that he would seek a slice from Chambered Commerce. "Oh, No;" he answered me right quick. "You see those big whales are so slick they'd swallow us in that old creek." Amusing? Yes. His countenance terse. I wondered if he'd once got bit, or, if he'd slipped in that deep pit, where men so oft' throw a French fit, because a woman boosts them. I know if I was now a man I'd make things hum, as woman can. Some one would cry—"He also say, "To me, commerce is toothsome. We find that Fulton bread is sweet. We like to live on Fulton meat. So why not keep her on her feet by showing what we're made of. But that dear man said this to me—"They don't take fellows in there free. They won't get twenty-five from me." It's dollars he's afraid of. He needs a swift bat on his lug, and then a plaster o'er his mug. He's not a man, but a mere slug—the fellow who's a kicker. If he don't want to help the men boost this dear town he lives in where he's getting all his living, then, he needn't stand and dicker. Just chase yourself to twenty-three; you're down and out, take this from me, or, change your mind so you can be a man along the home run. For, Fulton's growing, she can't stop. She's sowing now a bumper crop So draw up brother—dip your sop. All good men in—you're one.

And—

There's so much good in the worst of us,
And so much bad in the best of us;
That it behooves all of us
To speak well of the rest of us.

COTTAGE OF SIDING AND SHINGLES

PERSPECTIVE VIEW—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH

FIRST FLOOR PLAN. SECOND FLOOR PLAN.

For a small cottage home this is a very practical design. A living room extends across the front, with vestibule and stairway at one end. A high pedestaled archway leads to the dining room, which is a very good sized room, with the added attraction of a sideboard built in. There are three chambers in the second floor, with very large closets, a good bath and a balcony out over the rear, making the second floor commodious. Full basement. Height of first story, 9 feet; second story, 8 feet. All of the chambers finished in full height. Birch or oak finish throughout first story, with pine to paint in second story and birch floors throughout. This house is 22 feet wide and 26 feet deep. Cost to build, exclusive of heating and plumbing, $2,000.

Upon receipt of $1 the publisher of this paper will furnish a copy of Saxton's book of plans, "American Dwellings." It contains 310 designs costing from $1,000 to $6,000; also book of interiors, $1 per copy.

MONDAY'S BIG SHOW

That much-talked-of musical comedy "September Morn" will be the attraction at The Quirk Monday, Mar. 22. 'Tis said to be one of the season's biggest hits, coming from a successful run of 15 weeks at the LaSalle Street Opera House Chicago.

The cast includes Frank Minor, Maude Potter, Lou Kelso, William Cameron, Arline Rolling, Clarence Nordstrom, Kathryn Bowen and Edgar Murray, and a pretty chorus and big company of jolly, dancing and singing girls, charmingly gowned who fit into the scenic framing beautifully.

Rowland & Clifford have given this —their greatest musical comedy effort—and expensive and elaborate production. Matinee, 25c, 50c; first four rows main floor, 75c. Night: 25c, 35c, 50c, 75c, $1.

OSWEGO TIMES REPORTS FATHER DOOLING'S SERMON

Following is an extract of the sermon delivered by the Rev. Father Dooling of this city at St. John's church, Oswego, in honor of St. Patrick's day:

"St. John's church was filled to the doors last night for the Lenten services and the address given by the Rev. David Dooling, asistant pastor of the church of the Immaculate Conception at Fulton. Father Dooling's sermon was elequent and inspiring his subject being, "The Faith of Ireland." He told of the coming to this country of thousands of Irish immigrants, poor in the world's goods but rich in the faith, and of their making of homes, the spreading of Irish spirit and Irish joy. He said St. Patrick's day brought back to Irishmen a vision of a dear little island off the west coast of Europe and a memory of a man who has been more to Ireland than has been any other man to any other nation in history. He told of the obstacles met by St. Patrick and of the terrible trials and persecutions of Ireland under the English rule for many centuries.

"Father Dooling said the Old Faith still lives in Ireland; on the hills and in the valleys, the mass bell still rings out. Irish emigrants are still leaving the shores, he said, to build churches, and Irish priests and nuns are as zealous as of old. He urged a preservation of the faith and when the fathers and mothers have passed away, to take up the burden and follow the noble example of the past and not be luke warm in the devotion and loyalty to principles which have withstood the tide of fifty generations.

"A number of delightful Irish melodies were played by Miss Mary Danaher, who presided at the organ."

SORE ARM KEEPS MATTY FROM PLAYING

Marlin, Texas, March 19.—Mathewson is still nursing a lame right shoulder that he received in playing handball and may not go to San Antonio with the regulars tomorrow, although hew as to be given a banquet there by members of his college fraternity. There is nothing serious the matter with his shoulder, but he says it will put him back about a week in training.

"Rube" Marquard was given permission by McGraw to go to Waco to meet his wife, and he left this afternoon in a real sunburst of glorification. He had gotten his two or three weeks' growth of scruggly beard scraped off, and he really looked quite presentable.

"Al" Williams and Emilio Palmero are moving to the front as possible candidates to be retained. Both did splendid work in this afternoon game between the regulars and colts, the former winning 5 to 3. Williams was on the regulars, while Palmero was in the box for the colts. Merkle and Piez made home runs.

MAGEE KEEPS TEAM WORKING FOR BERTHS

Browns Wells, Miss, March 19.—'Dick" Carroll, business manager of the Brook-feds, was summoned to Indianapolis yesterday by Robert B. Ward, owner of the team. Although Carroll, still denied that any such meeting took place, it is believed that he went to make a report of the conference which has been authoritatively stated he had with several Southern Association owners in New Orleans on Tuesday.

The regulars defeated the colts in a sixinning game this afternoon by 8 to 5. Four twirlers worked three innings each. "Bill" Upham and "Bill" Chappelle worked for the regulars, while "Nick" Cullop and Finis Wilson, the two southpaws of the staff, were on the mound for the colts. All four showed that they are fast gaining control of their curves.

Lee Magee will take some of his regulars to Clinton, Miss., tomorrow to play a return game with the Mississippi college nine.

ERNEST SELLE ARRIVES HOME

Fervor for Fatherland Placed Him Finally In Canadian Detention Camp

Ernest Selle, a cigar maker, formerly in the employ of Boland Bros., returned last week from London, Canada, where he had been detained in one of the British detention camps. Although Selle was an American citizen, having taken out his papers about two years ago, it took him over a month to convince the Canadian authorities of this fact. Ernest is a six-footer, with a decidedly German accent; having been born in Wurtemburg he had a full knowledge of the manufacture of German beverages. When paying a visit to friends in London, Canada, he spent many evenings with them in different resorts where Germans love to go and where he often eloquently described his trip to Germany and the general conditions of life in Wurtemburg. One evening while in the midst of jovial company, Selle was describing an incident that happened just before the war broke out, when in walked a squad of Canadian constables who, without ceremony, seized the German, bundled him into a patrol wagon, landing him finally in a detention camp. Selle describes his treatment while there as quite agreeable—plenty to eat, no work whatever and all the tobacco one could ask for. He says stories about war prisoners being starved are untrue in so far as Canadian camps are concerned. He was glad, however, to regain his freedom, which he finally received after a month of negotiation through diplomatic channels.

ANDREW JACKSON BAKER

Minetto, March 19.—Andrew Jackson Baker, a well known resident of Seneca Hill, died early yesterday at the home of his sister, Meranda Baker, following a lingering illness. He was born at Seneca Hill sixty-nine years ago and had been a lifelong resident of that place. For many years he was engaged as a farmer. Two years ago he entered the feed and grocery business at East Minetto. He was communicant of the Minetto M. E. church. Surviving besides his sister are five children, Milan M., William E., Melissa, Scott and Joseph, all of Minetto; two sisters, Caridas Drury, of Oswego, Emily Hubbard, of Scriba. The funeral will be held from the home of his sister Sunday afternoon at two o'clock. The Rev. C. F. Miller, of Minetto, will officiate and the interment will be in Riverside cemetery.

LEAGUE MEETING

The Woman's League met at the home of Mrs. Harvey MacMurchy, Park and Broadway, this afternoon.

The question of the league federating with the New York State Federation of Woman's Clubs was decided by a unanimous vote in favor of the affiliation. Mrs. A. H. Hildreth, president of the state federation was in Fulton last Thursday and at the home of Mrs. F. E. Goodjon spoke to the league members upon the past work and the future plans of the federation.

Many of the league's members have during the past week attended the Chamber of Commerce luncheons and keenly enjoyed the discussion on civic matters.

Following the regular program today refreshments were served and a shortm usicial program was rendered.

SCOUT NEWS

By JAMES N. ROBINSON

The regular meeting of Troop I, Boy Scouts of America was held at the First M. E. church Tuesday evening, March 16th, at 7:30. Twenty-one scouts and seven visitors were present. In the inter-patrol contest the Eagle Patrol was reported ahead by only two points. The next meeting, March 30th, will close the contest.

Hadwin Fitch, one of our Scouts, is endeavoring to earn a trip to the Panama Exposition which is open to Scouts. Our troop voted to assist him.

It is planned to form an athlete club and to secure a place to start a gymnasium. Of course, this will be on a small scale at first, but we are already assured of a horizontal bar, dumbbells, Indian clubs and boxing gloves. Outdoor events will also be indulged in, such as high jumping and running.

The event of the evening was a talk by Harvey Van Buren about his life in the United States Navy. He spoke of the fine physical training received and the regular hours adopted. The daily routine began at 5 A.M. The meals on board ship are good but there are no frills. His account of the trip to Turkish ports was interesting; he went also to Jerusalem. The Rock of Gibralter was described, with its 1915 guns, not one of which is visible, even with a powerful glass.

In a storm which lasted four days, out of 16 men in the signal corps, only six were able to be on duty because of seasickness. Lifeboats and launches were washed overboard and at meals the dishes had to be placed in racks.

Mr. Van Buren belonged to the signal corps and his illustrations of duties were most entertaining.

The raising of the battleship Maine in Havana harbor and the towing of the hulk out to sea, was participated in by the speaker. A large number of pictures of naval life were shown in which Mr. Van Buren figured. This talk certainly proved very entertaining and instructive.

Two new members were sworn in, viz: James Burden and Robert Smith.

After the initiation, light refreshments were "thrown" around and the meeting dismissed.

The next meeting will be held Tuesday, March 30th, at 7:30.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

Billy Sunday would have you know that he was on the suffrage wagon in those early days when it was thought to be a hearse and not the band wagon it is now known by all men to be.

* * *

It was something for bills granting presidential suffrage to women to pass one house of the Vermont and Indiana legislatures. Pretty good straws showing which way the wind is blowing.

* * *

Curiosity is the driving power of human progress. Without it man would be still primitive man. As long as the public had no curiosity about votes for women the cause was hopeless. Now success is at the door and this is the infallible sign:

Pick up the paper and you will find the heading "Woman Suffrage." Under it is a glowing description of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Remedy. What the advertising man does not know about the public is not worth knowing. When he thus puts "Woman Suffrage" at the head of a patent medicine advertisement, it is because he knows the public is more interested in woman suffrage than anything he can think of. This widespread curiosity thus indicated is what makes woman suffrage a perfectly safe bet—if not today, why then tomorrow.

BUILDERS AND SUPPLY MEN

Sketches of Individuals and Firms of This City Who Specialize In Building and Builders' Supplies

Upon the third page of this issue may be found an array of the names and firms who cater to the growing demand for supplies and accessories used in building or repairing homes, etc. They are all men of high standing in the community, so much so that it is superfluous almost to add the comment which follows:

Thomas H. Marvin

Thomas H. Marvin carries a large stock of builders' supplies; he has been known always to the public as one ready to accommodate those seeking advice or who want anything that pertains to the building line.

Wayne E. Bidwell

Wayne E. Bidwell has a store stocked with the latest fittings and fixtures for furnishing or installing electric lighting in a home or business place. He makes a specialty of an up-to-date line of electric cleaners.

Palmer-Hope Hardware Co.

The Palmer-Hope Hardware Co. succeeded to the business of George Johnston. They have an entirely new stock of everything needed for building, repairing or painting. Their line of B. P. S. paints is most complete and worth inspecting.

Mehegan Bros.' Co.

Mehegan Bros.' Co., one of the old and well established plumbing firms in Fulton make a specialty of taking contracts for all lines of gas, steam and pipe fitting—for store, factory or home. The firm's work has been always of the very highest character.

The Electric Company

The Fulton Light, Heat and Power Co. is offering the public a new electric cooking range at a reasonable price, which is installed in city homes at cost. The company wires to the house without charge and guarantees the electric cooking rate to be cheaper than any other method. Inspection is invited.

Lasher's Book Store

F. W. Lasher has on exhibition, a most complete line of the newest ideas in wall paper decorations. Prices range from the very cheapest line, to the most expensive. A visit to the store will repay an intending purchaser.

Arthur J. Guernsey

Arthur J. Guernsey has on display a complete line of bathroomware at his Oneida st. shop. All the latest specialties in nickel and glass, are shown in showcases. Mr. Guernsey also conducts an extensive business in general plumbing and heating.

Herbert L. Crandall

Herbert L. Crandall has been a contracting builder for almost 20 years. He makes a specialty of building handsome dwellings and bungalows and furnishing estimates for all kinds of house building or repair work.

Oswego Co. Independent Phone Co.

The Telephone Co., one of the almost indispensable public service corporations, is owned entirely by local business men. The company is willing always to lighten cares by installing service in the home or place of business.

Morin Brothers

Morin Brothers, lumber dealers, have in stock a new line of spark-proof, weather-proof shingles—the very last word in roofing material. A visit to their yard will repay one if one is contemplating building a new house or repairing an old one.

Gilbert & Nichols Co.

The Gilbert & Nichols Co. carry an extensive line of builders' materials, such as brick, cement, chimney flues, sewer pipe, etc. Should you contemplate buying building material of any character, call on the firm for an estimate.

George W. Hackett

Geo. W. Hackett, engineer and surveyor, is well known to Fultonians for his skill and accuracy in all matters of an engineering nature. Consultation with him concerning a probable survey or plans would be before commencing operations the height of wisdom.

Peoples' Hardware Co., Inc.

The Peoples' Hardware Co., Inc., carries with its immense line of general hardware a very large stock of Wadsworth double thick paint, in all colors, as well as all the standard brands of polishes and varnishes, including Valspar spar varnish.

Buell Brothers

Buell Bros., plumbers, have had an extended experience in general plumbing and steam fitting. Their work is always guaranteed to be of the best kind. They solicit every kind of plumbing work, interior or exterior and will furnish estimates on request.

Hulett-Taft Company

The Hulett-Taft Co., contracting painters and decorators, carry an extensive stock of every kind of paint, wall paper, moulding and picture frames, paint brushes, oils and varnishes. Their 1915 wall paper designs are now on exhibition in the Oneida st. store.

D. B. Kane

D. B. Kane carries a complete line of electrical fixtures. He will furnish on request estimates for electrical wiring for interior or exterior use. His reputation is a guarantee for work performed.

Henderson & Thompson Co.

The Henderson Thompson Co. carry a large supply of doors, windows, roofing, cement and plaster. The company is issuing free a very useful book on farm and building work. Scranton coal and all kinds of lumber for building or repairing are other lines carried.

Fred G. Dolbear

Fred G. Dolbear has a general store well stocked with supplies for spring cleaning and repairing. A visit to his newly renovated and enlarged store would convince one he need go on farther for his wants.

G. J. Emeny Co.

The G. J. Emeny Co. manufacture the Intense furnace, known so well in this vicinity. Marine and stationary gasoline engines are included in the line as well as all kinds of machine shop work. Estimates on any kind of machine repair work will be furnished upon request.

The Gas Co.

The Fulton Light & Fuel Co. will pipe and equip the home for gas at a reasonable rate. The company carry a complete line of gas ranges, plates, ovens, lamps, fixtures, and samples of every kind of gas appliance on exhibition at the store.

Charles A. Carpenter

Charles A. Carpenter has the only complete wood working mill in Fulton, where mouldings, trimmings, general woodwork can be manufactured on short notice. Large quantities of lettuce, potato and onion crates are turned out there each year for those shipping produce to other cities.

Mason Brothers

The Mason Brothers own the only patent in this section for making concrete blocks that give continuous air passage, thus insuring dry walls. The great expense of studding, lath and plaster can be saved by using their concrete blocks for building.

GREAT BARGAINS IN PIANOS AT BOGUE'S MUSIC HOUSE, 61 1st ST. adv.

Bargains and Rank.

"It is extraordinary," writes Sir Henry Drummond Wolff in "Rambling Recollections," "to observe in England the weakness that most people have for boasting of their friends in high places and the deference that they show to them. The daughter of a lady of very high rank had some pain in her foot which the mother asked the governess to be good enough to look at. The latter after examining it said, 'If it were not for her ladyship's exalted rank I should say it was a bunion.'"

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, March 19.—Frivolous legislation of which each year of the session there has been considerable, has been meagre this year. Ordinary there is a batch of impossible bills presented for the sole purpose of creating a laugh or because a member has been enjoined by a constituent or a number of constituents to introduce it. Bills of this nature rarely get beyond thee committee to which they are assigned, but they are printed, however, at the expense of the State and in sufficient number to cause a considerable junk heap after the session is over.

The Voters Legislative Asociation which includes in its membership many substantial men, has characterized the bill introduced by Senator Brown to make it a misdemeanor to take part in any eating or drinking contest, as frivolous.

Many are familiar with the ludicrous exhibitions which have been exploited at fairs and other public entertainments when hungry or thirsty bipeds have hurled themselves upon quantities of food and innumerable bottles or glasses of liquid refreshment, hoping by the manifestation of almost inhuman capacity to win either verbal approbation or a more substantial reward for cannibalistic perquisites. In most instances these exhibitions have resulted in a series of hearty laughs and chronic indigestion for the self-constituted gluttons. Nothing more serious than the cancelling of dinner invitations hitherto extended the principals of eating and drinking contests, has been recorded which might be used as an argument for the discontinuance by legal mandate of such amusing contests, and yet Senator Elon R. Brown majority leader of the Senate is behind the measure which aims to bring about this result. It is doubtful if the eating and drinking contests are not more frivolous than the attempt which has been made to prevent them in future.

Another bill deemed "frivolous" by the Voters Legislative Association, is that which seeks to put an end to the mirth provoking pastime known as "ball dodging."

Few indeed are those who have attended circuses, who have not loitered near the side-show which had for its main feature the attraction commonly known as "hit the baby once and get a cigar." To deal more explicitly with the attraction perhaps it would be well to state that a canvas with a hole in the middle, a negro who thrusts his invulnerable head through the aperture and a pyramid of baseballs, three of which may be hurled at the alluring and protruding cranium for a quarter.

Like the eating and drinking contests, the "ball dodging" exhibition is not without its humorous features. Few men have ever had the brutual satisfaction of smiting the thick skull of the black dodger, and consequently no serious damage to mentality has resulted.

The practice for which men with exceedingly thick skulls and those ambitious to become baseball pitchers are necessary appears in all truth far more frivolous than the attempt which has been made to discontinue it by creating a law making it a misdemeanor for anyone to take part in it.

Although the "ball dodging" bill was regarded as a joke when it was first introduced, its introducer, Senator Gilchrist is doing his best to have it passed. He holds that the human cranium was created for thought and not for a target for twirlers.

War: Pathos and Humor

Under the fire of our army the Germans have left more than 1,000,000 men—yes, more than 1,000,000—who will never reappear on any battlefield.—General Joffre.

One million able-bodied men left on the battle-fields of France and Belgium alone!

What does it all mean?

The German empire has a total population of 64,925,993. There are 18,599,236 men in occupation. But Germany uses the greatest percentage of them in agricultural pursuits. It is doubtful if there are more than 6,000,000 men engaged in industry. All the textile industries of the empire employ barely 1,000,000 men and women; all the iron and steel foundries employ another 350,000, while 250,000 more are used in the manufacture of machinery. The Post-office Department alone gives employment to 300,000 men.

In 1895 a special imperial census taken throughout Germany showed that the 296 industrial enterprises, including the Krupp plant, employed a total of 562,628 workers. It is doubtful if this has more than doubled in the last 20 years, and, deducting the probable number of women employed in these plants, it seems that most of Germany's industrial wheels are turned by 1,000,000 men.

Politically, this loss may have tremendous effects. Stunned by the loss of so many men, the Germans may not give the Kaiser the same unmeasured support they have rendered in bearing out his statement that "nothing must be done anywhere on the globe without the sanction of Germany's ruler."

They may force a redistricting of Germany to make representation more equitable, and they may compel a curtailment of the powers of the Bundesrath, which might be termed a glorified senate. They may flock to the standard of the Social Democrats, who, although they did not forestall the war, have earned the gratitude of the German people for doing their share to preserve the entity of the kingdom. All this may be the political result.

Socially the people may be bound into a greater and stronger whole by their dreadful loss, much as the United States was drawn together after the Civil War. Marriages will most surely be encouraged, and it is highly probable that a measure which has been agitated for years, to reward parents upon the birth of each child, may be made law. The police may lose some of their military character. Wages and opportunity may be increased to induce the laborers who are left to greater interest in their families and their country. Even morality may be bettered.

SCOUT NEWS

The regular meeting of Troop I, Boy Scouts of America was held at the First M. E. church Tuesday evening, March 16th, at 7:30. Twenty-one scouts and seven visitors were present. In the inter-patrol contest the Eagle Patrol was reported ahead by only two points. The next meeting, March 30th, will close the contest.

Hadwin Fitch, one of our Scouts, is endeavoring to earn a trip to the Panama Exposition which is open to Scouts. Our troop voted to assist him.

It is planned to form an athlete club and to secure a place to start a gymnasium. Of course, this will be on a small scale at first, but we are already assured of a horizontal bar, dumbbells, Indian clubs and boxing gloves. Outdoor events will also be indulged in, such as high jumping and running.

The event of the evening was a talk by Harvey Van Buren about his life in the United States Navy. He spoke of the fine physical training received and the regular hours adopted. The daily routine began at 5 A.M. The meals on board ship are good but there are no frills. His account of the trip to Turkish ports was interesting; he went also to Jerusalem. The Rock of Gibralter was described, with its 1915 guns, not one of which is visible, even with a powerful glass.

After the initiation, light refreshments were "thrown" around and the meeting dismissed.

The next meeting will be held Tuesday, March 30th, at 7:30.

Paris, March 2, (by mail to New York). An order for 500,000 razors has just been placed by the British government with the French cutlery factories at Thiers. They are for part of the personal equipment of the new troops now being organized in England. When the war broke England discovered that in spite of her own immense cutlery factories there was hardly a razor to be had in all England that did not bear the mark "Made in Germany." The soldiers themselves refused to carry these and the government called on the French factories to help it out of the predicament.

Rheims.—With the continual bombardment of Rheims by the Germans it has become utterly impossible to continue the school sessions in the regular school houses. Aside from the danger of these being at any moment, struck by shells the frequency of the latter also render it impossible for the children with the regular school courses, M. Forsant, inspector of primary education, has just completed all arrangements for the continuation of all classes in the caves in which the inhabitants take refuge during the bombardment.

Paris.—The war has not interfered to the slightest extent with the nourishment of babies at Paris. Professor Pinard has just reported to the Academy of Medicine that with the opening of hostilities and that with the taking of precautions for insuring the food supply of Paris, especial measures were taken to make certain that the food elements for babies should not be lacking either in quality or quantity. So successful have those measures been that the infant mortality during the seven months of the war has been less than it was in either of the two preceding years.

HELLO, YELLOW

COLOR SCHEMES

Odds bodkins but the styles are odd,
It's hard to pick the oddest.
Yet that one is most odd perhaps
Which is discreet and modest.

New York, March 19.—Oddity seems to be the best commodity of the season. The follower of fashion who likes to be stared at as being dashingly different and original certainly has a wide field to choose from. Taken from the tips of her toes to the toe of her French roll with her French lid on it she can go the limit of oddness with perfect impunity.

Beginning at the topnotch and working down the oddest chapeau up to date is the leghorn hat with the transparent drop curtain of tulle through which the wearer's eyes peer out seductively. Even topping the hat for oddity however, comes the flat many ribbed parasol apeing the paper parasol of far away Japan. These silk replicas of Japanese paper originals are the quintessence of quintess. They are shown entirely covered in gay Futuristic silk or with a gayly figured center and a plain silk border. Some are all of one toned silk with an embroidered motif like those found upon a Japanese screen, a flight of yellow swallows across a purple sky or dragon flies flitting over a field of yellow. The Pagoda parasols in black and white or blue and white stripe combinations are losing their novelty through repetition for the last two seasons, but the square parasol adds a new odd note this year as does also the transparent parasol of net afluff with countless ruffles of dainty lined satin ribbon. Surely these parasols are the oddest things under the sun while the peeled hair of the French roll coiffure continues as the oddest of all things under the hat.

The ruff of pleated white tulle that stands out stiffly under the chin and fastens an otherwise perfectly bare throat is certainly odd enough enough to suit any one even the most finicky and then there's the peasant bodice with its V shaped point in front that is laced up the front like a regular corset.

It is when you reach the skirt, however, that oddness fairly runs riot. There is the crinoline skirt, the skirt shirred bn cords around the hips to flare out around the ankles in careless abandon, the skirt with an apron effect in front and the flippant skirt that is just one ruffle after another. Astocking so odd that it is positively wierd is one with gold braid and tiny gold buttons running up one side to the calf. The braid then runs around the leg with a gold tassel right in the front the whole effect being a simulation of a high colored shoe. Isn't that the limit?

Then there are the endless odd varieties of low and high shoes with insets of light leather outlining a tiny pointed tip of black patent kid. The heel and back of a pump of one color and the vamp of black kid with a piping of the color around the top and, Oh! all and every combination that human ingenuity can cobble.

Verily with such a wide scope of oddness to choose from it does seem queer now desn't it that some women are forced to wear just one earring at a time to attract attention.

Just why yellow has always been under a sort of stigma as designating the rotten streak in humanity typifying jealousy and reminiscent only of biliousness or jaundice is hard to account for now that it has been welcomed into the arms of Fashion as one of the most charming tints of the season. Sunshine, beaten gold and fields of ripened wheat are only a few of the lovely things it now reminds us of.

Exquisite are the yellow crepe de chine negligees, the pussy willow taffeta and crepe lingerie in maize tints. Beautiful the gowns of shimmering yellow satin and the hats and parasols, blouses, stockings, slippers and gloves all in the color of liquid sunshine. It truly is up to all those who have an eye for the beautiful and artistic to forget its jaundiced past and with a welcoming smile say "Hello yellow."

"SIBERIA FOR SOUSES."

Horrible Punishment For "Second Offenders" In Russia.

"Siberia for the souses" is the watch word in Russia right now, according to M. L. von Clain, vice president of the Baldwin Locomotive works, who returned from a business trip to the czar's land aboard the Scandinavian-American line steamship United States.

"Of course they don't say it that way," was Mr. von Clain's explanation, "but it goes. Second offenders caught loaded on vodka hit the long trail for Siberia. 'Russia is riding on a water wagon without springs."

Appeals For General Leman's Release.

Through the medium of the Swiss Red Cross Mlle. Leman, daughter of General Leman of the Belgian army, who defended Liege against the Germans in the early part of the war, has appealed to Emperor William of Germany to allow her father to return to his home in Belgium. Her argument is that the general, having lost the use of both his legs, can no longer be regarded as fit for military duties.

Vital Statistics.

When a man says that his health is so-so he means that he is on the mend.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Safety.

"I've just been over to my brother-in-law's house trying to pour oil on troubled waters."

"An unpleasant duty, isn't it?"

"Yes. And if I'm ever called on for that kind of duty again I'm going to stand off at a safe distance and pour the oil through a hose."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

TALK OF END OF WORLD.

Peculiar Mental Condition Caused by War In Europe.

The mental condition caused among Americans by the war in Europe is interesting. One finds many persons in all places who believe the world is nearing its end. Such persons are by no means cranks. Many are careful students of history as well as of the Bible, and some of them have figured the prophecies of Daniel down to a point where they feel sure not only of the approach of the grand collapse, but of the identity of the principal characters who are to be conspicuous in the last days.

One meets persons holding such views on the trains, in the banks, everywhere, and if one considers them sensible in all other things he hardly can regard them as lunatics in this. The religious faith of many persons calls for a grand breakdown of the world.

Grim Comedy.

A certain young actress was constantly irritated by the pompous behavior of the actor-manager in whose company she was playing.

"Now, Miss Blank," said the great one, "you'll have an opportunity to show your talents in another direction. I've cast you for a dandy part, small, but 'fat.' And you'll have a chance to study me in a new role. You've never seen me do farce comedy, have you?"

"Yes, I have," contradicted Miss Blank; "I've seen your Macbeth."—London Mail.

Of Course.

"Daughter sends you 1,000 kisses and wants 100 in return."

"A hundred kisses?"

"Don't be absurd, John—a hundred dollars, of course."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

About Sports Generally

New York, March 19.—More and more, as the opening day draws near, does it appear as though the Giants and Braves were going to stage a merry little war all by themselves for the National League Pennant. All there is to it—they are the class of the league and from this angle there doesn't seem to be a team in the Tener circuit that has even a chance to cheat them out.

Critics who a few weeks ago were howling that McGraw didn't have a pitching staff are strangely silent now. Critics who at the close of the last season were howling that his infield was shot to pieces crawled into their holes when the Little Napoleon went out and grabbed Honus Lobert. They burrowed still deeper when he went out and grabbed himself Pol Perritt.

Mathewson, Tesreau, Marquard, Perritt, Chalmers, Fromme—how does it look?

Rudolph, Tyler, James, Hess, Davis, Crutcher—how does it look?

If there are any of the other six teams in the league boasting such aggregations they have yet to blare forth.

Getting dow nto hair line distinctions—on paper—the Giants even seem to have the edge on the hated Bostonites. Comparisons, however, are odious, as was proven quite conclusively last October when the dopesters began comparing Schmidt to McInnis, Deal to Baker, and Gowdy to Schang.

Schmidt, Evers, Maranville and Smith, against Merkle, Doyle, Fletcher and Lobert, Magee, Connolly and Moran against any three of the following—Robertson, Snodgrass, Thorpe, burns or Murray, Gowdy and Whaling against McLean, Myers and Smith.

If the foregoing baftle fronts don't offer pre-season prospects of the hottest little fracas in the history of the grand old game then all dope is useless, and the dopesters should be sent to Belgium.

The weakness of the Giants last year was attributed to lack of another good pitcher and a weakness at third. Both have been filled—and most ably. Weaknesses of the Braves—if they are any—was in their hitting. Sherwood Magee, slugger par excellence, was added.

Now, if the anvil chorus will just join in on "Just Before the Battle Mother," we'll let out bets on the Giants and Braves against the field stick from April to October.

CONFERENCE ATHLETES MEET.

Evanston, March 19.—Wisconsin and Illinois will battle for first place and Chicago and Northwestern for third if the dope of conference experts makes good at the annual conference meet the Big Nine at Northwestern field.

Northwestern had one of the best track teams in its history, but in the Illini and Badgers were doped the strongest.

SAVES WOMAN FROM BULL

Animal, Inflamed by Red Sweater, Pursues Her to Trolley.

Boulder, Colo.—The presence of mind and prompt action of Larry Fox, a motorman of a Denver and Interurban car out of Boulder, saved Edith Fair from death or serious injury.

Wearing a red sweater Miss Fair, who is housemaid at the home of Frank Anderson, on the eastern limits of the city, started for the junction to intercept the car to Denver. While hurrying across a vacant lot she heard the bellowing of a big bull.

One glance was sufficient to warn Miss Fair that she was the object of attraction of the maddened animal. The terrified woman fled toward the railway track with the enraged beast not more than fifty yards behind her.

The interurban car at this moment shot around the curve, but a short distance away. Motorman Fox was quick to see the young woman's danger, and after turning off the current and applying the brakes jumped from the vestibule, seized her by the wrist and lifted her to the car almost at the same instant the animal brushed against the coach.

Miss Fair, who had fainted when the excitment was over, was soon revived, but postponed her trip to Denver.

August Harding, the owner of the bull, says he has never known the animal to act unruly before, and attributes its antics to the red sweater Miss Fair was wearing.

WOODPECKER ROBS A TOWN.

Causes Short Circuit Resulting in Excessive Water Bill.

Ilwaco, Wash.—A woodpecker is blamed for large additions to Ilwaco's bill for pumping city water.

The contract for filling the municipal reservoir is let to a power company and an electric indicator notifies the engineer when the required depth of water has been provided.

For some months the bill has been regarded as excessive and the number of hours required daily to fill the basin has varied to a marked degree.

Investigation has placed the blame on an innocent woodpecker which chose one wire for a perch and with its tail touching the other wire made a short circuit so that the engineer's signal to stop pumping was controlled by the woodpecker's rest rather than the depth of water provided.

Raleigh's Advice.

If any desire thee to be his surety, give him a part of what thou hast to spare; if he press thee further he is not thy friend at all, for friendship rather chooseth harm to itself than offereth it. If thou be bound for a stranger, thou art a fool; if for a merchant, thou puttest thy estate to learn to swim; if for a churchman, he hath no inheritance; if for a lawyer, he will find an evasion by syllable or word to abuse thee; if for a poor man thou must pay it thyself; if for a rich man, he needs not; therefore, from suretyship, as from a manslayer or enchanter, bless thyself; for the best profit and return will be this; that if thou force him for whom thou art bound, to pay it himself, he will become thy enemy; if thou use to pay it thyself, thou wilt become a beggar.—Sir Walter Raleigh.

Suspicions of Charles Reade.

Wealthy men are often abnormally suspicious of tricks. The celebrated author Charles Reade was one of this kind. He always imagined he was being robbed and set traps to catch the thieves. When he became lessee of a certain theater he suspected that his ticket office cheated him by letting in the public for anything they could get and keeping the money. So Reade turned up the collar of his overcoat, pulled his hat down over his eyes and shuffled up to the box office as the people were going in. He shoved a half crown in the box office keeper's hand and whispered: "It's all right—that's for you—I don't want a ticket. Just pass me through." The clerk ran out, seized Reade by his coat collar and was passing him roughly into the street when he recognised his "chief."

Origin of the Name Automobile.

The word automobile comes from two words, one Greek and the other Latin. The two words are auto and mobile. The former is derived from the Greek autos, meaning self, and the latter from the Latin mobilis, adverb, movable. This is originally derived from the Latin verb moveo, movere, movi, motus, meaning to move. We are unable to say who first suggested the name for self propelled vehicles.

Widows Are Dangerous.

Foreclosure and Sale

SUPREME COURT, Onondaga County, New York. Lora M. Fergerson, as administratrix of the Estate of Charles R. Fergerson, deceased, plaintiff, against Samuel Greenberg and others, defendants. By virtue of a judgment of foreclosure and sale in the above entitled action, duly made and entered in the Clerk's Office of Onondaga County, New York, on the 27th day of February, 1915, and also entered in the Clerk's Office of the County of Oswego, New York, on the 5th day of March, 1915; I, the subscriber, Referee duly appointed for that purpose, will sell at public auction at the front door of the Court House in the City of Syracuse, County of Onondaga, New York, on the 26th day of April, 1915, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, the lands and premises described in said judgment and directed therein to be sold, which are bounded and described as follows, to-wit:— ALL THAT TRACT OR PARCEL OF LAND, situate in the Town of Cicero, County of Onondaga and State of New York, being part of Lot Number Seventy-two (72), to be surveyed from the Southeast corner of said Lot in a square form as near as may be, and to contain One Hundred (100) acres of land, as the same was granted by Letters Patent to Robert Troup, excepting and reserving out of the above described premises Fifty (50) acres of land heretofore conveyed to Aaron Griffin, and now owned by John Siver; being the equal South half part of the same, and bounded on the North by a line running through the center of said One Hundred (100) acres and parallel with the North line of the same, the piece of land hereby conveyed being the Fifty (50) acres and the North half of said One Hundred (100) acres.

ALSO ALL THAT OTHER TRACT OR PARCEL OF LAND, being part of said Lot Number Seventy-two (72) in said Town of Cicero bounded as follows, to-wit:— Beginning on the Westerly Bank of Chittenango Creek at the Northeast corner of the State's One Hundred (100) acres in said lot; running thence West Thirty (30) chains Sixty-six (66) links along the North line of said State's One Hundred (100) acres; thence North Seventy-four (74) degrees East Nineteen (19) chains and Sixty-three (63) links to an oak tree standing on the Westerly bank of said Creek; thence Southerly along the bank of said Creek to the place of beginning; containing Nine and Forty-nine One Hundreths (9.49) acres of land, be the same more or less.

ALSO ALL THAT OTHER PIECE OR PARCEL OF LAND in said Town of Cicero, being part of Lot Number Seventy-two (72), bounded as follows, to-wit:— Beginning at the center of the State road leading from Bridgeport to Cicero Corners; running thence North Seventy-four (74) degrees East Five (5) chains and Eighty (80) links to the West Line of the State's One Hundred (100) acres, intersecting North Two (2) chains and Twenty (20) links South of the Northwest corner of said State's One Hundred (100) acres; thence South Ten (10) chains and Fifty (50) links along the West line of the same to the center of the State road; thence Northerly along the center of said road to the place of beginning; containing Two and Eighty-three One-hundreths (2.83) acres of land more or less.

Excepting and reserving ALL THAT OTHER PART OF SAID LOT Number Seventy-two (72), bounded as follows, to-wit:— On the Northeast by the center of the highway leading from Bridgeport to Cicero Corners; on the West by lands owned by Jonathan Sternburg; on the South by lands owned by John Siver, containing One (1) acre of land more or less. Being the same premises deeded by Samuel Rector to Jonathan Sternburg on May 27, 1902, and recorded in the Office of the Clerk of the County of Onondaga on May 31, 1902, in Book 337, page 478.

ALSO ALL THAT TRACT OR PARCEL OF LAND, situate in the Town of Redfield, County of Oswego and State of New York, in Great Lot Number Twenty-one (21) in Township Number Twelve (12), commencing in the center of the State Road on said Lot line, running thence Eight (8) chains and Twenty-five (25) links Southerly in the center of said road from the South line of said lot; thence Westerly in the center of a road parallel with the North line of said Lot to the West line of said Lot; thence North to the Northwest corner of said Lot; thence Easterly on said Lot line to the place of beginning; containing Twenty-five and Forty-two Hundredths (25.42) acres of land be the same more or less.

ALSO ALL THAT TRACT OR PARCEL OF LAND, situate in the Town of Redfield, County of Oswego and State of New York, bounded and described as follows:— All that part of sub-division Number Four (4) in Great Lot Number Fifteen (15) lying Westerly of the State road and bounded Southerly and Westerly by the Great Lot lines; Easterly by the State road; and Northerly by the Southerly lines of Sub-division Number Two (2); and containing about Fifty-nine and Forty Hundredths (59.40) acres, as survey made by Jabez Green.

ALSO ALL THAT OTHER TRACT OR PARCEL OF LAND, situate in the Town of Redfield, County of Oswego and State of New York, known and distinguished as sub-division Number Four (4), Lot Fourteen (14), Township Twelve (12), One Hundred Fifty-seven (157) acres.

ALSO ALL THAT OTHER TRACT OR PARCEL OF LAND, situate in the Town of Redfield, County of Oswego and State of New York, known and distinguished as part of sub-division Number Three (3) of Great Lot Number Fifteen (15), Township Twelve (12), Constable's purchase, bounded and described as follows: Beginning in the

GOT A SURPRISE.

He Expected to Be Quite Conspicuous, but Found Himself Ignored.

"Say," said the man who takes himself seriously, "I had a great surprise thrust upon me when I went down to get my marriage license last month. When I think it over I am ready to assert that it was a disagreeable surprise.

"I sneaked into the big office under the impression that everybody was watching me. But when I told the clerk at the window what I wanted he took the information with a coolness that was almost disgusting. When I gave him my name—which seemed to me to reverberate like thunder—not a solitary clerk raised his head. And nobody laughed when the inquisitor asked me how I spelled it. When I gave the lady's name and fancied everybody would titter the only sound I could hear was the turning of record leaves and the muddled clicking of a distant typewriter.

"Why, they couldn't have treated me with more indifference if I had been buying marriage licenses twice a day for ten years.

"I went into that office feeling shamed and sensitive and sneaking.

"I came out hurt, humiliated, humbled.

"I had expected to be ridiculed—I was absolutely ignored."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

OUR GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Elisha Mitchell, Who Started It, Was a Martyr to His Science.

The first government geological survey in America was conducted by Elisha Mitchell, who was born in Washington, Conn., about the year 1794. He was a graduate of Yale and became professor of mathematics in the University of North Carolina. Afterward he became professor of chemistry, and in 1821 he was ordained a Presbyterian minister.

As state surveyor of North Carolina he made an extensive geological survey, and he was the first to ascertain that the mountains of North Carolina are the highest east of the Rockies. He was a martyr to science, for to settle some disputed point about the altitude of these mountains he reascended them in 1857, lost his way at night, fell down a precipice and was killed. The geological survey of the United States, which has carried out on a large scale the work commenced by Mitchell, was created for the purpose of preparing a map of the United States, classifying the public lands, examining the geological structure, mineral resources and the products of the republic and investigating the extent to which the arid and semi-arid lands may be redeemed by irrigation.—New York World.

Gets Letter From Wreck.

Fergus Falls, Minn.—Professor J. O. A. Larson of the Park Region college here received a letter recently that went down with the Empress of Ireland. The mucilage was gone from the envelope, but the letter was in a good state of preservation and easily read. It was rescued from the wreck by divers. Mr. Larson was a Rhodes scholar at Oxford, England, at the time the vessel sank, and the letter was addressed to him there and was forwarded to England and then to this city.

PLEASURE AND LIFE.

"While we live let us live," is an ancient heathen saying, used to excuse living for pleasure alone. But pleasure is not life; it is but the fringe of real living. He who has known only pleasure has not known the deeper essentials of being. The old sundial motto is truly wise, "Time wasted is existence, used is life."

THE NEW STATE CONSTITUTION—5.

Confirmation by the Senate an Ancient Evil.

The official Short Ballot amendment would give to the Governor power to appoint the Secretary of State, State Comptroller, State Treasurer Attorney General and State Engineer and Surveyor, without confirmation by the Senate. How strongly the Short Ballot advocates feel on the subject is illustrated by the fact that after that amendment passed the Assembly at the last session of the legislature, when the Senate undertook to amend it by conferring power of confirmation by the Senate, the Short Ballot Organization promptly disowned the measure in the amended form.

The reasons for taking this stand are not hard to see. The idea of the amendment is to get these minor officers out of politics, but if confirmation of the Senate were to be required the state would simply be jumping out of the frying pan into the fire.

In the public eye the Senate assumes none of the responsibility for the conduct of the administration or the quality of appointments. All that lies, apparently, with the Governor. A political machine will cheerfully nominate the strongest man in sight for the Governorship, confident that it can easily control appointive patronage in spite of him through the action of the Senate. And so unembarrassed by any responsibility for the consequences, the Senators concern themselves mainly with the partisan political aspects of the nominations, with little regard for the technical efficiency or ability of the candidates.

A Fine Theory That Never Worked.

Of course the theory of the confirmation system is perfectly obvious. Every school boy knows it. The theory was that the Senate would confirm all the good nominations made by the Governor and would only block him on bad ones. It would be a good scheme if it worked, but it doesn't work. It never has been anything but a useless irritation wherever it has been tried. In state government, city government and national government we have tried it for several generations but it hasn't worked yet. Should we go on fondly imagining that some day it will work?

By giving to the Senate power without corresponding responsibility the system is basically wrong. It fills the Senate with intrigue and questions of patronage and sets the senators trading with the Governor. It all but makes the Senate the real appointing power and we never know nowadays how far it is fair to criticise a gubernatorial appointment for we cannot tell what compromises may have been forced upon him by the Senate. We have had unsatisfactory governors in the State, more than once, but the Senate has never been a bulwark against improper appointments.

A far more characteristic scheme is that of the Senate holding up a good appointment in order to compel the Governor to appoint someone who is more in sympathy with the machine.

Confirmation by the legislative body has been abandoned in all modern city charters and it must be abandoned in the state too. The device has long ago lost all its standing in political science and it ranks now as a surviving political superstition.

An Example of Undivided Responsibility.

The lesson of experience with the undivided appointive power of the Mayor of New York City ought not to be lost upon the state. It should be remembered that the mayor has vastly more power than the Governor and administers a budget four times as big. The mayor is compelled to make every appointment on his own personal responsibility for the result. He has likewise power to correct his mistakes and remove his appointees at any time. In the last fifteen years New York has had all kinds of mayors with all kinds of political backing, shady and otherwise. But in spite of this environment the mayoralty appointees have been on a very high plane. New Yorkers would regard it as a big calamity if the charter were so amended as to require the Mayor to submit his appointees for confirmation by the Board of Aldermen, or even by the Board of Estimate, for there would be good reason to expect that the standard of appointment would inevitably sink to a low level. There is not the slightest disposition on the part of the people of New York City to change the system, whereas senatorial confirmation in both the state and the nation is the cause of incessant discontent and irritation.

The abolition of senatorial confirmation in this state not only on the new appointments which the Short Ballot amendment would give the governor, but on all other appointments as well would be a great step forward toward clean-cut responsible state administration.

[This is the fifth of a series of nine articles prepared jointly by the Municipal Government Association, the County Government Association and the New York Short Ballot Organization on questions to come before the Constitutional Convention.]

SHORT BALLOT IN NEBRASKA.

Conservative Republicans, like Victor Rosewater, and radicals represented largely by men at the University of Nebraska, came together in the latter part of last year in a state conference on the Short Ballot. At the next election eighty offices will be balloted upon by the people.

BRING SUNSHINE TO WOMEN PRISONERS

Joliet, Ill., March 19.—The debt which society owes to its unfortunates should be repaid by giving them every possible opportunity to learn to live under normal conditions. This is the theory of Miss Grace Fuller, superintendent of women at the Illinois State penitentiary at Joliet. Miss Fuller is putting her theory into practice, and with gratifying results.

A group of white clad, smiling women, stood today about their leaders in a domestic science classroom. They beat eggs, measured out sugar and did other things, all according to recipe written on a blackboard by one of them. Laughter and talk came easily as they worked.

These women were prisoners at the state penitentiary—but they were transformed into new, happy persons by the application of a scheme of revolutionizing prison methods. In this work Miss Fuller has the cooperation of Warden Allen.

Dress making, rug weaving and other domestic activities are included in the new rule of procedure for women in this institution. Everywhere is noticeable a sense of contentment and absence of restraint.

"It is to give these women, who did not have adequate opportunities before they came here, an opportunity to qualify for normal society that we are doing this work," explained Miss Fuller. "Society should feel that it has placed these women here to help them, not to take its revenue on them. This we are trying to do in giving them work which will fit them, as they leave us, for fine, effective living. Their lives have in so many instances been barren of all interests before coming here. We ought to supply that interest."

NEW YORK BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO DEDICATED

San Francisco, Mar. 18.—The New York building at the Panama-Pacific Exposition was dedicated today with elaborate ceremonies attended by the governor of California, the mayor of San Francisco, all the high dignitaries of the Exposition company and more than a score of prominent New Yorkers.

Seth Low, president of the National Civic Federation represented Gov. Whitman at the exercises and was the speaker of the day. He was accompanied to San Francisco by Adjt. Gen. Stotesbury, of the New York National Guard, as aide.

Nearly all of the 18 commissioners from the State of New York were present when the ceremonies opened. Norman E. Mack, Buffalo, chairman of the New York State Commission, presided. He spoke briefly and introduced president Charles C. Moore, of the Exposition Co., who formerly presented to the exposition commissioners the plaque showing their participation in the big fair. He also voiced the thanks of the exposition management for the Empire State's support. Mayor Rolph of San Francisco and Gov. Johnson of California then spoke briefly, as did Wm. B. Lamar, chairman of the federal commission to the fair.

Gov. Whitman of New York and his staff are expected to visit the Exposition in May.

"THE MAN WITHOUT A SOUL"

A SUNDAY SERMON

"When Aaron Burr made his first sailing expedition down to New Orleans in 1805, he met, as the devil would have it, a gay, dashing and bright young Irishman, Nolan. Nolan became involved, body and soul, in the Burr conspiracy. When the crash came, Jefferson and the House of Virginia undertook to break the conspirators in a great treason trial at Richmond, and many of the lesser fry got caught among them Nolan.

"When the president of the court asked him at the close of the trial if he wished to say anything to show he had always been faithful to the Government, he cried out in a fit of frenzy, 'Damn the United States, I hope I may never hear of the United States.' Old Solonel Morgan, who was presiding, was shocked. The officers who sat in that court were men who had served through the revolution, and their lives, not to say their necks, had been risked for the very idea which Nolan so cavalierly cursed.

"If Nolan had compared Washington to Arnold or cried 'God save King George,' Morgan could not have felt worse. He called the court into his private room, and when they came out their faces were lige the Arctic snow. Colonel Morgan said: 'Prisoner, hear the sentence of the court. The court decides, subject to the approval of the President, that you neveer again hear the name of the United SStates.'

"Nolan laughed, but nobody else. Colonel Morgan was solemn and the whole room was hushed as dead as night. Nolan lost his swagger in a moment. Colonel Morgan added, 'Take the prisoner, Mr. Marshal, to Orleans on an armed boat, deliver him to the naval commander, and see that no one mentions the name of the United States to the prisoner.' From that day, September 23, 1807, until he died, May 11, 1863, he did not hear the name of the United States.

"The sentence was carried out on the following plan: Nolan was placed on a Government vessel bound on a long cruise. He was ordered treated with great courtesy. It was ordered that he be provided with quarters, rations and clothing proper for an officer of his rank; that he should be exposed to no indignity, nor unnecessarily reminded that he was a prisoner. Under no circumstances should he hear the name of his country nor receive information. It was the intention of the Government that he never see the country he had disowned.

"He was granted the privilege of wearing the regulation army uniform but the buttons were taken off because they bore the insignia of the country he had disowned. He became known as 'plain buttons.' When present in any company of men on shipboard the men were prohibited to talk of him, prospects of return, politics, peace, war, letters or anything that would remind him of home. He was not permitted to go ashore, even in lands no way connected with the United States. He was never given an American newspaper. Even form the foreign papers given him the advertisements or stray paragraphs that alluded to the United States were cut out.

"He'd be reading something harmless when he'd come to cut-out space. Right in the midst of one of Napoleon's battles he would find a hole because on the back of the page would be an advertisement of a ship from New York or a scrap from the President's message. He literally became a man without a country like a child from its mother's arms.

"When he was an old man a friend was admitted to his stateroom. He found that in the privacy of his room he had made a little shrine, with the Stars and Stripes traced above and around a picture of Washington upon which he had painted a majestic eagle with lightnings flying from its beak, its feet clasping a globe, which its wings overshadowed.

"Poor old Nolan turned a sad smile and said: 'Here you see I have a country.' He pointed to the foot of the bed, where was a map of the United States drawn from memory. Quaint old names were on it with large letters for Indian Territory, Miss. Territory, Louisiana Territory. He had patched in Texas and shoved the western boundary away out into the Pacific. He had defined nothing in the shape of States.

"Turning to his friend Danforth he said: 'Danforth, I am dying. I cannot go home. Tell me something.' Danforth weakened and told him everything. Told him of Burr-Alexander Hamilton duel; told him of war of 1812; told him of Louisiana purchase; told him of California, Oregon, Washington gold excitement in 1849! told him of war with Mexico— of the Lewis and Clarke expedition; told him of the Union Pacific railway; told him of the firing on Fort Sumter; told him of Abraham Lincoln. A sweet smile covered his face and he went into the presence of God with a smile on his face. He said, 'Look into my Bible, Danforth, when I am gone.' They looked into the Bible where was a slip of paper marked: 'They desire a country, even a heavenly, wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God, for He hath prepared for them a city.'

"Note these facts about Phillip Nolan, the centre of this story. First Phillip Nolan was born a citizen of the United States. Second, he swore away his citizenship. Third, he became a man without a country. Some day in the light of these three facts I should like to write a companion story to the 'Man Without a Country,' and if I did I would call it 'The Man Without a Soul,' and I would build the story around these three facts:

"First—Man is born a citizen of two worlds. The world of the temporal and the world of the eternal—the world of the material and the world of the spiritual. Since man possesses double citizenship, first in this world, second, in the world to come, his every act polls a double suffrage. Every man faces the problem of properly rating his double citizenship. The average man looks after his citizenship in the material world fairly well, as it applies to the temporal, material, personal gratification. In the world of dust and dollars the average man lives most of his citizenship. The world of the material nobody disputes or doubts: it is too real. We walk on it, we ride on it, we swim in it, we climb it, we handle it, we mow it, we sit beneath its shade, we taste it, we see it, breathe it. The world of the material is real. Of course there are a few rosewater pink tea poets who dip their pens in midst and write nonsense, who say matter is nonexistent, an illusion of the motral mind. I always notice that even Christian Scientists are ready when the dinner bell rings.

"A man should look well after his citizenship in the world of the material. This is a good world. It is the best—I say it reverently—that even God could make. It is not to be despised and hurried through, and the man who never gets beyond his cook, his tailor, barber, club or limousine is nothing but a refined animal. There is the greater world of the spiritual, just as real as the world of the material. The man who ignores his citizenship in the world of the spiritual and spends all his time and energy and his citizenship in the world of the material is the consummate idiot and fool of the centuries.

"Second: A man may swear away his citizenship in the world of the spiritual—by one dramatic act as Nolan did, by his love of money, by his love of lust, by his unbelief, by allowing his spiritual nature to lie unused for so long that all the best in him is paralyzed, so that he has no thoughts of God, no prayer, no attendance upon religious duties, by not placing himself in an atmosphere to awaken the spiritual.

"Third: He becomes a man without a soul to all intents and purposes. Of course, he has a soul. I mean he has canceled his interests of citizenship in the world of the spiritual and the eternal. When a man cancels his citizenship in the world of the spiritual he lapses very near to the animal. The fact is, a man's soul is about the only thing that distinguishes him from the brute creation.

"Man is five-sided; physical, mental, emotional, esthetic and spiritual. The fact is you can find hints and glimmers of four of these in animals. It is the fifth which gives man his distinction.

"First: Physical. From the standpoint of physical, animal creation in particular excels man. The eagle can see farther, the deer can run faster, the rabbit and moose can hear better, the lion and the horse are more powerful. Man, of course, has a greater variety, better organization and better control of physical powers than any single animal, but in many points he is excelled by them.

"Second: Mental. We are coming to see that what we call instinct is an elementary and inferior form of thinking. Only a glimmer, of course, as compared to a full sunburst of man's intelligence, nevertheless a low form of thought, so the animal world has certain mental powers.

"Third: Emotional. No one who has heard the cow bellow for her calf, no one who has seen animals defend their young can doubt the existance of the emotional. No one who has seen the grief of the mother bird for her young can doubt the existence of the emotional in the breast of lower creation, and the emotion of some birds and animals should put us to shame by their constancy. Some animals mate for life—it is said when the dove's mate dies it will never take a second.

"Fourth. Esthetic. It may be doubted that there is a love of beauty in birds and animals. But since I have seen the conscious elation of the mocking bird was pouring liquid beauty from his throat. When the peacock struts across the barnyard spreading his tail into three feet of splendor, no one can tell me he didn't know it was spangled over with beauty.

"Fifth. Spiritual. If man was no more than the four things mentioned, the doctrine of evolution would look more reasonable; but here the similarity between man and animal stops. No animal has ever been found upon its knees in prayer. No animal has ever done anything that would even hint that it knew from whence it had come or whither it was going.

"Hear me, men. Have you never prayed? Have you never given serious concern to things spiritual? Have you never calculated the interests of your soul? Have you never let your thoughts play around the problem of the future? Have you never considered the problem of your eternal destiny? Have you never accepted Christ as your Saviour? Then you have never done anything but that may be within range of passibility of the animal creation.

"Whenever you cancel your citizenship in the world of spiritual you take the crown from your brow, you dash the scepter from your hand and slink back with the rest of the brutes.

"Christianity is the appeal for you to throttle the animal in you and give the angel a chance. It is the appeal for you to pray, to recognize that you are a citizen of two worlds, to prepare now for your citizenship in the world of the eternal by accepting Jesus Christ as your Saviour."

AUSTRIAN

Vienna, via London.—The following official statement was issued by the War Office:

"On the heights west of Labreozrev an attack by numerically superior forces was repulsed after a sanguinary battle with great loss to the enemy, several companies being annihilated.

'Repeated attempts by the Russians to capture vantage points among our positions, by means of surprise attacks delivered by forces outnumbering the defenders also failed. We captured 280 prisoners.

"At other points on the front nothing of importance has occurred."

"In the Carpathians and East Galicia there is no change. Near Oravozil we annihilated three companies of Germans who attacked us and, after a bayonet charge, took the surviving prisoners to the number of three officers and ninety-three men."

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

SUCH IS LIFE.

WHILE one-half, bejabers! toils steady and labors, the rest of the world lolls in ease. And when we feel happy, our neighbors are scrappy and do just about as they please. And, gosh! ain't it funny? Some people have money and others can't scare up a dime. Some mortals are lucky, while others, real plucky, lose out ev'ry dodgasted time. Some laugh long and loudly—some strut with mien proudly and others are chucking the bluff. And folks that are healthy, quite seldom are wealthy, and healthy folks lack the green stuff. If half the world knoweth not what this half doeth—a funny old world it is sure. It's full of the tellers, the crooks and the spoilers—the honest, the rich and the poor. Now, why should a favored old guy, money savored, loll 'round in a big limousine? And why should another, his poor luckless brother, clean streets for a small stack of green? And why should a poet, a poor nowise "know it," write verse for the price of a prune, while others will squander the coin as they wander, and live in perpetual June? It does seem unequal; but hark to the sequel—it's time that I finished this rhyme. One lives by his working—the other, his shirking, and thus will it be for all time.

The Item That Did Not Get Into the Paper

In the April American Magazine David Grayson, writing his story "Hempfield," goes on with his wonderful account of the "Hempfield Star" and its editors. Hempfield is a small town and the "Star" is a country weekly. One of the editors is Norton Carr, a youth from the city, who conceived the idea of printing the naked truth about things in the paper. Following is a paragraph he wrote about the village church service. It was the truth but it did not get into the paper.

"The usual forenoon service was held in the Congregational church on Sunday. Being a hot day, the Rev. Mr. Sargent wore his black alpaca coat, and preached earnestly for thirty minutes, his text being John x, 3. Miss Daisy Miller played a selection from Mozart, though the piano was unfortunately out of tune. There were in attendance fifteen women, mostly old; seven men, and four children, besides the choir. During the sermon old Mr. Johnson went to sleep and Mrs. Johnson ate four peppermints. Deacon Mitchell took up a collection of fifty-six cents, besides what was in the envelopes."

THE GIBBONEY BILL

D. Clarence Gibboney, lawyer for the law and order association of Philadelphia, and who has for years fought the saloons has recently introduced into the legislature a unique bill. The Gibboney bill, as it is known, provides for compensation to liquor dealers forced out of business.

Among the features was one which would automatically, upon the bill becoming law, reduce the number of saloons in Philadelphia from 1923 to approximately 1700. The Philadelphia courts would make this reduction and reimburse those who might be ruled out of business. Reimbursement would be made out of the $2,000,000 annually received by Philadelphia from liquor licenses. Similar provisions for automatic reductions would apply to Pittsburgh, Scranton and all cities of the third class.

The Gibboney bill proposes local option elections, with three-year intervals as the minimum, on petition of 20 per cent. of a county's electors. In wet counties refusal to renew any license is forbidden, except for proved violation of the law.

Licenses in first class and second class cities are not to exceed one per 1000 inhabitants, with one per 500 the ratio in other cities.

Compensation money is to come from liquor license income, plus 10 per cent of all other county revenues. The right of appeal is reserved for any liquor dealer who may think he isn't getting enough.

The Gibboney bill is compelling the admiration of both the "pros." and "antis" on the saloon question. It is the logical solving of a vexing question. The confiscation of the property owned by a concern whose business is legalized by Uncle Sam has never had the support of the fair minded populace. Mr. Gibboney is working to the end of a very vexing problem in a highly logical way.

REAL SALESMEN

There are peddlers, there are order-takers, there are traveling men and there are real salsmen. You can tell them by their enthusiasm.

The real secret of salesmanship is locked up in energy, and unlocked in enthusiasm.

No circumstances, no corporation, can hold a man back in selling, if he has force, courage. Give a man will power, a settled purpose, pluck, an overmastering energy, and barrels and barrels of enthusiasm, and he will sell.

From the physical strength we get the fire of enthusiasm, and when a salesman is filled with enthusiasm, when a salesman is charged with the electric current of enthusiasm, he does more than sell: he causes others in the organization to sell.

Enthusiasm will not let you stop to wonder and doubt, to hem and haw. It will cause you to light on a customer and close him up.

Enthusiasm is contagious; the customer catches it. Enthusiasm does not need a selling manual. Most of us are from the muddy river country, and all of us are willing to be shown by an enthusiast.

Enthusiasm instructs your disappointments to be game. It carries your calling through the triumphant arch. Enthusiasm is energy on fire.—Silent Partner.

MR. OSBORNE WILL NOT RESIGN

People who would regret the resignation of Thomas Mott Osborne as Warden of Sing Sing prison, as well as those who would rejoice to hear of it, can dismiss, in the one case their apprehension and in the other their expectations, for the recent reports, so industriously promulgated, of his wrecked health and the failure of his reforms, are alike without foundation in fact.

Like not a few of his fellow-citizens, in office and out, Mr. Osborne had, a while ago, a cold severe enough to be called la grippe, and it had its too familiar effects, but neither that nor his well-known repugance for performing, even by deputy, the grim work of public executioner has reduced him to the nervous wreck that has been described, and he is as little obliged as he is inclined to abandon a position, where, as he sincerely believes, he has an opportunity to perform an important social service. His antagonism to capital punishment has, indeed, been increased rather than diminished by his closer view of it as warden, and by the personal contact with the doomed men into which the position brought him, but presumably he realizes that he can now protest against it even more effectively than he could if he left the inevitable task to others, while by remaining where he is he assures for the great experiment in prison management which he started in Sing Sing the sympathetic attention and knowledge upon which its success of course depends.

The method of treating convicts introduced by him is still viewed with doubt, not only by those who for political or monetary reasons are eager for it to fail—who, because of that eagerness, have not hesitated to announce that it has already failed, which is about as far from the truth as any announcement could be. The honest doubters, however, have no desire for the restoration of old conditions which they know were scandalous and inhuman, and they would be sincerely glad if Mr. Osborne triumphantly demonstrated the possibility of changing something like a majority of his charges into tolerably good citizens. The doubters, as well as the sharers of his beliefs, are more than willing that he should give those beliefs a practical trial, long enough fully to test their merits, and they resent the underhand efforts that are making to discredit his activities.—Times, New York.

DRAMATIC NEWS

New York, March 20.—Charles Frohman and David Belasco have selected "A Celebrated Case" for the all-star revival they will make this spring. Otis Skinner, Nat Goodwin, and others of theatrical fame, will be in the cast.

Frohman delayed his trip to Europe in order to work with Belasco on the plot.

Knickerbocker theatre fans are boosting the new musical jumble, "Fads and Fancies," which opened there the other night, to the skies. The chorus, they say, is especially attractive, consisting largely of absolutely pretty girls.

Arnold Bennett's "Milestone" has moved a few blocks, from the Liberty theatre, where it enjoyed a run of seven months to the Standard.

They who say that New York is steeped in sin are drawing their own conclusions from the announcement that "Sinners" has been so successful that the engagement at the Brady playhouse has been extended to July 1

Opinions

Does Mr. Marshall Know Himself?

Mr. Thomas Riley Marshall, Vice President of the United States, is quoted as saying he will support no war movement by this country "unless the alien invader's foot is placed on our shores."

Justice to Mr. Marshall demands an expression of doubt whether he means what he says.

It may be, of course, that Mr. Marshall would withhold his support from a "war movement" by the United States against any European or Asiatic nation caught red-handed in the act of implanting the monarchical principle upon this hemisphere by crushing existing republics in Mexico, Central America, South America or Cuba, but a good many democrats in Indiana will hesitate to believe he would. It may be doubted, also, whether Mr. Marshall intends to advocate the doctrine that the American people should wait until "the alien's foot is on our shore" before making any attempt at national defense.

Exclusive rights to this particular programme of "watchful waiting" belong to Mr. Andrew Carnegie, who apparently sees no use for the American navy now that he has gone out of that business of supplying it with armor plate.—Hearld, N. Y.

Child Welfare

The child welfare meetings in this city during the past week have been very beneficial in bringing public attention to the statistics of child mortality, the unnecesarily large percentage of infant deaths and what has been accomplished by sanitary measures and milk inspection in the gradual reduction of that percentage. It was clearly shown that a large percentage of infant mortality was preventable and that indeed it had been reduced by preventive measures. Probably the best effect of these meetings, bringing the intelligence and experience of experts to the service of parents and philanthropic workers, has been the educational advantage. The lack of child care comes more from ignorance than it does from poverty; babies die in the homes of the well-to-do as well as in the tenement house or cottage. True, the well-to-do have the advantage of medical attendance, but the physician cannot do everything and the care of the child must mostly be left to the mother, who may not know how to take proper care, or to a nurse girl who is equally ignorant and more indifferent. Every mother wants to save her baby whether she is rich or poor and is willing to do anything to that end if she only knows how and knows what dangers are to be met. These talks were greatly enlightening. The sins of the parents were shown to be a great cause in infant mortality and the effect of the exposition in that direction ought to have some effect on growing manhood and womanhood expecting some time to be parents.

The object of the meetings on the part of the state board of health seems to be the establishment of child welfare stations. If that means new appropriations or an addition to the subscription lists that are already oppresive to the citizen of any city, it will have a doubtful reception, not that everybody is not interested in babies, but everywhere there seems to be an over-organization of work of this character until everyone, asked to take care of everyone else, is beginning to find it difficult to take care of themselves. We have in this city ten or twelve different organizations for doing good, that keeps subscription lists, tag days, entertaiment courses, pleas to buy tickets and all kinds of schemes for appealing to the public for support, until it is becoming a bit burdensome and apt to produce a reaction. This city already has a child welfare station in the Visiting Nurses' Association, which is the best and most efficient charity we have. If it needs enlargement and to be given more means and facilities for efficient work nearly everyone will agree to it. It goes into the homes of the igorant and teaches them how to live, cares for their babies and provides proper supplies for the babies where they are absent or cannot be secured except by charity. It has proved its worth and nobody begrudges any amount to such a beneficial charity. Possibly its activities could be well extended into the homes of many of the well-to-do, who, through-igornance, are letting babies die in the midst of plenty.

On the whole this child welfare movement is a good one, not so particularly as a charity as it is to increase the general intelligence and give the babies a chance in all kinds of homes. As before remarked, everyone wants to save their babies if they only know how. These lectures were valuable as showing them how, and such organizations as the Visiting Nurses' Association carry the intelligence into homes where it is most needed, but whose representatives are not likely to attend the lectures or have not the means to give the proper care. All these philanthropic movements, however, ought to be carefully guarded by not having a multiciplicity of them, making them a too great burden. The state's charities are taking the larger part of its revenues; they are putting it into bankruptcy. The sound in body and mind, the producers of taxes, are getting less attention than the diseased. There is a theory, indeed, whether good or bad, that these interfenees with the laws of nature which provide for the survival of the fittest are not improving the general physical and mental development of the race, but are weakening ratheer than strengthening causes, through providing for the survival of the unfit. However, the world has not yet become so overcrowded as to demand the application of that old Spartan rule. In the meantime everyone loves their babies and it is natural to take the best care of them possible. It is a matter of promoting intelligent care rather than one of charity.—Times, Watertown.

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

Woman suffrage goes to the voters in New York and New Jersey next fall. The legislatures of both states have passed bills giving women the right to watch at the polls.

What is this but a plain admission by these lawmaking bodies that women can't trust men to protect their interests at the polls?

* * *

Since the suffragists are called on to explain every flaw found in equal suffrage territory, they breathed a sigh of relief when they saw that the six states reported by the last Child Labor Bulletin as having no compulsory education as late as January 1, 1915, were none of them equal suffrage states.

And thesigh of satisfaction deepened as they recalled that, according to the Russel Sage Foundation Report on Education, equal suffrage Washington outranked all the rest.

* * *

CIVIC WORKER SAYS, "THINK!"

"An efficient Chamber of Commerce is a clearing house for advanced civic thought. Municipalities are attempting and doing a multitude of things unheard of by the past generation. Fundamental changes in government, alterations in schemes of taxation, city planning, welfare work by the community, educational advancement, and many other matters of lesser importance are in the air. None of these things can be intelligently decided without an open forum. Argument compels thought, and genuine, conscious, concentrated community-thought is a rare gem.

"In the National Cash Register factory in Dayton, Ohio, are placed hundreds of signs bearing the one word "THINK" in great, red letters. It is the first demand upon the employes in the morning and the last one at night. It might seem to be an unneecessary wall motto, but that one word marks the difference between dull routine, machine work and inspired, human activity. As soon as a man thinks he becomes creative, constructive, optimistic, earnest, and efficient."

"So the slogan of the new Chamber of Commerce might very well be "THINK". It is the business of a community to think out the big public questions that crowd upon each other for answer. It should be the arena of discussion. It should stimulate thought and crystalize thought into action.

"This latter service—this transformation of thoughts into deeds—this "getting a move on" is the distinction between the old order and the new in the field of Chamber of Commerce endeavor." A CIVIC WORKER.

"Taxpayer" Favors Combination Vehicle

Editor Evening Times:

In view of the large amount of talk at the present time relative to the equipment of the city's police force with motor vehicles, kindly allow me a little space in your valuable paper for a few remarks upon the subject.

Judging by the experiences with automobiles of different types, and by advice received from officials of other cities, it seems to me that a combination patrol and ambulance would be better suited to the needs of this city than the propositions that have been made. This is true both from a point of economy as well as efficiency.

Were the city to purchase a pleasure car for the use of the police department unjust criticism might be levelled at the officers. It is possible that the officers would be termed "joy riders," etc., and in addition, such equipment would eliminate the use of a vehicles that could be used as an ambulance. While the purchase price of a combination vehicle is slightly in adance of the single one, it costs no more to maintain the one than the other, hence, in the end the city would by buying a combination patrol wagon and ambulance exercise in the end greater economy. SUNDAY LEAPS UPON SPEAKER'S DESK IN CAPITAL OF NEW JERSEY

Trenton, N.J., March 19.—Speaker Godfrey, of the New Jersey State Assembly, will have to get himself a new marble desk to pound with his gavel if he doesn't want to keep the historic piece of legislative furniture "Billy" Sunday jumped upon today as he was telling this State's Senators and Assemblymen and about 2500 other citizens to "be strong" and "show themselves men."

For the first time, so far as is known an evangelist was preaching at a joint session of the legislative bodies of any one of the several States in the Union. He was the third man—the other two were ex-President Taft and Secretary of State Bryan—to be asked by New Jersey's lawmakers to address them in their official home. And he, "Billy" Sunday, erstwhile baseball player, was being hailed from the floor of the lower House as the foremost Christian worker in the world today.

He was talking to Governor Fielder sitting at his feet; talking to dozens of Senators and Assemblymen, their families and their friends; talking to every one who meant anything in the official and social life at Trenton. Before he'd said 10 words he was, in his own words, "tugging hard at their heart-strings." He was their friend and they knew it. Coldly critical before he started, they warmed to him and cheered and applauded him in honest-to-goodness tabernacle revival-crowd fashion.

Gets Floral Horseshoe

What's more, the New Jersey legislators gave him a big red-and-white rose horseshoe, framing the seal of the State of New Jersey. They did him signal honor by giving him a unaminous vote of their appreciation for "the honor done" them by his coming to address them. And they crowded after him as he rushed away from the State house on the banks of the Delaware.

They rushed with him straight into the arms of a crowd of more than 4000 Trenton men and women, waiting at the Capitol's steps to see "Billy" and perhaps hear a few words of his message. Fifty policemen shouldered a path for Sunday. They bowled over legislator and unnotable people doing it. They guarded the evangelist as though he were a piece of fragile china, and they would have carried him to his limousine if he hadn't broken away.

Up against a white stone pillar of the Capitol, he stood, his fur collar muffling his face, and his slouch hat down over his merry eyes. He waved his hand to the crowd. He liked the crowd and he hated to disappoint it, but he had to do it. "I'm sorry, folks," he shouted through trumpeted hands. "I'm sorry, but I can't speak to you more than to tell you how much I appreciate all this. God bless you and good by! But I'll know you better later. Just a year and I'll be with you in Trenton!"

They cheered him. Dozens of camera men, perched on electric light poles and marble porticos, snapped him, and he dived into his limousine, which, followed by cars filled with newspaper men, darted out of Trenton and whizzed away back to Philadelphia.

If there had only been sawdust and whitewash, and if the women had removed their hats, and if men didn't smoke in the legislative chambers here, the State House would have been a regular tabernacle today, for women came hours before Sunday and brought their knitting and their magazines and sat patiently waiting There was "Rodey" with his "Brighten the Corner"; and there was Mrs. Asher to help "Rodey" sing "Sweeter as the Years Roll By," and there was Ackley with a collapsible portable organ; and there was "Ma" Sunday to see that everything went right.

Sermons Combined

"Nothing like it ever happened before," said the dignified Senators. And they were right, very right, even down to Sunday's sermon, which was a combination of his "Show Thyself a Man" and "A Man or a Mutt, Dishwater or Gasoline; Heads or Tails." It was a pretty plain, epigrammatic talk, disregarding one thing only, the local option situation in New Jersey. The local option bill comes up before the Jersey Legislature Wednesday. Sunday hasn't a word to say on local option.

"You mustn't expect to tell you how to run the State of New Jersey," he said, and it was his very first sentence. "You can't clean [illegible] before I came and you'll be running it a long time after I'm gone. I don't know anything about political economy, so count me out on that. I'm just a simple, old-fashioned preacher, preaching the old-time religion that's warned the world for 2000 years. You know that; so here goes!"

Being on "old-time preacher" didn't prevent his livening his sermon with modern turns of expression, "slang" to be exact, that set his audience roaring. The first gale swept over the House when he said that Abraham could "stand up alongside any lickspittle, hog-jowled two by-four measly, miserly, modern, peanut-grafting politican and make him shrink like Jeykll in Ed Hyde's clothes.

"If you want to please God, be a man and not a mutt or a mollycoddle," he exclaimed. "Times like these demand strong men the lust of office cannot buy, the spoils of office cannot buy." Don't be a floater, a dead one. God wants men with something besides pink tea and ice water in their veins. Look up! The vulture never sees anything but the carrion, however high it flies, and the mocking bird would never learn to sing if it took lessons from the crow or hoot owl!"

Laughter and applause crackled from the front seats where sat the Senators, from the Assemblymen's desks, two or three men crowded at each one of them, from the galleries packed with men and women and from the rear of the chamber, jammed with standers. Sunday swung along at the old pace.

Politicians and Cribs

"Some politicians can't see any more in life than they can get out of the public crib. The old bachelor is sure he knows more about raising babies than Solomon. All the panhandler sees is the handout and the mooching after flapjacks. The plumber is happiest when it's 40 below and the undrtaker is happiest when hanging crepe on the doorknob. Don't be a man who is only a frame on which to hang clothes, a walking machine who ought to be arrested for being disguised as a man!"

They applauded, and again when he said: "There's too much veneer nowadays. What every State wants, what God wants, is men who are solid mahogany. There are too many so-called men who weigh no more for decency and good government than a hat rack. If all men lived right today no boys would go wromg tomorrow Live right and give the manhood of the muture a chance!"

He re-enacted the story of David and Goliath—Goliath killed by the stone from David's sling. Goliath was "the main cheese and the head works" and David asked, "Who's the guy?" Then: David soaked him in the coco between the lamps and Goliath went to the mat and took the count!" The Assembly chamber fairly howled with laughter as Sunday swung David's sling and said these words. Then he scored.

"You refined Senators and Representatives," he said, "you know what I'm talking about!" They applauded "That's dressing up the Old Testament in 20th century language," he said, "and it stands out clear as a cameo."

Then he made his sensation by jumping up on the Speaker's marble desk. He did it suddenly, dramatically. He had showed how the angels had clapped their hands when Abraham Lincoln, the studious backwoods boy, was discouraged and called to him, "Abe, don't cash in! Buck up!" Then, "One day the world knocked at Abe's door and the house fell to pieces and he stepped out and up!"

Sunday took one leap and landed upon the desk sacred to the Speaker's gavel. The audience gasped and then the hand clapping started.

A moment later he was through. "I thank you," he said, "for this delightful honor which was a new experience to me and is, I think, a new experience for you!" The palms got working and Assemblyman Charles H. Wolverton, of Camden, was moving the thanks of the legislators of New Jersey and gave Sunday the floral horseshoe with the words: "Sir, you have honored us by coming here. We are greatly honored at being addressed by the foremost Christian worker in the world of today."

It was almost too much for Sunday. He stammered; he could not express his thanks. He was "illiterate," but he did his best with "crude, jabbering jargon," and he was gone.

Just before Sunday started his sermon Governor Fielder, accompanied by Senator William T. Read, of Camden, and his secretary, L. Edward Hermann, came in. Sunday was the first man to stand. "Governor Fielder's fine," he said later. "I like his face a lot." The Rev. Dr. Harry J. Idbst, Assemblyman from Hunterdon, made the opening prayer and address. He prayed Sunday "would open hearts and inspire men to better things" in his legislative sermon, and he added: "He's doing more than 1000 ministers for man and for God."

Before the service "Rodey" had everyone singing "Brighten the Corner." He made Assemblymen and Senators sing certain phrases alone. The session was called to order by Speaker Godfrey and the rollcall showed that most all the Assemblymen were in their seats. The legislative committee that arranged Sunday's trip to Trenton had Robert Peacock, Burlington, for its chairman; its others members were Assemblymen Wolverton and Iobst.

HOOKWORM DISEASE IS PROBED IN TEXAS

Dallas, Texas, March 20.—A three years' fight against the hookworm disease is nearing completion today under the auspices of the State Hook-Worm Commission. During this period the Commission has examined conditions in an area of 35,000 square miles inhabited by 1,300,000 people. Miscroscopic examinations to the number of nearly 65,000 have been made and perhaps 25,000 treatments have been dispensed. Among children examined the number infected was over 35 per cent.

The hookworm disease is popularly known for its effects of laziness. Dr. O. H. Judkins of the State Hookworm Commission, who said it would take one or two generations to eradicate the disease in Texas, also declared:

"There is no doubt but what Texas suffers an economic loss every year because of this disease. For instance, if 1,000 heads of families in any given county are suffering from a disease that reduces their earning capacity from 10 to 25 per cent., it is not hard to see where the county and State are losing because of decreased production. It is easy to see, also, that the State is squandering money by employing teachers to teach children whose efficiency is reduced on an average 25 per cent."

Hookworm is common in warm places where the inhabitants go barefooted for any length of time. The commonest infection is through the soles of the feet. The worm is less than one inch in length and has the appearance of a bit of soiled coarse thread. The female lays thousands of eggs in the human intestinal tract. A certain cure is known to doctors.

A Popinjay

By MARGARET C. DEVEREAUX

Two men were standing on a street corner chatting. They were both crooks, though professionally they had no connection. A dapper young fellow who looked as if he had just come out of a bandbox passed them.

"Who is that guy?" asked one crook.

"Hist!" said the other, and waited till the young man had got beyond hearing; then he added: "That's a Pinkerton. I run across him once. He's the slickest in the business. I'd know him through any makeup."

"What's he doin' here?" asked the other nervously.

"I reckon he's workin' on the Tenth National bank business. I've been let into it that the best men in the Pinkerton service are on that case."

"Come off, Tom; you're coddin' me."

"You needn't believe me, Bill, if you don't want to. I've only given you what I think anyway."

The crook who had received this information tried to look unconcerned, but the other noticed that he was very much concerned. Bill walked away, and Tom looked after him with evident amusement. "What a sucker!" he said to himself. "I believe he had something to do with that bank job or he wouldn't have hit so suddent. He's a green one. The idea o' that popinjay bein' a detective!" And he smothered a laugh.

That same afternoon Bill met the popinjay again on the street. Bill looked at him so hard that he attracted the other's attention. This was probably the reason why he looked hard at Bill. At any rate Bill shuddered and passed on.

"He's on to me, sure!" he muttered. "I wonder if I could get out o' town without his knowin' it. I'm goin' to try a makeup."

When the 7 o'clock train pulled out of the station an elderly countryman with a pair of old fashioned green goggles on his nose sat in a seat by himself looking as if he had just come from the haying field. The door at the front end of the car opened, and who should come in but the popinjay. The only seat vacant was by the farmer, and the newcomer took it. The farmer's eyes being covered by the goggles and the lower part of his face by a long white beard, no one could see the [illegible]. Presently he pulled himself together and said in a low tone to the man beside him:

"What is there in it for me if I give up the stuff?"

"What stuff?" asked the other, surprised.

"Oh, I'm on to you same as you're on to me. No need o' fencin'. If I put you on to where the money is hid will you let me out o' the game?"

The stranger turned, looked the speaker full in the face, surprise, curiosity, craft and a number of other expressions struggling for the mastery. Finally he said:

"Can you turn it over without the matter leaking out?"

"I can."

"Do you want to go anywhere?"

"Reckon I'd like to try South America for a while."

"How much would you need?"

"How much can you let me have?"

"How much money have you to turn over?"

"All that was taken."

The popinjay was stalled. He didn't like to ask what he was supposed to know. He concluded to take a risk.

"Would five hundred do?"

"If you can't do any better."

"Very well. Where do we get off?"

"At Winchester."

There was no further conversation between the two till they reached Winchester, where they left the train together.

"Fare?" asked the popinjay as they stood on the platform.

"About two miles."

"Cab?"

A station cabman drove up; the two got in and were driven beyond the outskirts of the town, stopping at a small house in bad repair. A woman came to the door, followed by several children whose faces peered from behind her. The crook had thrown off his disguise while in the cab and appeared as himself. The woman looked from one man to the other anxiously. Bill said to her: "I've got tired o' this business. I'm goin' to give up the stuff and take you and the children to a new country to make a new beginnin'."

"I'm mighty glad o' that," gasped the woman. "I'm dyin' with this load on me."

Going into the house, Bill went to the cellar and brought up a package, which he handed to the popinjay, who opened it and, finding a number of bank bills, counted out a thousand dollars and handed it back to Bill.

"I thought you made it $500."

"I didn't know you were going to begin over with your wife and children. There's $500 for you and $500 for them. I'm no detective. You gave yourself away to me needlessly. Our meeting on the train was a coincidence. I'm a millionaire. I shall take this money to the bank and restore it, including what I've given you. If you need help at any time let me know."

He wrote his address on his card and was driven away, followed by many a "God bless you."

The next day a young man dressed in the height of fashion called at the Tenth National bank, asked for the president, told his story and left the amount of a recent loss by robbery.

HARLEY-DAVIDSON MOTOR IS NOISELESS

"During the thirteen years that we have been engaged in the manufacture of motorcycles we never have introduced a more important improvement than the three-speed," said Walter Davidson, president of the Harley-Davidson Motor Company, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. "I consider this the greatest achievement of William S. Harley, our chief engineer.

"The 1915 twin cylinder motor, rated at 11 horsepower, develops nearly double the horsepower of our 1914 motors. With the three-speed Harley-Davidson it is possible to go anywhere that traction can be obtained. On high speed the gear ratio is 3.89 to 1.

"The intermediate gear provides a ratio of 5.83 to 1 for traveling in congested traffic in the cities and over rough country roads. Every motorcyclist can appreciate the suitability of this gear, especially when the motorcycle is used with a sidecar.

"On low gear, 8.75 to 1, the 1915 three-speed will go anywhere. The 1915 machine climbs hills as steep as 60 per cent. There are 66 improvements on the thee-speed model alone. Great credit must be given to Mr. Harley for his invention of the first mechanical oil pump capable of feeding oil at all speeds, without any check or ball valves.

"All 1915 models are equipped with the well known Step-Starter which makes it possible to start the motor with both wheels on the ground and with either pedal. This device is positive in action. It starts the motor without fail.

"Noiselessness and cleanliness are two important features which have been kept constantly in mind by the Harley - Davidson engineers. The transmission is so quiet that it cannot be heard in ordinary street traffic. Considerable of the credit for the noiselessness of the 1915 Harley-Davidson motorcycle is due to the muffler of improved design."—adv.

ARGE CANAL WORK BEGINS

Beginning of the End Will Be Made Monday from Battle Island to Minetto

One of the busiest places in or around Fulton is right down beneath the lower bridge, on the flat belonging to H. P. Burgard, barge canal contractor, for on Monday morning the big dredge Pathfinder will be taken in tow by the tug John Mahar, with the three dump scows, to be towed down below Battle Island where the real work of the season will commence.

During the last month a score of skilled mechanics have been overhauling and painting the entire fleet of boats. The dredge though worked hard for four seasons, is in good condition under a coat of green paint and it can be said, that owing to the care and attention given this immense mass of machinery very few repairs have been made necessary aside from a thorough cleaning and the substitution of a few new planks about the spuds. Yesterday the big bucket with its new teeth was swung to the dipper arm and all the cables were tested for weak spots.

The tug John Mahar will have steam up tomorrow and it is possible the boat may have a trial run down the river to get her machinery in good working order; boiler cleaning and a few minor repairs to the smoke stack comprised all the attention required.

On Monday Superintendent W. C. Fisher will start two shifts and it is expected this plan will be continued until the end of the season when it is expected the entire contract will be completed. The estimated amount of dredging yet to be done lies almost entirely between Battle Island and Minetto, where the rock bottom of the river has already been loosened by blasting, thus making the dredging work comparatively easy. There remains, it is said, about 75,000 cubic yards yet to be excavated between those points, after which the dredge will be passed through the Minetto lock and work will begin on removing those portions of the old cofferdam still remaining in the channel. When this work is done the dredge and tug will be sold and the work of H. P. Burgard on Contract No. 37 officially closed.

The Bradley work at Minetto will be completed by the time the dredging force reaches Minetto; some riprapeing and a portion of the powerhouse remains unfinished and these, it is estimated, will be finished by July 1st. At Oswego the dam and lock are finished; the electrical machinery for operating the lock has just arrived and will be placed at once. Two months spent in back filling between the banks and the walls of the lock will complete this work, and there will remain the work of removing the plant from along the whole line. The general impression among the contractor's forces is that by October 1 all work will be brought to a close.

Following are the replies received to date by the New Chamber of Commerce to a question blank sent out during the week.

WHAT IN YOUR OPINION IS THE THING OF FIRST IMPORTANCE THAT SHOULD BE UNDERTAKEN BY THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE TO IMPROVE THE TRADE CONDITIONS AND OPPORTUNITIES IN YOUR OWN LINE OF BUSINESS?

THE ANSWERS:

1. Insist that a city bacteriologist be appointed.
2. That an up-to-date outfit be installed in the City Hospital.
3. Promote a more thorough understanding between the people and the public utilities that they may be regarded as assets of the city, rather than parasites as they are often regarded. I ask this—not because I consider it the most important but rather the most likely to be overlooked.
4. Give us a new city market.
5. The kind of advertising and publicity that will teach our people to "Trade at home."
6. Bring new industries here.
   Advertise the advantages of Fulton; lower the taxes.
7. My opinion is more work for the laboring people, that is the Americans and not the foreigners. Get in closer touch with the farming interests hereabouts.
8. To see that the streets are properly marked so that strangers can find a street without a search warrant.
   To have the grocer stop handling out of town bread. I think if someone would see them that is not interested in baking business they would all agree not to handle it. These out of town bakers are not making it pay; they do not hold one-tenth of the trade, but what they do hold is taking just that much out of Fulton.
9. Bring more industries to Fulton.
   Inspire a feeling of confidence among local merchants in their own goods. Persuade them to enter into active competition with Syracuse stores. Make it easier and cheaper for persons to shop in Fulton than in Syracuse, New York or by mail.

WHAT AS A CITIZEN DO YOU BELIEVE THAT THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE SHOULD FIRST UNDERTAKE FOR THE GOOD OF THE CITY AT LARGE?

THE ANSWERS:

1. Insist that the City purchase 10 acres of the Tilden farm about springs three and four, remove buildings from same and reforest the same ten acres.
2. Better living conditions and the building up of a desire of outside people to "spend a day in our town" rather than a desire of our own people to get out of town "for one day anyway."
3. Establish a civic center so that people in Fulton and those from the rural communities outside of Fulton may meet on a common ground for business and recreation.
4. Secure a Commission form of Government for our City; see that we have a 6-foot sidewalk on west side of South 1st st. from new post office to Rochester st.
5. Advertise the advantages of Fulton.
6. Buy a site and give it to some good industry that would employ several hundred men.
7. Commission form of government.
8. Secure the co-operation of every citizen in each undertaking no matter what it is. Attempt to create such a feeling of optimism among Fulton residents that they will make enough noise "talking Fulton" to compel the rest of the world to hear. Advertise Fulton and keep on advertising it.

TWO SLIGHT BLAZES YESTERDAY EVENING

A fire alarm was sounded at 6 p.m. yesterday from North 1st st. Smoke was discovered issuing from the rag room in the rear of the Volney Paper Co.'s plant. The department responded with its usual promptness and within twenty minutes the blaze which had started in a rag pile near the western end of the mill was extinguished.

An alarm was again rung in at 8 p.m. C. Case, who lives near the canning factory in Phillips st., discovered smoke issuing from one of the company's barns and immediately sent in the alarm. When the fire laddies arrived they found a brick little blaze had started in a rubbish pile near one of the company's barns and the flames were already licking the side of the building. The fire was soon extinguished and no damage was done.

MISS HARRINGTON GOES WEST TO GET FORTUNE

Miss Mildred J. Harrington of this city, will leave in the very near future for Idaho, where she will claim a sum of money of an indefinite amount. This sum of money was left to the fortunate young lady by an uncle who died recently. The uncle, Charles Graham, was a ranchman and landowner. He left a will in which his entire fortune is to be inherited by Miss Harrington, who is popular in this city.

MILK DEALERS MUST APPLY FOR PERMITS

Health Officer Whitaker announces that dealers in milk and cream have until March 31 to comply with the law relative to securing permission to ply their trade.

Between the present date and the end of the month Dr. Witaker will make an inspection of dairies from whence comes the supply of milk and cream sold by Fulton's dealers, therefore the urgency of the matter of getting permission to deal in milk, etc.

Willis Morin was guest of honor at the oyster supper given by the Boy Scouts of the Baptist church. Scoutcraft was the subject of Commissioner Morin's talk.

SPARK PLUG CO. INCREASE FORCE

Three Big Orders Just Received Necessitate Enlarging of the Working Force

With the entire top floor of the Hunter Arms building given over to the John MacrGegor Co., Inc., manufacturers of the Viking spark plug, an atmosphere of the old time hustling pervades the whole building. The MacGregor Co., which has for its President, John MacGregor, of Boston, and William D. Carr, of Fulton, as its secretary was formed sometime ago for the manufacturing of a spark plug which is a clever invention and should be a great seller to those in the gasolene engine trade.

One of the officers of the company stated that the three orders just received would keep the present force busy over a year, but in anticipation of future ordrs the force would be greatly increased and the present orders rushed to completion. At present all of the work in connection with the making of these spark plugs is not being done in the shops of the company, but as the required machinery arrives and is installed more help will be added andthe entire work from casting to finishing will be done at the company's works in Fulton.

This new industry opening up in Fulton now brings cheerful news to those who realize what great financial benefits will be realized not only from the employment of many skilled mechanics on full time, but also from the extensive advertising plan the MacGregor Co. have in contemplation and which will reach every section of the United States.

MR. CULLEN DEPLORES SOME IRISHMEN

Francis E. Cullen of Oswego spoke in Auburn St. Patrick's day and The Advertiser of that city quotes him as follows:

"It is a great and glorious thing to be born of Irish blood, but it is a wise thing to forget it once in a while according to Francis E. Cullen, of Oswego, in his address at the St. Patrick's day celebration given by the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick in the Palm Room of the Osborne House last evening.

"No greater obstacle to the success of the Irish race or greater nuisance exists, he declared, than the professional Irishman. It has been the custom to gather year after year in mournful groups and then relate the sorrows and clouds of the Emerald Isle, the speaker said. He said he desired to bring to the attention of his audience that it was now time for the Irishman to wake up and become alive to the opportunities of the present and future.

"Mr. Cullen told how at present there were 500,000 Irishmen in the trenches fighting for England and said these men were there at the advice of the Irish leaders. The leaders he claimed were supporting England in order that Irish interests might be furthered. He claimed Ireland's future government was linked with that of England.

"'It behooves the Irishmen to think a little less of the doleful past and realize the ever present and practical opportunities as it faces him today," the speaker said. "The time has come for the Irishman to be governed more by his head than his heart and be a little less sentimental. I do not say you should forget the history, or pay less attention to the songs and poetry, but urge you to grasp the opportunities of the present."

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, March 20.—In order to finally determine the attitude of the Assembly upon the Hinman bill, which seeks to reorganize the State tax commission, the Assembly is to caucus on Monday night.

All sorts of predicitions are being made relative to the fate of the measure, but it is safe to say that the bill will be passed in the form desired by Governor Whitman, who has taken a most decided stand upon the necessity of permitting the new tax commission, when appointed, to levy the tax upon corporations instead of the State comptroller.

While there has been delay and argument attending many of the big bills of the session, the most serious breach in the ranks of the Republican members has been caused by the disagreement which has arisen because it has been deemed fit to take away from the comptroller some of the powers which he has long enjoyed. Some of the legislators have come to the aid of Comptroller Eugene M. Travis and some have allied around Governor Whitman. The Whitman forces seem to be the most numerous and they are likely to win the fight.

It is said that no lobby has ever been maintained which has fought harder to prevent a bill from passing than the State comptroller and his sympathizers. A powerful factor in legislative matters is the comptroller who served two terms as a senator and is thoroughly familiar with the ways of legislation and the procedure which may obstruct the way of a bill.

The fight between the governor and the comptroller is a fair one both believe, but the administration has not been benefited, many Republicans believe. The Democrats delight in the tangle and their votes may be needed to pass the bill next week.

The members from up-State were opposed to many provisions of the original draft of the bill. They did not take kindly to the section which gave the tax commissioners power to assess over the heads of their local assessors. So loud were their protests that this clause was eliminated.

It is known that the provision taking away from the comptroller his corporation assessing power is the one thing that Governor Whitman is determined to see enacted into law and if his desire does not prevail in this respect he will be considerably disappointed. Upon many an occasion he has declared his position and maintained that the amendment he wishes is a proper one.

There appears to be real bitterness behind the disagreement over the tax reorganization bill and many of the members of the legislature are in a quandary. The caucus, however will decide their attitude.

Although the amendments to the Workmen's Compensation bill were long in being threshed out and there were wire pulling charges made, the deliberations which that measure caused did not mean as much to the party in power as the time and about to be disposed of by the lower house.

The majority of the up-State members of the Assembly are behind Governor Whitman, while certain of the members of the lower house from other sections are said to be favorable to the ideas of Comptroller Travis and are all but convinced that the ideas of the executive should not prevail.

With the tax commission reorganization bill passed, the last important stumbling block which has been impeding final adjournment will have been removed.

A GRANBY MAN SAYS MORE SNOW

Onions Tell Tale; Seer's Peculiarity of Raiment Dates from Incident in Youth

A man in South Granby sat on a heap of atrophied onions in his little garden, yesterday, and squinted at the sky. There was a twinkle in his bright eyes, for he had just been asked if he did not wish to retract or modify his prediction that there will be three more snowstorms "ere the winter ends".

"Curiousest thing ever," he said, "how these cuffs on my overalls get filled with earth. I guess I lose two hours a day in my experimental work cleaning them and sifting and inspecting what I find there."

The reporter, who had forgotten the pathway and in consequence literally had to fight his way through the barrier of underbrush to the garden, nodded politely and repeated his query about the three snowstorms. The onion raiser looked up at the sky again and smiled.

"How should I know?" he remarked, with thinly veiled sarcasm. "I'm goosebone, and your paid weatherman says nobody but a groundhog and goosebone prophets can tell whether it's going to snow any more. Now, I told you once there'd be three more snowstorms ere the winter ends."

Onions' Telltale Bristles

The old man suddenly dived forward like a trained acrobat and sprawled on the ground. He whipped out a magnifying glass with one hand and an electric torch with the other. He scraped away some earth and then, training one eye and squinted with the other at the vegetable through the glass.

"Aha!" he said. "The onion quivers." The onion raiser arose and resumed digging the earth out of his overalls cuffs. He started to talk as though to himself, and by bending close the reporter caught the following:

"The bristles are waving furiously. Aha! It is the connecting link between vegetable and animal life, but I shall not reveal the secret. Why Curiousest thing ever," he resumed, "how these cuffs get filled with earth."

"Why don't you stop wearing them?" he was asked.

The Cuffed Prophet

The weather prophet drew himself up majestically to his full 5 feet 4 inches.

"Young man," he said, glaring through the inverted magnifying glass, "as I see you now you ar'nt as big as my thumb. Why should I wear cuffs. I am entitled to my little idiosyncrasies. In the great world outside my garden of onions men wear all manner of foolish things and so do the women, and also, I am told, the women powder their faces. All right, let them, but I shall wear cuffs on my overalls.

"Why?" he was asked.

"Once upon a time," he said, "when I was a little boy, I received a $5 gold-piece for a Christmas gift. There was a hole in my pocket and the coin disappeared. I mourned it for two weeks. Then one day as I was passing a baker's window I suddenly developed an overpowering appetite for chocolate eclair, but, alas, I had no money, so I sat down on the curb stone to weep. Unconsciously I ran my hand through the cuffs of my trousers, and there was the $5 gold piece. I wear them for their utility. They save money.

"But you mind what I say, young man, you can laugh at your paid weather prophet, for there'll be three more snowstorms ere the winter ends."

War: Pathos and Humor

Paris, (by mail to New York) March 3.—Should France issue victorious from the present war, her success will have been due, more than any one other thing, to her "Soixante-quinze"—her famous quick fire, explosive shell 75 milimeter cannon.

This fact is now incontestably recognized in technical military circles the world over. The wonderful superiority of the instrument of destruction over all rivals was first demonstrated in the two recent Balkan wars. Used by most of the Balkan states it wrought terrible destruction against the Turks equipped with artillery of German manufacture. If the present war has manifested itself every day for the past seven months that the "Soixante-quinze" has been elevated in the French public mind to a place of worship almost alongside that accorded to Joan d' Arc.

Taking advantage of this wave of popularity—if not of actual worship—the government has just made public for the first time a little of the history of how the secret of the discovery and development of this most perfected instrument of modern warfare—and also the most deadly—was kept for years from the world at large. It has about it elements of secrecy and mystery that alone would make successful many a novel or play.

It was in 1897, that the highest technical and military men of France finally decided that all of the genius of the country should be employed in perfecting the "Soixante-quinze." Experiments had already been in progress for seven years and had reached a point where it was certain that the model then decided upon offered greater opportunities for development than any other.

At once, however, those in on the secret were confronted with the problem of being able to secure the immense appropriations necessary without arousing the suspicion of rival military countries which would at once exhaust every possible resource of espionage to secure the secrets of the gun. Any debate in parliament or even the appearance in the list of appropriation of large sums for the specific purpose of perfecting the "Soixante-quinze" would have tipped off the entire world. The money needed was not only for the actual perfecting of the new gun but for the creating of all the special machinery necessary for its construction in great numbers.

So important was secrecy considered that it was decided not only must the 900 members of the Chamber of Deputies be kept from knowing that actual use to which the appropriaitons were to be put, but even the thirty members of the commission which make up the annual budget of government expenses could not be allowed to share the secret. The first appropriation asked fater the "Soixante-quinze" model had been selected was for $6,000,000.

Under the circumstances M. Maline, who was then premier together and Minister of Finances Cochery and Minister of War Billot appealed to the president of the republic, M. Feliz Faure. Although the latter had no authority in the matter, he considered the importance of the secret such, that he loaned all of the power and influence of his office to its maintenance.

The president and the three ministers then called in the president of the budget commission, M. Paul Delombre and the secretary Camille Krantz. They told these two that the future of France depended on the budget commission making the appropriations desired without even asking to what end they were to be spent. The president and secretary of the commission alone here told the real secret of the "Soixante-quinze" and they pledged their co-operation.

They induced the budget commission to make the initial appropriation of $6,000,000 under a title that would give no indication of the real scope. This item still had to be sanctioned by parliament, but the budget commission, the president of the republic and the three ministers manouvered in such a way, that the item was passed without debate and $6,000,000 was appropriated for the perfecting and manufacture of cannon, the existence of which had not been even dreamed of by a single one of the 900 deputies who passed the appropriation.

Since then, similar tactics have been followed at every annual session of parliament. Without even daring to share the secret even with the members of parliament the higher governmental authorities of France continue the securing of appropriations under various titles not only until the perfection of the gun and its manufacture in huge numbers was insured, but until France was equipped with the gigantic foundaries and special machinery to meet any emergency—such as the present which might arise.

That eventually the secret leaked out and the Germans learned it, is not admitted to be a fact. But before that time, the secrecy and mystery in which it was shrouded by a half dozen of the highest men of France, has permitted of its development to a degree of perfection which the Germans are still a long ways from having been able to attain. And in the meantime, the gun is admitted already to have saved France and on its continued efficacy all France is counting for the return to the homeland of Alsace and Lorraine and complete ultimate victory in the present war.

VIENNESE UNABLE TO GET BREAD; MEAT IS DEARER

Venice, via London, March 19.—Reports received in Venice from Vienne say that some thousands of the population of the Austrian capital were unable to obtain bread last Tuesday, the new decree restricting production by one-fourth having caused a general dislocation of the entire baking trade. Stocks of flour are declared to have run so low that in many places bakers found it impossible to make bread, even with the less quantity prescribed by the decree.

The supplies of bread made were everywhere speedily sold out, especially in the suburbs, and late customers, unable to obtain their portions, are said to have stormed the bakeshops in several districts. The authorities are reported to have endeavored to calm the people by declaring that the bread shortage was only temporary. Bread and flour tickets will be issued in Vienna, and in all towns in Austria, with a population of more than five thousand, beginning April 4.

Cattle market receipts, it is reported, have dropped off one-fourth in comparison with the figures of last week, and prices of meat have advanced from two to four cents a pound.

It is stated that the reprisals undertaken by Great Britain and France against Austria and Germany have been reflected by a twenty per cent. rise in the price of coffee, the stocks of which are reported to be very short.

Reports also have it that the question of the milk supply in Vienna is acute and that the authorities purpose restricting the sale to a daily allowance per capita through the issue of milk tickets.

The Vienna authorities have issued an emphatic warning against the unemployed in the provinces coming into the capital, on the ground that the rsecources of the citizens already are being taxed, an dthat it will be impossible to support any additional persons.

THE NEW STATE CONSTITUTION—6.

Governors to Recommend Judges For Election.

A few months ago a judge named Willett and a boss named Cassidy entered Sing Sing, to atone for the purchase and sale of a judicial nomination. The revelations of that case caused more dismay up-state than in New York City for a more wholesome tradition surrounds the judiciary in the rural sections and smaller cities of the state than in the metropolis. Few people in New York City were really surprised at the disclosures of that case. It supplied simply one confirmation of widespread suspicion. It would take blind faith indeed to believe that that was the only instance in recent times where the judicial nominations in New York state have been bought and sold!

Election of judges in this state, instead of keeping the bench in accord with the sentiment of the day has too often resulted rather in keeping the bench in accord with the sentiment of political bosses and the reactionary powers behind them. The alliance of judges with political machines is demonstrable by the cordial manner in which so many judges give preference to party machine hacks in assigning the referee and condemnation jobs. The custom of trading nominees between the parties, the Republicans selecting one and letting the Democrats have the other has an altruistic look until it is realized that it guarantees the election of the man thus named and results in what is really an appointive system. The appointing power, however, being some unknown influence obscurely lodged in the intricacies of pre-nomination intrigue. It is not a non-partisan arrangement; it is bi-partisan. It is not election, it is appointment. Our judiciary is appointive now and it does not justify the system to demonstrate that the up-state local machines have the habit of appointing judges who are not quite as easy to criticise those appointed by the New York City machine.

Our bench is under the wide-spread suspicion that corruption and private organized influence is all too common in the processes of nomination.

Clear Away Suspicions.

That suspicion must be cleared away The environment of our judicial nominations must be such that our judiciary will have the trust and confidence of the people of the state everywhere. By some method an element of conspicuous responsibility must be injected into the process of selecting judges.

At the Constitutional Convention there will be probably a strong effort made on the part of the Bar to secure a straight appointive judiciary. We live under an appointive federal judiciary without resentment or difficulty, and the federal judges have a better standing than our elective judges in spite of the larger salaries that we pay. In nine states, including our neighbors New Jersey and Massachusetts, the judiciary is appointive and the results are considered excellent. The decisions of the Massachusetts court in particular carry unusual weight and a lawyer in search for a precedent will always try to find a Massachusetts decision to support his contention, on account of the high respect in which the bench of that state is universally held.

These appointive judiciaries are fully as progressive and up to the spirit of the times in their decisions as the elective judiciaries. It was our elective Court of Appeals, for instance, that upset the Workman's Compensation Act in the famous Ives case, and it was an appointive Federal Court that sustained the principle. Although it is a rather sweeping statement, it is probably fair to say that in the states which have appointive judiciary there is no disposition to change to the elective system, while in the states having elective system there is considerable unrest.

Let Governor Nominate Judges.

The plan which has the greatest hope of success in the coming Convention is to impose upon the Governor the duty of making a recommendation to the people of a nominee for each judicial vacancy eight weeks before the election. During the next four weeks if anybody is dissatisfied with the recommendation of the Governor, counter nominations may be made by petition. The names of all nominees then appear on separate sections of the ballot without partisan label, except that opposite the name of each of the Governor's nominees shall be the words "Recommended by the Governor."

The expectation is that in most cases the Governor's selection will be at least good enough to escape serious criticism and will go through to a unanimous election unopposed, since a rival would not merely have to incur the labor of getting up his petition but must also bear the burden of proof. The prestige of the Governor's backing would be of benefit to his nominee and thus discourage unreasonable opposition. Thus would be created a judiciary that is ordinarily appointive but subject to challenge and confirmation or rejection by the people on the occasion.

[This is the sixth of a series of nine articles prepared jointly by the Municipal Government Association, the County Government Association and the New York Short Ballot Organization on questions to come before the Constitutional Convention.]

Luxurious Military Aeroplanes.

The German arrow type of flying machine can compare with nothing so much as an automobile de luxe, says an English journal. It has the strength, the perfection, the reliability, the safety of a superb motorcar. And it has the luxury. On the dashboard before the pilot, in addition to his control gears, there is a nest of drawers containing, among other things, a vacuum flask, chocolate cubes wrapped against the damp in tin foil, a small bottle of brandy in case the aviator should become faint, a petrol sponge for wiping the goggles, a revolver holder, a dispatch case with sharpened pencils of different colors, so that the dispositions of the enemy's troops can be more adequately marked, a map board and maps. Moreover, the exhaust pipe of the engine passes under the floor boards, so that the pilot, who must constantly keep his feet at an angle on the pedals, may have them warmed throughout the flight. The flier, too, sits in a comfortably upholstered club chair.

First Balloon Ascension In America.

The first balloon ascension in America took place in Philadelphia on Jan. 9, 1793. The aeronaut was a Frenchman named Blanchard. He secured the yard of the Walnut street prison as the place from which to make the ascent. Among the many distinguished persons present was George Washington, then president of the United States. The start was made 10:05 o'clock and the balloon began to ascend. Blanchard waved the United States flag and the tricolor of France. The voyage lasted forty-six minutes, during which the balloon traveled fifteen miles, descending a little to the eastward of Cooper's Ferry, N. J. Blanchard returned to the city about 6:30 in the evening, and immediately paid his respects to President Washington. Following this ascension, during the year he made a number of others, but owing to lack of public support and insufficient funds of his own, he returned to France sadly disappointed at his success in America.—Philadelphia Press.

A Knight of the Garter.

A knight of the Garter dressed in the regalia is an imposing sight. He wears a blue velvet mantle with a star embroidered on the left breast. His trunk hose, stockings and shoes are white, his hood and surcoat crimson. The garter, of dark blue velvet edged with gold and bearing the motto "Honi soit qui mal y pensé" ("Evil to him who evil thinks"), also in gold, is buckled about the left leg below the knee. The heavy golden collar consists of twenty-six pieces, each in the form of a garter, bearing the motto, and from it hangs the "St. George," a badge which represents St. George on horseback encountering the dragon. The "lesser George" is a smaller badge attached to a blue ribbon worn over the left shoulder. The star of the order consists of eight points, within which is the cross of St. George, encircled by the garter.

Poor Gas.

Some men were riding in the smoker end of a Pullman car recently when one of them referred in a rather uncomplimentary way to the gas supply that was dished up in his home town.

"Yours may be bad enough," reflectively commented a party named Jones, "but I want to say right here that we have the worst gas of any town in the United States."

"That is saying a whole lot," returned the first speaker. "Do you really mean it?"

"You just bet a hundred that I mean it!" was the vigorous rejoinder of Jones. "Every morning when we go to cook breakfast we have to pour kerosene on the gas to start the fire in the gas stove."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

A Tongue Twister.

Do you read by sight or sound? Do you skim the sense or pronounce the words as you go? Inaudibly, but consciously? There are many readers who read by the ear, and when this writer had written the sentence about Wick (there was an election there)—"Wick is rich in Pictish relics"—he leaned back and tried to whisper it, thinking of the next. "Wick is rich in Pictish relics." Say it three times quickly.—London Mail.

Limited Popularity.

"Is Jones a popular fellow?" "Well, he is quite a favorite with himself."—Chicago Herald.

About Sports Generally

New York, March 20.—New Yorkers who play the races telephoned their bets to police headquarters the other day and were sore birds when the ponies they picked as winners failed to fatten their bank rolls.

In its crusade against betting the police department has gone in the poolroom business—at least that's the way the betters have it doped. A pair of detectives from headquarters sat at phones in an office in William street, got all the information from betting headquarters and received about fifty bets from clients who stand well enough to bet "markers."

Some of these bets were on winners, and it was the howl brought out by the lucky ones which brought out true facts. They are calling the cops welchers.

When the day's races ended the police had collected all the information they wanted. The regular poolrooms are down on the police lists and raids galore were in prospect.

A few weeks back it looked like efforts to interest women in boxing hereabouts had failed. But the other night, when 200 of the feminine fans gathered at Sixty-nine Regiment armory, to witness a boxing tournament in aid of the city's poor, pessimists changed their spiel and agreed that beskirted ringside bugs will be able to master the game pretty soon. The tournament was for charity, and that brought a lot of women who otherwise would not have attended, but the simon-pure boxing microbe stung some of the girls, at that.

Cleveland, O., March 20.—Johnny Kilbane, featherweight champion of the world, hopes to become a champion violinist. Johnny has ad the bug for some time, but since dfeating Abe Attell in 1912 he has been so busy he gave up his violin lessons. Recently he has revived his musical ambition, his friends here delcare. He hopes to be world's champion Irish violinist. He's no Ysays or Kubelik—yet—but he's getting along.

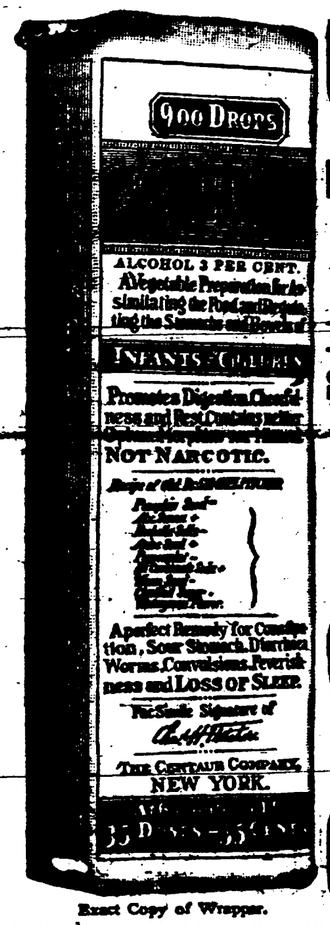
PRINCETON ALUMNI TO MEET

Pittsburgh, March 20.—Princeton Alumni to the number of 600 will gather at the Hotel Shenley tonight for the annual dinner of their association. Assistant Secretary of War Breckenridge and Coach John Rush of Princeton, will be the principal speakers.

WRESTLING PRELIMINARIES

New York, March 20.—Eastern tryouts for Panama Exposition wrestling championships were to be held here today. Eastern athletic associations will send twelve men to the coast.

Trenton, N. J., March 20.—Yale wrestlers are to meet Princeton mat artists tonight.



HERE'S A CHANCE TO KICK WHEN COOKING IS BAD

St. Paul, Minn., March 20.—For years Rep. L. A. Lydiard ate in alleged boarding houses of Minnesota and suffered. Then he began to ascend the social scale and finally became elected representative. One of the first official acts was to introduce a bill which will force cooks in boarding houses and restaurants to pass an examination and secure a license. Cooks not having the official document may be prosecuted for malpractice. Being drunk for more than six continuous months is sufficient ground for revokin gthe license. Persons having a grevience against any cook may lay it before the board, which has authority to call the alleged culinary offender before it, and if the allegations of the boarder and proved, the cook's license may be revoked.

PENNSYLVANIA BUILDING AT 'FRISCO DEDICATED

San Francisco, March 20.—With former Governor John K. Tener, president of the National League, acting as orator and master of ceremonies, the Pennsylvania State building on the Panama-Pacific Exposition grounds was dedicated here today.

The most formal event to take place at the Pennsylvania building will be held on September 4, the anniversary of the first meeting of the Cincinnati Congress. For that occasion Governor Braumbaugh and other State dignataries will he present.

Handy Radiator Shelf For the Accommodation of House Plants

RADIATOR PLANT SHELF.

IT is often a problem what to do with the ferns or other tropical plants which the flower lover must keep in the living room over winter. A hint for solving this question in a way to economize space and insure an even temperature to the plants may be gained from the picture. A shelf is adjusted over the radiator, and the plants are placed on the shelf. If care is taken that they have the proper amount of moisture at all times they will flourish. At night they may be covered if the heat in the radiator is allowed to go down. The shelf may be made as ornamental as you wish.

For the Children

Princess Mary, Daughter of King George of England.

© by American Press Association.

Since the European war broke out Princess Mary of England has been untiring in her efforts to aid the soldiers in France and their dependents at home. She was largely instrumental in gathering a fund before the holidays to purchase comforts for the men on the fighting line. Princess Mary, or May, as her brothers call her, is the pet of the royal family of England, although no longer a little girl. She will be eighteen next April and, of course, is quite grown up. The princess is the only daughter of King George V. and Queen Mary and has been brought up in quite an old fashioned way. She was taught to sew and is said to be an expert at embroidery. She has also studied the preparation of food and during her vacations at Sandringham was initiated into the art of making cheese and other dairy products. Quite unusual employments for a royal princess. But that is her mother's idea of bringing up a girl.

About Mythology.

In very ancient times the people believed in many gods. Jupiter was the king of all the gods, but he was very human. He had a wife, Juno by name, and they had a son called Vulcan. Vulcan was very strong, and he was the blacksmith of the gods.

It is said that when he was a child he displeased his father, and Jupiter in his anger hurled him from Mount Olympus. This fall caused him to be lame, but he grew to be large and powerful. He forged thunderbolts for his father, and he built the magnificent palaces in which the gods lived on Olympus. For his mother, Juno, he built a golden throne and for the sun god, Apollo, he made a golden chariot, and all his works were very beautiful. Vulcan had servants who were called Cyclops. They were queer looking giants, each with but one eye, placed in the middle of his forehead.

Now, whenever you see a picture or statue of Vulcan you see him with his tools about him, standing at his anvil, making a thunderbolt. He has muscular limbs and long hair and beard. Vulcan married Venus.

Venus was the goddess of beauty, and their child was Cupid, the god of love. For Venus, his wife, he wrought a delicate girdle which contained this magic—whoever wore it inspired love in all she met. Venus treasured it, although many requests came from other goddesses for the loan of it.—Chicago News.

Buried Fruits.

The name of one well known fruit is buried in each line.

6. And fame, I'd shed a tear for wealth,
7. And mickle money I'd purloin—
8. A sequin, cent or other coin.
9. While drumming, rap each note, I pray;
10. It grieves me long to hear you play.

Answer.—1 pear, 2 orange, 3 [illegible], 4 peach, 5 apple, 6 date, 7 lemon, 8 quince, 9 grape, 10 melon.

Heard in the Kitchen.

"Why do you give me such black looks?" asked the range to the coal.

"Because," answered the coal, "I don't like the way you scorched Dora's dinner last evening, and I mean to make it hot for you."

The Spelling Match.

Ten little children standing in a line,
"F-u-l-y, fully," then there were nine.
Nine puzzled faces, fearful of their fate,
"C-i-l-y, silly," then there were eight.
Eight pairs of blue eyes, bright as stars of heaven,
"B-u-s-s-y, busy," then there were seven.
Seven grave heads, shaking in an awful fix,
"L-y-d-y, lady," then there were six.
Six eager darlings, determined each to strive,
"D-u-t-i-e, duty," then there were five.
Five hearts so anxious beating more and more,
"S-c-o-l-l-a-r, scholar," then there were four.
Four mouths like rosebuds on a red rose tree,
"M-e-r-y, merry," then there were but three.
Three pairs of pink ears, listening keen and true,
"O-n-l-e-y, only," then there were two.
Two sturdy laddies, ready both to run,
"T-u-r-k-y, turkey," then there was but one.
One head of yellow hair, bright in the sun,
"H-e-r-o, hero," the spelling match was won.

Why the Hen Cackles.

"The accepted theory that a hen cackles after laying an egg because she is proud of herself is a mistake," said a naturalist. "The explanation of the rooster's answering crow as one of congratulation is also a mistake.

"The cackle is a relic of bygone days when fowls were wild. Then a hen, desirous of laying an egg, retired from the rest of the fowl community. By the time she was ready to join the other fowls they had wandered some distance, and she did not know where they were. She then cackled, and the rooster, hearing her, answered with a crow and thus informed the hen of the whereabouts of the tribe."—Chicago Herald.

Everything Favorable.

"Is your friend Miss Sweething going to marry the young man who has been paying her such devoted attention?"

"Well, all the circumstances point to that conclusion. He has some money, little intelligence, less character and is opposed bitterly by her father and mother."—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

The Poorest Scholar Imaginable.

The other day a professor leaving the university was approached by a seedy individual, who pathetically asked:

"Won't you help a poor scholar with a dime?"

The coin bestowed, the learned man said:

"You tell me you are a poor scholar?"

"Sure," answered the other. "I never was so schooled in me life. So long."

Cookery Points

German Cheese Cakes.

Here are some recipes for the dainties known as cheese cakes which will be found delicious. Try some for the Easter day menu.

Cheese cake—it would be more appropriate to speak of it as cheese pie—is made from ordinary short pie crust filled with a custard mixture made from eggs, sugar, pot cheese and various flavorings. The cheese can be made at home from sour milk or bought by the pound in the delicatessen shops or bought in prepared cakes of different sizes. If one desires to make curd quickly, hot water may be poured into clabbered milk and the curd will separate. But the water must not be too hot. Here is one recipe:

Rub together until smooth one pound of cottage or pot cheese and a cup of sugar. Add three beaten eggs, a tablespoonful of melted butter, half a cupful of cream or rich milk, the juice and rind of a lemon and a teasoonful of cinnamon. Beat all until the mixture has a smooth, creamy consistency. Then pour into a deep pie tin which has been lined with pastry and bake in a quick oven for forty-five minutes. This can be covered with a meringue made from the whites of three eggs and two tablespoonfuls of sugar. The meringue should be browned in a slow oven. It should not be put on to the "cake" until this has been let to partly cool after being taken from the oven.

Some cooks bake the pastry for cheese cake before putting in the custard, laying it over the outside of the pan and cooking with the bottom of the pan uppermost. They prick the crust with a fork so that it will not blister and, after pouring in the custard part, set the crust back into the oven just long enough for the eggs to set. Some German cooks use an egg pastry in their cheese cakes, but at this season, when eggs are so high priced, most of our American housewives will prefer to use the ordinary short pie crust. Here is a good recipe:

Allow three level tablespoonfuls of shortening to every cupful of flour or an extra tablespoonful if a very short crust is desired. Also allow four level teaspoonfuls of salt and half a level teaspoonful of baking powder to each cupful of flour. Work the shortening into the flour with the finger tips or with a knife or spatula until you have a mixture resembling soft bread-crumbs.

Mix to a stiff paste, using as little cold water as possible, first making a "well" in the center of the flour. Mix only long enough to take up all the dry flour. Toss the ball of dough out on a lightly floured board, letting it get a thin film. Do not press so hard that the pastry sticks to the board, as sticking spoils the texture.

Cream pastry can be used with cheese cakes. Make as above, only use one to one and one-half tablespoonfuls of shortening and use cream in place of water in mixing. If very thick cream is used the shortening may be omitted altogether, the salt and baking powder being mixed with the flour. Pastry made from thick cream is a very quick and usually very digestible form of pastry.

Gluten Bread.

Pour a pint of boiling water into a pint of milk. Add a teaspoonful of butter and a teaspoonful of salt. Let stand until lukewarm; then add a well beaten egg, a quarter of a yeast cake dissolved and enough gluten to make a soft batter. Cover and stand in a warm place to rise; then add enough gluten to make a soft dough and knead it well. Form it into four loaves and let rise again. Bake for one hour.

Gluten bread requires less yeast and less time to rise than ordinary bread.

Colors and Flavors.

Certain flavorings seem to fit certain colors. No good cook would think of flavoring yellow cake, bonbon or dessert with pistachio, almond or rose or a pink dessert with lemon, pistachio or orange. Rose extract is always reserved for sweets of pink or white tint, almond for white, orange for yellow, lemon for white or green and pistachio, [illegible] a discord between color and flavor in a pink dessert flavored with pistachio or a green dessert flavored with rose, no matter how "good" it may taste.

New Idea For Doughnuts.

When frying doughnuts have a dish of boiling water beside the hot fat. As you remove the doughnuts from the frying kettle dip hastily into the boiling water. This removes all grease and renders them more healthful than they would otherwise be.

There is another point not to be despised when lard is as expensive as it is at present. After the water cools the grease may be skimmed from the top and used again. One will be surprised to see the amount of fat that will rise.

Bran Gems.

One egg, one cupful of flour, two cupfuls bran, one teaspoonful salt, three tablespoonfuls of molasses, one tablespoonful of shortening, one teaspoonful of soda, buttermilk to make a stiff batter. Raisins may be added if desired. Bake twenty-five minutes.

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

Comrades.

Years ago a pine tree grew near some flax in a field. The pine tree and the flax were very dear to each other.

One day an oak that stood near by said to the flax: "Why are you so fond of the pine? He is a great tree, and some day soon he will leave you."

But the pine bade the flax not to heed the oak's words, and the two grew more chummy every day.

Not long after a man came to the forest and chopped the pine tree down and carried it away.

The flax wept, while the oak looked down in pity and cried:

"I knew it would be so. You will never see each other again."

Did the pine tree ever see the flax again?

Listen, and I will tell you the end of the story as a little bird brought it to me. The pine was made in a mast for a ship. The flax was woven into a great sail. As luck would have it, that very sail was fastened to that very pine mast, and away went the ship over the vast sea. As the wind flew the flaxen sail whispered words of love to the mast, and the comrades went happily together over life's ocean.

President Wilson to Boy Scouts.

There is one rule in the world, and it applies to all professions; that is, that you are expected to make good. No excuses are allowed in this school of life. The only way to make good is to keep faith. That is the reason I like the idea of the boy scouts—it gives them some notion of their being responsible to society. They are responsible to the people who live around them, to help maintain the standards of order and of fidelity, which are the only things that hold absolutely together.

You are recruits in the ranks that we all stand in—of those who try to serve the country in some way that will tell and that has nothing particularly to do with our personal benefit. A man who devotes himself to the development of his own character will succeed in nothing except making a prig; but if he devotes himself to helping other people his character will not only take care of itself, but it will grow to a very noble stature.

Game of Brush-brush.

In this game physical activity is the winning card, and if the player who is "it" is nimble some quick and close work will be needed to outwit him.

The players stand shoulder to shoulder in a close circle, their hands behind them. "It" is in the center. A whisk broom is in the hands of the circle and is passed from hand to hand as stealthily and smoothly as possible. It is the job of "it" to grab the brush or to keep it passing till some one fumbles and drops it.

Whenever a player sees a chance he gives "it" a brush with the broom, and that is likely to make some quick passing necessary to get it out of his reach. He is permitted to reach through the line to get the broom, and the player from whom he secures it, or the one who drops it, replaces him in the center of the ring and becomes "it."

A Riddle.

The crow went home to his wife and told her that the raven had given him another riddle to solve. "What is it?" said she. "Why, he asked me how many pins there were," said the crow, "and I can't think of a single thing except a scarfpin!" "I'll help you," said his wife. Pretty soon they had quite a long list. Here it is: Hatpin, plain pin, safety pin, ninepin, tenpin, rolling pin, coupling pin, hairpin, belaying pin, breastpin and clothespin. Can you think of any more?—Philadelphia Ledger.

Why Eyes Sparkle.

Merriment causes a frequent movement of the eyelids up and down, and as it is the function of the eyelid to release a tear each time it comes down the repetition has the effect of covering the eye with considerable moisture.

The light shining on this moisture gives the sparkling effect. Inasmuch as the merry appearance of the eye is caused by tears, we are apt to shed them from laughing as well as from crying. Tears are intimately associated with our merry and our sad moods.

A Sack Race.

This game is so old as to need little description. Put each contestant into a sack and tie the top about his waist. At a given signal let those entered run to some required mark. The efforts of the impeded contestants to make speed result in many tumbles that are amusing to the spectators, but harmless to the contestants.—Country Gentleman.

Numerical Enigma.

I am composed of twelve letters and spell the name of an important state.
My 1, 2, 12, 7 is the sound of a bell.
My 6, 9, 11, 10 is conceited.
My 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 12 is a girl's name.
My 12, 8, 4, 2 is also a girl's name.
Answer.—Pennsylvania. Words—Peal, vain, Sylvia, Anna.

School Athletics.

The Public School Athletic league of New York has just issued its annual report. It states that during the last year more than 350,000 boys and girls took part in the activities of the league. Track games, basket ball, baseball and shooting at a mark had more devotees than ever before.

The Distinguished Guest.

Captain Raabe was a man whose name had weight in the French cavalry. He was a tall man, belonging to the middle aged trooper type. With military qualities of the highest kind, he had a singular bearing, a savage sort of misanthropy and a cynical tongue, which stood in the way of promotion. When he was in the Sixth lancers, on garrison duty at Commercy, one of his comrades brought his father to dine with him at the officers' mess, a man of humble position and unpretentiously dressed. Captain Raabe, considering that this guest had not been fitly received, gave expression to his opinion, saying that if the executioner of Commercy had come in evening dress he would have had a better reception. The officers demurring, he made no rejoinder, but shortly afterward came to mess with a guest whose dress was irreproachable. Every one lavished attentions on the unknown. When dinner was over Captain Raabe, raising his glass, proposed the health of "the executioner of Commercy."

Sir Isaac Newton.

The discovery of gravitation was the first of many great ideas that came to "the greatest original thinker of all time." Newton was also the pioneer in announcing the physical properties of light. His epitaph, translated from the Latin, on his monument in Westminster Abbey describes in a few words the greatest accomplishments of Newton. It reads:

"Here lies Isaac Newton, who by vigor of mind always supernatural first demonstrated the motions and figures of the planets, the paths of the comets and the tides of the ocean. He discovered what before his time no one had even suspected, that rays of light are differently refrangible and that this is the cause of colors."

Four Thousand Miles.

A thousand miles up the mighty St. Lawrence, a thousand miles along the great lakes, a thousand miles across the open prairie, a thousand miles over a sea of mountains—4,000 miles where nation meets nation, and sovereignty meets sovereignty, but never a fortress, never a battleship, never a gun, never a sentinel on guard! Four thousand miles of civilized and Christianized internationalism—that is North America's greatest achievement.—James A. Macdonald in American Review of Reviews.

"Never saw before, eh? What's his name?"

"He hasn't got any yet, but we intend to christen him William."—Puck.

THE BOUVET, OCEAN AND IRRESISTIBLE LOST TO THE ALLIES

Three Big War Ships Blown Up and Sink Almost Immediately; No Vessel in Attacking Squadron Escapes Without Being Hit

London, Saturday.—The great allied fleet that for more than three weeks has been battering the Turkish forts on the Dardanelles met with its first serious losses on Thursday, when the British battleship Irresistible, the British battleship Ocean and the French battleship Bouvet were sunk in the deep water of the straits and the British battle cruiser Inflexible and the French battleship Gaulois were put out of action. Scarcely one of the ten vessels directly engaged with the fortification but was hit frequently, according to reports to the Admiralty.

The bombardment that lasted all Thursday was the most violent and most sustained yet undertaken by the war ships. As has been the practice heretofore, the superdreadnought Queen Elizabeth, the only vessel in the fleet mounting 15-inch guns, led the battle line. The attack was directed on the fortifications at the Narrows, Fort Sultanie, Fort Kilid Bahr and the other works near Chanak Kalessi, on both the European and Asiatic sides. All the battle ships—ten in number—had advanced past the entrance to the straits and engaged the forts with direct fire. The land batteries, consisting of howitzers and field pieces, replied vigorously. After two hours and a half the forts ceased firing, the British squadron was replaced by fresh ships and the attack was renewed. The forts at the same time again brought their guns into action and the exchange continued until darkness fell, when the war ships retired outside the straits.

As a graphic report of the day's operations the Admiralty last night issued the following statement:—

"An account of the operations at the Dardanelles on the 18th of March:—Mine sweeping having been in progress during the last ten days inside the straits, a general attack was delivered by the British and French fleets yesterday (Thursday) morning on the fortresses at the Narrows. At fifteen minutes before eleven o'clock the Queen Elisabeth, the Inflxible, the Agamemnon and the Lord Nelson bombarded Forts J. L. T. U. and V. while the Triumph and the Prince George fired at batteries F. E. and H. A heavy fire was opened on the ships from howitzers and field guns.

"At twenty-two minutes after twelve o'clock the French squadron, consisting of the Suffren, the Gaulois, the Charlemagne and the Bouvet advanced up the Dardanelles and engaged the forts at closer range. Forts J. U. F and E replied strongly. Their fire was silenced b ythe ten battle ships inside the straits, all the ships being hit several times during this part of the action. By twenty-five minutes after one o'clock all the forts had ceased firing. The Vengeance, the Irresistible, the Albion, the Ocean, the Swiftsure and the Majestic then advanced to relieve the six old battle ships inside the straits. As the French squadron, which had engaged the forts in a most brilliant fashion, was passing out the Bouvet was blown up by a drifting mine. She sank in thirty-six fathoms north of Erenkeui village in less than three minutes. At thirty-six minutes after two the relief battle ships renewed the attack on the forts, which again opened fire. The attack on the forts was maintained, while the operations on the mine sweepers continued.

"At nine minutes after four o'clock the Irresistible quitted the line listing heavily, and at ten minutes to six o'clock sank, having probably struck a drifting mine. At five minutes after six o'clock the Ocean, having also struck a mine, sank. Both vessels sank in deep water, practically the whole of their crews having been removed safely under a hot fire.

"The Gaulois was damaged by gunfire. The Inflexible had her forward control position hit by a heavy shell and requires repair.

"The bombardment of the forts and the mine sweeping operations terminated when darkness fell. The damage to the forts effected by the prolonged direct fire of the very powerful forces employed cannot yet be estimated, and a further report will follow. The losses of the ships was caused by mines drifting with the current, which were encountered in areas hitherto swept clear, and this danger will require special treatment.

"The British casualties among personnel were not heavy, considering the scale of the operations, but practically the whole of the crew of the Bouvet were lost with the ship, an internal explosion apparently having supervened on the explosion of the mine.

"The Queen and the Impacable, which have been despatched from England to replace the ships' casualties in anticipation of this operation, are due to arrive immediately, thus bringing the British fleet up to its original strength. The operations are continuing with the naval and military forces available on the spot.

"On the 16th inst. Vice Admiral Carden, who had been incapacitated by illness, was succeded in the chief command by Rear Admiral John Michael de Robeck, with the acting rank of vice admiral."

"The casualties received by the Amethyst were the result of a smart piece of work which she performed in the Dardanelles when she was instrusted with the difficult task of cutting the telegraph cable connecting Kilid Bahr with Chanak.

"She succeeded in lifting and cutting the cable undetected and had started her return journey when she was discovered. She then had to run the gauntlet of forts on both sides of the narrows, becoming the target of a veritable hail of fire. Going at full speed, although frequently hit, she succedede in getting beyond the range of the guns and reaching the entrance of the straits."

LATE WAR BULLETINS

FRENCH

Paris, via London.—The following official communication was issued by the War Office today:

"The day has been fairly quiet along the greater part of the front.

"In the valley of the Aisne there has been a somewhat lively artillery duel.

"In Champagne before Hill No. 196, northeast of Le Mesnil, the enemy, after having violently bombarded our positions, delivered an infantry attack, which was repulsed. The enemy suffered heavy losses."

"At Notre Dame de Lorette we have made ourselves masters of communicating trenches which run from the hill captured by us toward the village of Ablain. We destroyed them after having killed, expelled or captured the defenders.

"In the Argonne, between Bolante and Four de Paris, after a violent fight we progressed 150 metres. In the forest of Consenvoye we repulsed a German counter attack last night and maintained the ground gained on Thursday. At Les Eparges we carried a salient east of the position in which the enemy had successfully maintained itself since the fighting of last month. We repulsed two counter attacks yesterday and a third last night."

GERMAN

Berlin, via Wireless.—The German General Staff today gave out a report on the progress of the war, reading as follows:—

"In the Champagne district further French attacks have failed. One of these was to the north of Le Mesnil and the other to the north of Beaugejour. We took prisoners two French officers and seventy soldiers. After heavy losses the French retreated, under our effective fire, back to their former positions.

"To the southeast of Verdun the French have made several advances. In the plain of the Woevre French attacks have been repulsed, while on the east side of the heights of the Meuse the fighting continues.

"The situation in the vicinity of Memel, in East Prussia, is not yet clear. It would appear that minor Russian detachments have entered Memel, Counter measures have been taken.

"All the Russian attacks between the River Pissa and the River Orzyc, to the northeast of Przasnysz, have been repulsed. In some of these engagements the enemy lost heavily.

"The situation south of the Vistula shows no change."

RUSSIAN

Petrograd, via London.—The War Office today made public the following communication:—

"After a battle on the left bank of the Niemen we occupied Veysee. Our cavalry pursued the Germans retiring on Heynes.

"In the direction of Przasnysz and Ostrolenko action continues for possession of isolated villages and heights.

"In the Carpathians the enemy on March 18 attacked fruitlessly our positions on the front of Oenjnovitze,

"SEPTEMBER MORN"

"September Morn" has been dramatized, funnized and musicalized by Arthur Gillespie and Aubrey Stauffer, two clever chaps who can blend pleasing lyrics and compose catchy music in this new fun show. They have succeeded beyond all anticipation and the producers—Eowland & Clifford—have selected a great company to enact the various roles and sing the jingle tunes. Frank Minor, the well-known comedian, has the big fun part and Maud Potter, called "The American Gaby Deslys," has a dashing role with unique dances. Arline Bolling is also seen in a part that was written for her. The chorus is large and pretty. Among the song hits are: "When a Little Boy Loves a Little Girl;" "In Berlin"; "Oh, You September Morn"; "Everybody's Tango Crazy"; "A Spare-rib from the Butcher Shop of Life"; "Where is the Pleasure in Wine and Song if the Woman is Not There"; "I've a Girl in Every Town"; "Beautiful Dreams I'm rDeaming"; "The Sunshade Girl," etc.

SAY BAKING PAN AIDS THEFT

New York, Mar. 20.—A man walking about the basement of a Sixth avenue department store last evening carried under his arm a huge package wrapped in paper. Every little while he would stop and one end of the package would open like the mouth of a big pocketbook and then close again. Detectives Calk and Bauerschmidt followed him outside and asked him to show the package.

It was a large iron baking pan, so wrapped that the cover could be opened without disturbing the paper wrapper. Inside, the police say, were three pairs of trousers, a pair of portieres and a dozen table cloths. They arrested him on a charge of larceny. He said he is John Nelson, a clerk, forty-one years old, of No. 161 West 36th st.

HAS RUBBER ARMOR PLATE

Pittsburg, Pa., Mar. 20.—Andrew Seltzinger, a city policeman, has invented a shock absorber for battleships and other armored vessels. By this method the armor plate is lined with a rubber-like substance, thickly studded, and made by a process which he has invented.

According to Mr. Seltzinger, when a projectile penetrates the armor plate, even should it pass through the ship, the hole cut out will close up through the action of the rubberlike substance which vulcanizes from the heat caused by the friction from the projectile. This will keep the water out. This process, it was said, has been tested on a small scale and found efficient.

Incendiary and Explosive Missiles Fall in Capital and Its Suburbs, but Population, Warned of Approach of Hostile Craft, Maintains Calm; Guns Bombard Raiders

BOMB IN NURSERY; A BABY ESCAPES; DAMAGES SLIGHT

Paris, March 22.—Flying rapidly from a point north of Compiegne, near which town the German line lies closest to Paris, two Zeppelin dirigibles attacked the capital at half-past one o'clock Sunday with explosive and incendiary bombs. The Zeppelins cruised above the city and suburbs for forty minutes, dropping their missles at half a dozen points, and disappeared again toward the north after a counter attacks by aeroplanes and anti- aircraft guns. In all about fifty bombs were accounted for. The dirigibles traveled at a great height, estimated at considerably more than a mile, and this and the light haze in the upper air levels it is thought accounted for their escape.

Many fires followed the explosion of the bombs, but these were speedily checked by the firemen, who had been warned of the approach of the hostile dirigibles. Eight persons were injured, one seriously, but so far as is known no one was killed.

The attacking force originally consisted of four craft. Two of these, however, were turned back before they reached Paris, one from a point ten miles distant and the other from a point thirty-six miles away.

This spectacular night raid of Zeppelins tested the preparedness of Paris for such a development of the war. The population preserved the utmost calm, many persons flocking to the streets to watch the spectacle of an aerial battle between the anti-aircraft guns of the forts and the hostile airships. The forts bombarded the Zeppelins and gave them a warm welcome. Then a squadron of French aeroplanes charged with the duty of guarding Paris leaped into the air, each bearing a searchlight, the shafts of light from which looked like shooting stars as they flashed across the cloudless sky.

Reports followed of two powerful explosions between Puteaux and Surenes, suburbs of Paris. Residents of this section reported havin gseen a large dirigible flying toward the south and then returning to the north. The searchlight on Mont Valerin flashed its rays on the craft. At the same time cannon firing washeard, as well as the whirring of a powerful motor. Gradually the Zeppelin disappeared from view in the mist.

Reports show that eight bombs were thrown at Asnieres, where three persons were wounded.

One of the projectiles fell through the roof of a residence at Lagarenne into the nursery where a baby was asleep in its cradle. Almost every piece of furniture in the room except the cradle was smashed to flying fragments. The child was not touched.

Two women living in the Rue Pocard, at Levallois-Perret, whose hunbands are at the front, were awakened by an incendiary bomb dropped throuhg the roof. The chemicals which the missle contained through the roof. The chemicals which the missle contained burst into flames, but the women escaped unhurt.

Ten persons living in a little one-story house in the Place de Courcelles, also at Levallois-Perret, had narrow escapes when a bomb, apparently somewhat heavier than the others, wrecked the building. Two youths who fell into the cellar were covered with debris, but they were merely bruise dand choked with dust when dug out. No one else in the house was hurt.

The raid affords another proof of the wonderful presence of mind and coolness which now dominate the French. Nowhere was there the slightest sign of panic or nervousness. No one sought refuge in cellar and many persons calmly remained in their houses. All Paris is laughing at the Kaiser's latest example of his "frightfulness."

RECAPTURE ST. ELOI IN FIGHT DURING NIGHT

London, March 22.—One of the sharpest minor engagements in the wester war theatre occurred at St. Eloi following the British success at Neuve Chapelle, "although," says the British "eye witness," "it wascomparatively unimportant, since it left the situation much as it was before."

"On the evening of March 14 after an extremely heavy artillery fire directed against our trenches along the eastern and southwestern sectors the Germans endeavored t ocarry our lines. The attempt succeeded as far as the latter sector was concerned, for the trenches had been blown in and were absolutely untenable. To the east of the village, however, our infantry made a most determined stand. Their fire was so steady and well directed that the losses among the assailants were fearful, our men sticking to their posts until the last—in fact, until they were overwhelmed by sheer weight of numbers.

"The Germans then hurried supports to the trenches and also to a mound which they had blown up by a missle. Following up their success they penetrated into the village itself. They were not allowed to remain long in undisputed possession of it, however.

"By another effort made nearly two hours later we succeeded in driving the enemy completely out of the village and in recapturing all the trenches which had not been destroyed. The mound, however, remained in the hands of the Germans, although it was subjected to so heavy a fire that little use could be made of it.

"The fighting in St. Eloi itself, as is usual in such cases, was of the fiercest description. Upon gaining the place the Germans erected barricades across the streets, defended by machine guns. These had to be stormed one by one, our men coming on time after time, regardless of their losses, until the village had been cleared of the enemy.

"During the day of the 15th the Germans made a last effort to recover their ground by assault. Presumbaly it was not intended to be more than a forlorn hope, for not more than two hundred men took part in the attack. Few can have escaped scot free, since a comparatively large number of bodies afterward was counted in front of our trenches. Prisoners captured during this fighting said the German losses were very heavy, the supports especially suffering severely from our shell fire, while our bombardment during the previous days had done much damage to their trenches.

"In spite of the generally monotonous character of the present stage of the war there have been some dramatic moments. One such moment immediately preceded the attack on Neuve Chapelle on the 10th. When our infantry, waiting to assault, were watching the bombardment they could see our shells bursting in a thick veil of smoke and dust which hung over the German trenches. As the minutes wore on, while our artillery fire grew hotter and hotter and the time for them to dash forward came nearer, their excitement rose to fever pitch.

"In some places they were seen to jump up on the parapets, brandishing their rifles toward the Germans and shouting remarks which were drowned in the roar of guns. When the assault actually was made our losses were trifling. It was only in the subsequent advance that heavy casualties occurred.

"It is unnecessary to speak of the gallantry of regimental officers throughout the fighting. The casualty lists tell their own tale of the heavy toll among them, largely due to the fact that in advancing over intricate country intersected with hedges and ditches platoon commanders had to go forward to reconnoitre the ground and discover the best way to circumvent or cross these obstacles without getting their men crowded together in narrow places such as gaps in hedgerows and bridges. This naturally entailed exposure. The results achieved and the extraordinary spirit shown by our troops are the best proof of the qualities displayed by their leaders."

SOCIETY BELLE TO WED YOUNG HARRIMAN.

While no date has been set for the marriage of Miss Loise R. Bibbee to Mr. Oliver Carley Harriman, the announcement of which interested society, it is expected that the wedding may take place in the Easter season. Miss Bibbee is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eldon Bibbee, of New York, and is one of the large coterie of young women of society who entered registered dogs in recent kennel exhibits. She is here pictured with one of her favorite Great Danes. Mr. Harriman is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Harriman.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE CAMPAIGN

"BURY THE HATCHET—EVERYBODY'S DOING IT"

Class Distinction Has No Place in New Chamber

In the list of Chamber of Commerce members published in The Evening Times of Saturday, one fact stood out with unavoidable prominence. This movement towards organized community effort is a movement by the entire community, in the interests of the entire community. The list includes merchants, manufacturers, doctors, bankers, publishers and others. It does not represent the selffish interests of any small group. No class or group holds a controlling influence over the activities of the organization. The Fulton Chamber of Commerce will do what the best citizens of Fulton want to have done. This new organization is a triumph for democracy in Fulton.

The foregoing is in the nature of a reply to charges that manufacturers may control the new Chamber of Commerce.

The spirit that lies behind this undertaking has been brought forward in the assignment of H. L. Paddock of five memberships to men who are not connected in any way with his organization; simply men whose high moral character and trained minds will make them a strong asset in the constructive work of the Chamber. These assignments are, Rev. G. E. Stockwell, Rev. H. D. Holmes, Prof. J. R. Fairgrieve, Prof. G. B. Deuel and W. H. Singleton.

Since the list of names was published on Saturday two additional memberships have been added to the Chamber of Commerce. These are Fred Dolbear, 1; Maurice Conley, 1.

More are certain to follow.

GERMANS SLAIN BY THOUSANDS IN ATTACK

London, March 22.—Frederick Rennet, the Daily News correspondent ,wires from Petrograd:

"It is hoped here that one effect o fthe capture of Memel will be that the German freebooters in western Suwalki province will desist from their systematic burning and murdering among the villages when they are enraged at finding no plunder.

"The only method of attempting the relief of Memel seems to be to bring tships from Danzig. These will have to shell their own town and expose themeselves to an obvious challenge from the sea.

"The Germans on the southern frontier of East Prussia attempted a surprise attack in great force from Myshinic along the Rossovo river, in the direction of Ostrolenka. They hurried forward in broad, dense columns before dawn on Friday. The Russians let them come up to the first line of barbed wire. Then machine guns and a flank infantry fire poured murderous volleys, which destroyed the formation of the attack and drove the head column among the supports. The entire invasion was driven in disorder back to the frontier early in the afternoon, leaving thousands of dead."

LATE WAR BULLETINS

FRENCH

Paris, via London.—The following official statement was issued by the War Office today:

"The enemy has again bombarded the Cathedral at Soissons, firing twenty-seven shells and causing serious damage to the edifice, on which, contrary to the German assertions, no port or observation station has even been installed. Nor is it true the Red Cross flag has been hoisted on the cathedral.

"In Champagne we made slight progress last evening to the east of Ridge No. 196, northeast of Le Mesnil. Today only a bombardment occurred.

"In the Argonne there was rather a hot rifle fire all day, but no infantry attack was made. At Les Eparges we have maintained our gains of yesterday, notwithstanding two violent counter attacks which were repulsed with heavy losses to the enemy.

"In the Vosges we lost yesterday the Great and Little Reich Askerkopf, but we have since recaptured Little Reich Askerkopf and have launched a counter attack for the recovery of Great Reich Ackerkopf. The battle continues.

"There has been no modification to report in the situation since last night's communication.

PEACE SUNDAY AT ST. MARY'S

Rev. John L. Lindsman Read Transcript of Peace Decree From the Pope

Yesterday in the Church of the Immaculate Conception at the first and second masses, Rev. John L. Lindsman read a transcript of the peace decree from the Pope directing all Catholics in every metropolitan cathedral, parochial and conventual church in all dioceses situated outside of Europe, to join in one united appeal to Almighty God to bring peace again to the warring people of the earth.

During high mass Father Lindsman in his sermon on the decree said in part "The object of the peace prayer is to ask the mercy of Almighty God to stay the progress of this scourge of war which is destroying so many thousands of lives, bringing misery to families and cities and rushing flourish nations to the brink of ruin. Is it not the pride and coveteousness of men, the placing of science and materialism in the foreground and putting the teachings of the Master in the background, that brought about this terrible tragedy? My dear brethren, do you not realize the efficacy of prayer to Almight God whose perogative is to heal by chastisement and through pardon to preserve; do you not know His Divine heart is moved by prayers which spring from contrite and humble hearts and that these prayers when fervently uttered will rise above the din and clang of arms in a mighty appeal for forgiveness and peace? What a change has come over fair France, once the cradle of religious thought and action; but until this war a nation which had forgotten its religious practices and given itself up almost entirely to the pursuit of pleasures and the adoration of materialism. But now what a change this war has brought about; religion has returned to France, her churches are again crowded with the women and children of those at the front and with the men who have not yet been sent to the trenches, each praying with all the fervor of the human heart to Almighty God, asking pardon for their past indifferences and begging that peace would again be restored to their county.

"Let us then, my dear brethren, pay a visit to our church today and there before our altars recite the prayer dictated by our Holy Father; let us join our supplications with those Catholics throughout this nation and all other nations on this side of the sea, sending to Heaven from millions of human hearts the cry of a penitent and sad people, asking that meekness may once again inspire the minds of rulers and the councils of those peoples now engaged in mortal conflict."

At the evening service the Rosary and the prayer for peace composed by Pope Benedict XV were recited; the Litany of the Saints was sung by the choir and benediction of the Blessed Sacrament was given. The peace prayer recited follows:

Dismayed bythehorrors of a war which is bringing ruin to peoples and nations, we turn, O Jesus, to Thy most loving heart as to our last hope. O God of Mercy, with tears we invoke Thee to end this fearful scourge; O King of Peace, we humly implore the peace for which we long. From Thy sacred Heart Thou didst shed forth over the world divine charity, so that discord might end and love alone might reign among men. During Thy life on earth Thy heart beat with tender compassion for the sorrows of men; in this hour made terrible with burning hate, with bloodshed and with slaughter once more may Thy divine heart be moved to pity. Pity the countless mothers in anguish for the fate of their sons; pity the numberless families now bereaved of their fathers; pity Europe over which broods such havoc and disaster. Do Thou inspire rulers and people with counsel of meekness, do Thou heal the discords that tear the nations asunder; Thou who didst shed Thy precious blood that they might live as brothers, bring men together once more in loving harmony. And as once before to th ecry of the Apostle Peter; save us, Lord, we perish. Thou didst answer with words of mercy and didst stil lthe raging waves, so now deign to hear our trustful prayer, and give back to the world peace and tranquility.

And do thou, O most holy Virgin, as in other times of sore distress, be now our help, our protection and our safeguard. Amen.

Charles B. Coates Erecting Rustic Affair near Battle Island—Will Build Gravel Road

Anticipating the opening of the canal this summer and appreciating the comforts of a country home Chas. B. Cates is erecting a very handsome rustic bungalow on his property bordering the west bank of the Oswego river about a mile north of Battle Island. The spot chosen by Mr. Cates is ideal, being surrounded by tall shade trees on the west side and having an unobstructed view of the four miles of river from the east veranda. Mr. Cates will also build a gravel road leading to his home from the west River road and will lay 1200 feet of pipe line to his supply of spring water.

WILLIAM CRAMER LED CHORUS CHOIR SINGING

A chorus choir was heard at the Y. P. S. C. E. of the Congregational church last evening under the direction of William Cramer. Those who assisted were Edith Ackroy, Mildred Norton, Florence Bailey, Eunice Rothwell, Gladys Kresge, Fred Pollard, Willie Barry, Harold Andrews, Earl Pooler, Wallace Russell.

WILLIAM A. CHURCH IS NOW INCORPORATED

Secretary of State Hugo has issued incorporation papers to the William A. Church Company of this city. The capital stock of the latest Fulton corporation is $10,000. The directors of the company are William A. Church, Royal J. Yager and William E. McSweeney.

Mr. Church is a strong believer in co-operation in business and for this reason he has sold to Messrs. Yaber and McSweeney shares of stock. The two gentlemen being members of the company have at heart the best interests of the plumbing and heating business.

ALFRED F. MOORHOUSE

The funeral of Alfred F. Moorhouse 52, who died Saturday as a result of bullet fired through his brain by his own hand while suffering from mental disorder, will be held tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'cloc from the home in Babcock road. Rev. M. G. Buck will officiate.

Mr. Moorhouse last fall fell from a tree while harvesting his apple crop and injured his head. Since then he had at spells suffered from the injury and at times was depressed and melancholy.

Saturday morning Mr. Moorhouse was busy at work the entire morning but near noon Mrs. Moorhouse noticed her husband walking quickly toward the barn. Shortly after she heard the report of a gun. She immediately rushed out and found her husband lying dead on the ground in the rear of the barn, the smoking firearm near him and the ugly wound in his skull.

Coroner Cusack was summoned and after an investigation stated death had been instantaneous and that Mr. Moorhouse had died as a result of the shot fired by his own hand while suffering a mental disorder.

Surviving are Mrs. Moorhouse three sons, Glenn, Levi and Carl; also one daughter Cora, a brother Alma and a sister, Mrs. George Exie of Gasport.

Leman Babcock, Mrs. Moorhouse's father, arrived today from Whitesboro, and Glen Moorhouse of Ilion and Levi Moorhouse of Texas, are also expected today.

AT THE QUIRK TONIGHT

Rowland & Clifford will present at The Quirk tonight Frank Minor in the cyclonic dancing musical comedy, "September Morn," which is a revel of fun, songs and tangos, with Maud Potter, "The American Gaby Deslys", in dances now the rage of Paris. Lou Kelso, William Cameron, and the smartest, swiftest cast of the season, are seen to great advantage in this new fun show with tunes. The chorus numbers some forty pretty girls; the scenic environment is beautiful and the costuming a real riot in colors and design.

"September Morn" scored an immense hit during its run of the La Salle opera house recently and is said to come here in all of its fun and design.

Prices: 25-35-50-75c., $1.00.

THE QUIRK

A interesting and highly educational series of motion pictures showing all points of interest in the city of New York will be the attraction at The Quirk theatre on March 23d, continuous performance, 2 to 10.30. The four o'clock performance will be a special matinee for school children. The vaule of the pictures will be added to by a descriptive lecture by Garland Garden, a well known actor, and the combination entertainment, which is known as A Trip to New York, will be unique.

A Trick With Words.

An extraordinary memory was that of Dr. Addison Alexander of Princeton Theological seminary. His memory was not only tenacious of facts, but of mere words. For the amusement of young people he would sometimes say, "Now I am going to talk without thinking." He would then pour forth period after period of strange words and incongruous images harmonious and even rhythmical in sound, but wholly destitute of sense. If that seems an easy trick try to suspend your reason and give free rein to your fancy in periods that shall be grammatically correct and yet without meaning.—Youth's Companion.

Cold Proposition.

"My bank is mean, I think."

"How so, girlie?"

"I have taken hundreds of checks to that bank, and they always count me out the exact amount, just so much and no more. All the other business men with whom I deal throw in a little occasionally for good will."—Pittsburgh Post.

RED CROSS CHAMPIONS; THE PENNANT WINNERS

New York, March 22.—Winners in the New York State competition to sell the most Red Cross seals per capita, as announced today by the State Charities Aid Association, are Garden City, Freeport, Corning, New Rochelle, Troy and Rochester. Banners will be presented to the tuberculosis organization which conducted the sale in each of these places as tokens that in buying seals residents contributed in the average more generously for anti-tuberculosis work than any other village or city in the same population class.

Former records have been shattered for the number of seals sold per capita of population, in spite of hard times and relief of war sufferers. The total sale for the state (outside of New York City) has been raised to 8,525,000 an increase of 1,700,000 over the previous record total, in the 1913 sale.

The winners of the seven National Pennants are not announced by the American Red Cross but it is understood they will include no less than four of these New York State Champions. In the 1914 sale the "Standard of Three," three seals per inhabitant in his town, was set before every one of the 1280 agents of the State Charities Aid Association as a high mark to aim at and an even 100 agents have hit this mark or overshot it.

Of the 100 cities and villages which reached the "standard of three" per inhabitants Fulton is recorded with 4.19; Oswego 6.5.

CLUB WILL RESTOCK RIVER WITH FISH

Oswego, March 22.—With the completion of barge canal work on the Oswego river, the Leatherstocking Gun Club, of Oswego, of which Emerson L. Stowell is president, is to take steps ot have the river restocked with game fish. The blasting in the river drove those of the fish that were not killed into other waters and it will be necessary to restock the streams.

The club is also making arrangements for the opening of their grounds on the bluff near St. Paul's cemetery early next month.

CONGRATULATIONS

Evening Times:

Am on my third week of exile and expect to be in Fulton again next Thursday, feeling much better.

I have received The Times daily since being here, and after coming from my room this morning and finding it in my mail box and having it before me during breakfast, I could not resist writing you and expressing my appreciation of our Fulton daily. The Detroit Free Press has to come second with me.

I regret not having been at home during the opening of the city campaign but The Times has kept me in touch with it so that I will know how things stand when I return.

Success to your paper.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, March 22.—If the legislature passes the bill introduced by Assemblyman John G. Malone of Albany, the last toll bridge between New York and Buffalo will be acquired by the State. The bridge in question, known as the Greenbush bridge, crosses the Hudson river and connects the cities of Albany and Rensselaer and is one of the most important links in the chain of highways which connect New York city and Buffalo, in that the Hudson river cannot be crossed at any other point.

It is estimated that five hundred automobiles cross the Greenbush bridge daily in addition to many vehicles and large numbers of people. The structure is at present owned by the Albany Southern Railroad Company which has placed its value at $700,000.

For years automobilists, who have been compelled to pay fifteen cents every time they crossed the bridge, have been endeavoring to eliminate the toll feature. Governor Whitman, who had occasion to use the bridge recently, was held up like others at the other end of the bridge. Determined to put an end to the obnoxious levy, the automobilists of the State got together and discussed the ways and means of making the Green bush bridge a free structure and their efforts resulted in the inroduction of the Malone bill which has an excellent chance of becoming a law.

The Malone bill provides for a new provision of the Highway law which is to be known as Section 269. It empowers the State commissioner of highways to acquire toll bridges when they constitute a connecting link between two State routes or a part of a State route. it is set forth in the Malone bill that the latter step may be taken upon the petition of a board of supervisors.

It is intended that the money necessary to acquire the Greenbush bridge shall come out of the Highway fund, although there is nothing in the Malone bill which will prevent a subsequent appropriation by the legislature. The boards of supervisors of both Albany and Rensselaer counties have gone on record as favoring the acquisition of toll bridges by the State and jointly have abolished two such bridges within the boundaries of their counties within the past few months.

The Southern Albany Railroad does not oppose the Malone bridge bill and there has been no serious objection to it from any other source. It has been explained to legislators that if the bill passes a lucrative revenue will revert to the State as the result of the amounts paid by two trolley lines and two telegraph companies which use it to bring their wires over to Albany. It is pointed out that even though public service corporations should not be required to pay any more than they do at present, the income derived from the source would be sufficient to more than pay the upkeep and yet provide a balance to be turned over to the State.

Automobilists from other States have raised a hue and cry against the toll charges on the Greenbush bridge and frequently when there have been tours when moments counted, the time lost during which the bridge charges were requested and paid has been material. This of course is but a minor cause of complaint.

A measure similar to the Malone bill has been before the legislature for several years and has passed only to receive executive disapproval. In each instance the explanation was offered that the State could not afford to purchase the bridge.

A RELIC OF THE REBELLION

A. P. Murdoch Finds Medal Which Belonged to His Father.

While looking through an old jewel case recently Mr. A. P. Murdoch came across a solid gold badge of the Iron Brigade, presented to his father, the late James B. Murdoch, M.D., surgeon-in-chief, presented to him by the brigade staff May 1st, 1863. It is in the form of a Maltese cross. On one side is the inscription with the names of the regiments, Fourteenth N. Y. S. M., Twenty-second N. Y. V., Thirtieth N. Y. V. and Twenty-fourth N. Y. V., the latter regiment having been raised in Oswego county, A Company being the first in the State to volunteer. On the reverse side is Iron Brigade and then the list of battles: Falmouth, Rappahannock Station, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Gainsville, Manassas Plain, Chancellorsville, Sulphur Spgs., Groveton.—Palladium.

Low Priced Excursion

Here is a story about a newspaper men, who has since passed to his reward.

It was the elder John P. Sexton, of the Blossburg Advertiser.

The merchants of Blossburg one day got together and decided that advertising was a useless expense, and they would all cut it out. Accordingly every one discontinued their advertisements in the Advertiser, then the only newspaper published in Blossburg.

Mr. Sexton jumped on a train and went to Elmira. He first visited the office of the Erie Railroad and made arrangements for them to run a train on a certain date, in agreeing to pay $200 for the train before it pulled out of the Blossburg station. It was to run to Elmira and return. The ordinary fare was $1.48. Mr. Sexton then went to the Elmira merchants and told them that on a certain day 500 Blossburg people would visit the city on his special train, and would they advertise? You bet they would. He doubled his advertising rate, filled the whole paper and inserted extra pages. On the first page he advertised an excursion to Elmira and return for 50 cents, tickets for sale at the Advertiser office.

He sold the 500 tickets and took in $250 and paid $200 for the train, and had $200 worth of advertising in his paper.

Then he announced that these popular low priced excursions would take place once a month, or oftener, if there was sufficient patronage.

The merchants waited on him in a body and made liberal contracts for advertising by the year, and left large orders for job printing, and the popular low priced excursions were discontinued.

There is no moral to this story, but anyone can see the point. —Canton, Sentinel, (Pa.)

SCIENTIFIC CITIZEN FARMING.

Nowadays, in scientific farming, when we want to learn whether one soil is better than another or whether one kind of fertilizer succeeds better than another, we take good seed and plant it in different sections of our farm and with different fertilizers and try out what conditions and what soil produce the best results. We've been doing this for many years in our cities with our citizen seed, the only difference being that the scientific vegetable farmer proceeds according to the results of his experiment, while our unscientific citizen growers, as a rule, pay no attention whatever to the results and continue to waste more seed, farming along the old lines.—American City.

MUNICIPAL ABATTOIRS.

George H. Shaw of Bureau of Animal Industry Urges Reform.

"In spite of the efforts of the department of agriculture and public spirited persons to bring about reform, the insanitary, uninspected slaughterhouse exists today," said George H. Shaw, sanitary engineer for the federal bureau of animal industry.

"Many have doubtless wondered why an uninspected slaughterhouse is allowed to exist in close proximity to one where government inspection and sanitary conditions are maintained. The answer is to be found in the interstate and foreign clause of the constitution, which limits federal regulation to establishments engaged in interstate and foreign commerce.

"Establishments that slaughter and prepare meats for consumption entirely within a single state are beyond the jurisdiction of the federal government. It is estimated that 60 per cent of the meat supply of the country is federally inspected. Of the remaining 40 per cent a part receives more or less efficient local inspection, while the rest is without any form of inspection.

"The remedy is to be found in efficient state and municipal inspection and in the development of the municipal abattoir system common in Europe. An abattoir of this kind will eliminate the nuisance caused by several scattered, ill smelling and insanitary slaughterhouses, will enable inspection to be conducted at minimum cost and will make possible the utilization of byproducts now usually wasted.

"The bureau of animal industry is prepared to furnish plans and specifications for such central abattoirs and will gladly co-operate and give any possible information or advice with regard to establishing local inspection.

"Already efficient meat inspection systems have been established in various parts of the country, and there is promise that soon the states and municipalities, without adequate local inspection will take the necessary steps effectively to supplement the work of the federal meat inspection service."

Apartment Houses In Africa.

If you approach the continent by way of Algiers you are startled by the vision of a modern city with good railroad service, excellent trolley car system, streets full of automobiles and business and apartment houses that would do credit to an up to date American metropolis.

And Algiers is only the gateway. You take a sleeping car at night and wake up in the morning at Oran, "the Chicago of north Africa." This modern city is developing as rapidly as any western boom town. Your guide takes you out to a district where there was not a house a year ago, and, lo, you are riding down a broad, well paved street with towering apartment houses on one side and a beautiful park on the other. He takes you to the old downtown section of Oran, which was quite as well built as the business section of the average American city of twenty years ago. But this did not satisfy the modern north Africans. They left the old main street and built a brand new city spinal columned by a great row of up to date business houses which would do credit to any city in America.—World Outlook.

An Intercity Committee.

A committee has been formed of three members each of the Paterson chamber of commerce and the Passaic board of trade for the purpose of considering all matters in relation to municipal, state and county affairs that affect the cities of Paterson and Passaic or of Passaic county, N. J.

At its first meeting the intercity committee discussed matters pertaining to the salaries of county officials, the proposed main highways between Passaic and Paterson, the proposed county colony farm and other matters of a like nature. It is believed that the joint committee will prove of considerable value to both organizations.

Gardening For Children.

The International Child Welfare league, incorporated, of which Mrs. Walston Hill Brown of New York city is president, is co-operating with P. P. Claxton, United States commissioner of education, in promoting a plan for the cultivation of vacant city property and rural "dead" soil by the children under the direction of the school.

It is estimated that one-third of the 10,000,000 school children of this country thus put to work could produce an increase of more than $200,000,000 annually.

WHAT A MANUFACTURER HAS TO SAY

"No manufacturer can create his product out of nothing. Labor and materials must come from somewhere. The crude materials may be shipped a long distance—but the labor supply must come from the manufacturer's home town.

"Every manufacturer knows that the quality of his labor and the quantity of the labor supply are big factors in determining the quality and volume of his output. Makers of shoes owe much to Brockton, Mass., because she has housed and trained their workmen. Grand Rapids holds her furniture makers in the same debt because she has developed skillful and efficient artisans. Gloversville, in her public schools, trains her boys and girls in the making of gloves to the infinite advantages of the great glove factories and to the great profit of the young people themselves. Other cities offer exceptional housing facilities, educational advantages, attractive entertainment, parks and playgrounds to the workmen.

"In short, although the manufacturer may pay the workmen, it is the city that enables the workmen to buy health, happiness and contentment with the contents of their pay envelopes.

"No welfare work on the manufacturer's part can supplant the co-operation of the whole city. No one man can see the needs, the ambitions, the troubles, the feelings of a thousand or more men. Welfare work, however, excellent, will be more true and more effective if the entire city intelligently attempts to make every man a citizen in the fullest sense of the word.

"All men are so thoroughly human that impulse governs us more than logic. The unconscious influence of the community makes the ideals, sets the limitations, determines the efficiency, and forms the habits of men. It is worth much to the manufacturer to have the community organized to intelligently supply that leadership which moves toward right ,stability, and individual improvement.

"If the manufacturer still doubts the value of the Chamber of Commerce, let him ask himself. 'How is vocational training (shop practice) to be put into the public schools without the co-operation of the entire city?' The taxpayers will not assume additional burdens, if you hold yourself aloof from their plans. This affair of living in the modern city is a give-and-take proposition. When you hang out the "Men Wanted" sign, you have to take just the sort of men that the city offers.

"To sum up: It is worth while for the manufacturer to have in Fulton an organization that will bring the active, thinking men together to work for better schools, for trade extension, for public markets, for efficient city government, for improved transportation, for better citizenship. Each man is a part of the city—each profits by its development and its stagnation harms all.

"If the manufacturer can induce the lawyer, the banker, the retailer to join with him in the Chamber of Commerce and to work for better schools for his workmen, better entertainments for his children, a better community for his property interests, the dues he pays and the time and effort he gives will be one of the best investments that he ever made."

SOLUTION OF UNEMPLOYMENT.

The problem of unemployment is one of the most serious puzzles confronting the cities of the United States. All winter long there has been a surfeit of labor that has quite choked the labor marts.

Such a condition is doubly unfortunate. It inflicts suffering upon the individual, and it breeds peril to the law and order of the city, for idleness is ever the most fecund procreator of crime.

There are few cities that have not undertaken some plan for the alleviation of the condition. But very few of the larger cities have as yet found any satisfactory remedy.

The smaller cities, however, with a problem far less complex, have, in many cases, done remarkably well. Watertown, N. Y., with its municipal wood pile, is notable for the simplicity and effectiveness of its scheme. With the co-operation of the local railroad authorities several thousand old railroad ties were gathered in and needy men were put to work sawing and chopping. These men were paid $1.50 a day, and the wood so cut was sold for $2 a cord or given to those who could not purchase fuel. The money earned from the sale of the wood was put back into the "unemployment fund" and thus provided the cash to meet the exigencies of the future. — Town Improvement Magazine.

How Red Herrings Came.

The first red herring was accidentally produced in England many years ago by a fisherman who, having a surplus of fresh herring, hung them up in a smoky shed to dry and then forget all about them. When he looked at them some time after he found that they had changed in color. The king, to whom the fishes were presented, was so interested that he gave permission to the fisherman to exhibit them around the country as strange monsters.—London Express.

NEW MUNICIPAL MARKET.

Joplin, Mo., Is Justly Proud of Up to Date Building.

Joplin, Mo., is justly proud of its new municipal market, built at a cost of $86,000 secured by bonds voted by the people. It is a fireproof, re-enforced concrete structure spacious enough to contain twenty-eight booths. These booths rent for $5 to $15 a month. Each one is provided with running water, gas and electric light, all provided by the city.

On the main floor of the building there is a smoking room and rest room generously supplied with current magazines and farm periodicals. The market master's office and the city scales are on the same floor. The market master is a civil service appointee. His salary ranges from $900 to $1,200, according to the amount of business transacted at the market. The market is absolutely controlled by this official, who in turn is under supervision by the city commission. Joplin is now under the commission form of government.

The second floor of the market building is in its way an important local institution. It contains a women's rest room and an auditorium that will seat 500. The auditorium is intended for farmers' meetings or for assemblages of civic bodies. For farmers' meetings no charge is made. City folks who meet there pay at the rate of $2 a night.

Back of the market house is ample parking space for wagons and trucks. This space is also used as an open trading ground. The market plant covers an entire block and is located on the principal thoroughfare of the city. Joplin is a city of 60,000, chiefly supported by lead and zinc mines. The new market has been going only a short time, but there is every indication that it is a whopping big success.

Showers of Meteors.

The most brilliant display of meteors ever seen in the United States was on Nov. 13, 1866. The shower commenced about 11:30 p. m., with the appearance at brief intervals of single meteors; then they came in twos and threes, steadily and rapidly increasing in number till 1:30 a. m., when no fewer than fifty-seven appeared in one minute. The shower ceased about 4 a. m. Other notable star showers occurred on Nov. 12, 1799; Nov. 13, 1833; Nov. 14, 1867; Nov. 16, 1868, and Nov. 27, 1872.

FINANCING CIVIC IMPROVEMENTS

Methods of Assessments and of Excess Condemnation.

THE PROBLEM OF CAPITAL

First Cost of Replanning a City Main Obstacle to Be Overcome—Most Direct Method of Assessing Property Owners Has Distinct Advantages.

The first cost of the replanning of a city is the principal obstacle which has to be overcome, says Frank Koester, author of "City Planning and Maintenance." Although there can be no question of the ultimate worth and almost incalculable value to the city, yet the problem of securing the necessary capital and the proper distribution of the burdens and the benefits to be derived requires careful financing.

While cities like Paris, London and Berlin have spent hundreds of millions of dollars on improvements, they are only able to do it at the cost of considerable additional burdens to the taxpayers, which in smaller cities, though proportionately less, would still be insupportable.

The principal methods adopted are those of assessments, gradually decreasing in extent with the distance of the property from the improvement, and the more recent plan of excess condemnation.

In European cities where excess condemnation is practiced the city purchases by condemnation proceedings not only the land needed for the proposed improvements, whether it be for a street, a park or other purpose, but in addition as much more land as is likely to be increased in value by the improvements. After the improvements have been made the land is held and sold from time to time to the best advantage or it is developed and held by the city for a long period until a favorable opportunity arises for its sale.

Excess condemnation is highly desirable for sites of schools, parks and the like which are in contemplation, as the city may hold the land over a long term of years in advance of its utilization and be saved the high cost of sites whose purchase is delayed until the city is built up. Excess condemnation, however, as a means of paying for the cost of improvements is open to serious objections. The enhancement in real estate values after the improvements are made is seldom more than half the cost of the improvement, besides which there is the interest on the bonds and the loss of taxes that would have been paid by private owners on the land so condemned.

The most direct method of assessing the property owners offers advantages over the excess condemnation system particularly when all the property benefited is assessed, even though it be at a considerable distance from the location of the improvement itself. As the purpose of excess condemnation is simply to enable the city to reimburse itself for the cost of the improvement by the benefits derived therefrom, assessment proves to be a method for large improvements, just as equitable and effective since those benefited pay the sum directly to the city, instead of [illegible] property to the city and then perhaps buy it back again.

Direct assessment, however, is open to many serious objections, for the amounts must be arbitrarily fixed and may and may not prove fair. Further, the property owners must obtain the capital immediately and the amount is thus withdrawn at once instead of being distributed over a term of years as in the sale of bonds.

Experience is necessary in assessing property, since the property owners are entitled to have the burden equitably adjusted and to know in advance what they will have to pay. The assessments should not decrease in direct proportion to the distance from the improvement, but in a more sharply decreasing ratio, the most equitable rate for which should be obtained and applied by those who are called upon to make assessments.

Following are the replies received to date by the New Chamber of Commerce to a question blank sent out during the week.

WHAT IN YOUR OPINION IS THE THING OF FIRST IMPORTANCE THAT SHOULD BE UNDERTAKEN BY THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE TO IMPROVE THE TRADE CONDITIONS AND OPPORTUNITIES IN YOUR OWN LINE OF BUSINESS?

THE ANSWERS:

1. Insist that a city bacteriologist be appointed.
2. That an up-to-date outfit be installed in the City Hospital.
3. Promote a more thorough understanding between the people and the public utilities that they may be regarded as assets of the city, rather than parasites as they are often regarded. I ask this—not because I consider it the most important but rather the most likely to be overlooked.
4. Give us a new city market.
5. The kind of advertising and publicity that will teach our people to "Trade at home."
6. Bring new industries here.
   Advertise the advantages of Fulton; lower the taxes.
7. My opinion is more work for the laboring people, that is the Americans and not the foreigners. Get in closer touch with the farming interests hereabouts.
8. To see that the streets are properly marked so that strangers can find a street without a search warrant.
   To have the grocer stop handling out of town bread. I think if someone would see them that is not interested in baking business they would all agree not to handle it. These out of town bakers are not making it pay; they do not hold one-tenth of the trade, but what they do hold is taking just that much out of Fulton.
9. Bring more industries to Fulton.
   [illegible] a feeling of confidence among local merch[illegible] their own goods. Persuade them to enter into active competition with Syracuse stores. Make it easier and cheaper for persons to shop in Fulton than in Syracuse, New York or by mail.

WHAT AS A CITIZEN DO YOU BELIEVE THAT THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE SHOULD FIRST UNDERTAKE FOR THE GOOD OF THE CITY AT LARGE?

THE ANSWERS:

1. Insist that the City purchase 10 acres of the Tilden farm about springs three and four, remove buildings from same and reforest the same ten acres.
2. Better living conditions and the building up of a desire of outside people to "spend a day in our town" rather than a desire of our own people to get out of town "for one day anyway."
3. Establish a civic center so that people in Fulton and those from the rural communities outside of Fulton may meet on a common ground for business and recreation.
4. Secure a Commission form of Government for our City; see that we have a 6-foot sidewalk on west side of South 1st st. from new post office to Rochester st.
5. Advertise the advantages of Fulton.
6. Buy a site and give it to some good industry that would employ several hundred men.
7. Commission form of government.
8. Secure the co-operation of every citizen in each undertaking no matter what it is. Attempt to create such a feeling of optimism among Fulton residents that they will make enough noise "talking Fulton" to compel the rest of the world to hear. Advertise Fulton and keep on advertising it.

SATURDAY'S WORKINGS IN BANKRUPTCY COURT

At Saturday's term of the Bankruptcy Court an order was granted on motion of Attorney C. E. Guile, representing the creditors of John Hunter, authorizing L. W. Emerick, trustee, to take such steps as may be necessary and proper to convert a judgment of foreclosure and sale of Mr. Hunter's residence at Fulton in favor of the Trust and Deposit Company of Onondaga, into an asset of the estate for the benefit of all creditors. Alexander H. Cowie at first opposed the motion in the belief that it was proposed to have the referee set aside the judgment. Judge Wright explained that he had no such intention, but would authorize the trustee to take such steps in the State courts as were deemed necessary. To this Mr. Cowie did not object. The trust company claims that judgment was entered four months before Mr. Hunter was adjudicated a bankrupt.

John S. Parsons was appointed trustee of the estate of Henry T. Neidlinger, in voluntary bankruptcy. T. A. Ball, D. Page Morehouse and Frank W. Parker were named trustees. A legacy of $4,000 from his mother's estate and $100 in clothing are the only assets. The liabilities amount to $129,284.16. The following unsecured claims were filed today: First National, Oswego, $6,186.98; John Kam Malting Co., $44,919.17; Yorkville National Bank, New York, $27,801.78; William Ulmer, brewery, New York, $8,034.22. Adjourned until March 30.

Louis A. Coulter was appointed trustee of the estate of Josephine Gaines Sheehy, bankrupt, at the first meeting today. The following claims were proved: Edward Halleck, $561.99; Mollison & Dowdle, $20.75; Samuel Anderson, $47.60; Adolphus Cavalier, $976.05; Thomas J. Sheehy, $300. T. A. Ball represents the bankrupt and John C. Henry, T. L. McKay and J. L. Mournighan appeared for creditors. Adjourned to March 30.

NEW YORKER WANTS TO BUY POTATOES

John J. Dillon of the food and markets department of New York city has made inquires at the office of the Oswego County Co-operative Association for prices on potatoes. Sixty car loads of potatoes are wanted, medium size, free from scabs and fungus or cuts—for foreign use.

Members of the association who wish to get in on the deal are asked to notify Mr. White of the quantity they can furnish. The shipment will be made in bulk. As soon as the available quantity is known Secretary White will secure quotations f.o.b. New York. The freight rate from Oswego to New York is nine and one-half cents per bushel.

POLITICAL COMMENT

Here is a proposition: Let all Democratic legislators and other office-holders take their pay out of the $18,000,000 they say is left over from the Glynn administration, but which nobody else can find.

Eighteen million dollars is a lot of money. But this particular $18,000,000 is perhaps just what those Democratic officials are worth— every cent of it.—Brooklyn Standard-Union.

Incidentally, the former governor's quarrel with the constituted executive over ways and means to finance the state is highly presumptious and wholly beneath the notice of Mr. Whitman, who's business is to enforce the finances according to his own best judgment. If Mr. Whitman becomes a party to the dispute he will greatly lower the dignity of his office.—Auburn Advertiser-Journal.

"Instead of a deficiency there will be a surplus of $3,863,503.73 on October 1, 1915."—Gov. Glynn.

Is there any one who is willing to give even $3,000,000 for this surplus on October 1, 1915? No doubt a deal could be made with Governor Whitman and Comptroller Travis. Here is a chance for Glynn to forcibly emphasize what he believes, and incidently make a fine profit.—Brooklyn Times.

This generation has learned its lesson from Democracy as did the last previous generation. The experience of each has been alike. The only difference has been the method of dispensing relief to the persons thrown out of employment by the low tariff policy. During Cleveland's second term the idle patronized soup houses. During Wilson's term they stand in breadlines.—Newburgh News.

What the United States has suffered through this reversal of the economic policy during the operation of which its industries were built up and its wealth increased many fold can, unfortunately, never be really known; but the fact that it has been great is manifested in the condition today of commerce and industry throughout the country. The evidences of wrecked prosperity are to be seen on every hand and they speak for themselves in tones that cannot be drowned by the vociferous apologists of free trade or explained on any other hypothesis than that their existence is the strongest condemnation of the inauguration of the new policy that called them into being.—Plattsburgh Press.

At present William Howard Taft is, in a very real sense, the most aspiring figure in this republic, the logical leader of the growing movement back to sanity.—Baltimore Star.

If the Republican party succeeds next year and its general policy, after the passage of a scientific tariff law, is to interfere with business as little as possible, the United States, freed from legislative meddling with matters that are better left alone, will prosper as never before, and the Democrats will have no chance of returning to power for a long time.—Amsterdam Recorder.

The people have memories long enough to recall the piping days of prosperity. They remember that Protectionists predicted precisely what has occurred to industry if our markets were surrendered. They saw the markets taken over by foreigners long before the European war came to take the blame for all unsettledness in business and for lack of revenue. They are for the policy which opens and enlarges factories. The Republican party is wise and consistent in making the tariff the main issue in 1916.—Watertown Standard.

Billy Sunday is going back to the west side in Chicago. Perhaps he thinks the fans have forgotten the day he failed to run out a hit.—Albany Times Union.

PREVENT OAT SMUT FOR 5 CENTS AN ACRE

The Oswego County Farm Bureau, E. V. Underwood, manager, sends the following information:

"The Bureau is arranging a series of demonstrations to be held throughout the county during the week of April 5th for the treatment of seed oats for smut. This treatment does not cost more than 5 cents per acre, including the labor. In a number of experiments carried on last year, 10 to 18 per cent. of smutted heads were found in fields where no treatment was made.

"The fact that you did not have any smut last year is no assurance that you will be free this year. The spores of the disease are carried in threshing machines and they may have brought it from your neighbor's farm.

"According to the census there were 21,000 acres of oats in the County in 1910. The past year there were perhaps 6,000 acres, free from smut, leaving about 15,000 acres with smutted oats. Allow but 5 bushels increase of treated fields over smutted and it would amount to 75,000 bushels, which at 35 cents, is $26,250.00.

"It is important therefore for us to consider this matter from a financial point of view. Watch the papers for a list of the demonstrations and the dates on which they are given in your locality.

"Near seeding time you will be reminded of the treatment and a full explanation given."

CANAL EMPLOYES COMPLAIN

New York, Mar. 21.—Keen disappointment is felt by the civil employes of the Panama Canal at the failure of Congress to give them a vote of thanks for their work in connection with the digging of the waterway, accordin gto George J. Kindel, formerly Representative from Colorado. He arrived yesterday from the canal zone on board the Panama.

Mr. Kinsel said the employes received with pleasure the news of the honors bestowed upon Colonel Goethals and other officers, but they thought the civil employes should have been mentioned. Mr. Kindel added that he expected to lay the matter before President Wilson.

James Wood, president of the American Society, who returned from a tour of the canal zone, announced that he had arranged for the erection of a Bible supply building at Cristobal, at a cost of $50,000. It will be the largest depot of its kind in the world, he said.

VALUATION OF CIVIC UTILITIES

Public Properties Should Be Estimated by Experts.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP PLAN

With the Growing Tendency of Cities and Towns Toward the Ownership of Public Utilities the Determination of Values Becomes of Great Importance.

By FRANK KOESTER, Consulting Engineer.

With the growing tendency of municipalities toward public ownership of public utilities and especially the tendencies either to take over existing plants or to stipulate rates and charges the determination of the true value of public utilities becomes of great importance. When charges to the public for service are fixed on the basis of allowing the operating company to earn a certain rate of return on its invested capital or on the going value of the concern any improper valuation will act as a fraud on the public, and it is therefore necessary that the valuation be made by impartial experts and in the most thorough and careful manner possible.

Similarly when the city levies taxes or acquires properties or fixes limits or grants authorizations for new issues of stocks or bonds the correct valuation of the property is essential, while when arrangements are made to take over property at the end of a term of years or when adjustments of rates are to be made at fixed periods the methods of valuation should be prescribed and faithfully carried out.

When uniform systems of accounting are prescribed the question of valuation should be settled and a proper basis for the opening of the books of account provided.

Further, in the matter of assessments for purposes of apportioning the cost of public improvements, such as the widening of streets and cutting through of new streets, the question of valuation is of the first consequence.

Valuation, thus a matter of the greatest civic importance, is essentially a judicial matter, consisting in arriving first at as complete a knowledge of the facts as possible and then an equitable decision in the light of the facts disclosed. It is one of the processes of justice and those having charge of valuation should be of a judicial temperament, not likely to be swayed by prejudice and of course wholly above the suggestion of ulterior motive.

At the same time it is very necessary for those in charge of valuations to have ample experience and a thorough knowledge of the numerous devices of corporation bookkeeping so that they may be equipped to ascertain the facts in the case and not be deceived by corporation managers.

In making a valuation for a property and such a valuation as will be fair and equitable, many complicated considerations are encountered. The basis of the valuation must be fixed and three principal methods are employed for this purpose:

The determination of the physical value of the property.

The determination of its earning capacity.

The determination of the value of its good will.

Valuation is a highly important factor in city planning, for in order to proceed intelligently, it is necessary to know the value of the property affected. Although cities are already more or less roughly valued for purposes of taxation, they should, prior to any extensive improvements, have thorough valuations made, including all municipal and utility properties such as public buildings, waterworks, electric, gas and other systems, transportation lines and all public and private real estate.

Cushion Covers Made of Odds and Ends From the Remnant Counters

SILK AND BROCADE CUSHION COVERS.

MANY odds and ends of cretonne, tapestry or brocade may be picked up in the shops. At the sales remnants of this kind are frequently to be had for a trifle. They make handsome covers for sofa or couch pillows. Finished with a little fancy braid or fringe, they are handsome and useful accessories to the furnishing of any room. The pillows illustrated here were fashioned of silk and brocade and trimmed with braid and fringe. They have a decidedly oriental appearance and are of the popular oblong shape.

ORNAMENTAL PINS.

Useful For Holding Down Ends of Fluffy Long Wrist Frills.

A new use has been found for the small ornamental pins which heretofore were employed to fasten the back of the high collar or complete the fastening of the waist front.

The other day, on a smartly dressed young woman attired in a blue gabardine suit remarkable for its correct, up to date lines, were observed deep wrist frills of plaited white linen with hemstitched edge.

To prevent the frills from inconveniently hanging over the hands they were held back against the coat sleeve by means of the aforesaid pins, one of each being placed on the upper side of the lingerie flounce.

How to Test Silk.

Why did your last year's silk split and crack? Because it was weighted. You might have tested it easily before purchasing and saved both money and worry. A bit of the silk and a match are all you need for a sure test. Light the match and apply it to the fabric. If it holds its shape the silk is adulterated with some of the minerals so used. If it melts in burning and runs into a puffy mass the silk is pure.

Rust Stains.

To remove rust stains from steel cover the article with sweet oil, letting it stay on for a day, then rub it with a lump of fresh lime and polish in the ordinary way.

An Effective Retort.

The late Rev. Patrick Watson, vicar of Barnsfield, was a great authority on the Holy Land, and he was also a stickler for accuracy. An amusing passage of arms once took place between him and the archbishop of Canterbury. A committee report was under consideration, and Mr. Watson objected to the wording "removal of Premises" on the ground that the things inside the premises were removed and not the building.

Dr. Temple replied, "I suspect you often tell your wife the kettle boils when it doesn't."

The meeting roared with laughter and passed on to the next business.—London News.

Minority's Power.

"You believe in the will of the majority, of course."

"Well," replied Three Fingered Sam. "it's all right, theoretical; but it won't always work out in practice. I've seen two men hold up a whole trainload of people."—Washington Star.

DON'TS FOR MARKETERS.

Don't buy from any one who uses a dented measure.

Don't run "charge" accounts if you can possibly avoid it.

Don't expect to get the choicest cuts of meat without an increase in price.

Don't deal with any one who objects to reweighing your purchase.

Don't buy from any one whose weights and measures are not officially stamped.

Don't forget that the best way is to reweigh on correct scales in your own home.

Don't let the dealer keep his hand upon a container or a projecting bone while on the scales.

Don't buy twine, trays, paper and fancy packages, but insist upon sixteen ounces net weight in every pound.

Don't let your child, servant or husband do your buying at the store or market when you can do it yourself.

Don't wait until your purchase is wrapped before asking, "How much?" but ask before placing your order.

Don't let your purchase be taken from the scale until you see the exact weight. Then figure for yourself the cost.

Old Newspapers.

Old newspapers form the basis of most of the boxes in which goods are kept in the furnishings stores. When ground into pulp and treated with certain chemicals they furnish an ideal material for the pasteboard used in the cheapest as well as the more expensive grades of boxes.—Argonaut.

SMART EASTER TAILLEUR.

Dark Blue Gabardine Used In This Chic Spring Gown.

WITH SHORT SKIRT.

The tailored suit must be reckoned with in the spring as one of the necessities. Worn with a handsome blouse the tailored frock becomes suitable for an afternoon tea and with a plain blouse can be used for shopping and morning wear. The tailleur shown in this illustration is simple, but built along graceful lines. The skirt is short and gored; the hip length jacket has high placed, simulated pockets bound in braid. The buttons are of black satin, and the collar and cuffs are of blue and white checked pique.

SILK STOCKINGS.

Lengthen the Life of Your Hose by Good Care.

With a little care and attention silk stockings may be made to wear two and even three months. If before wearing they are washed through lukewarm water they become more glossy and also strengthened, as silk takes very kindly to water.

After each wearing, also, the stockings should be washed in lukewarm water and white soap.

If the stockings are white, they should be put in a dark room to dry. Never dry white or colored stockings in the sun. The Japanese are said to put all white silks in a dark closet to dry. This will absolutely keep them from yellowing. The use of hot water, according to those who know, is prohibited in the washing of silks. Also avoid rubbing.

And now as to the wearing of silk stockings. They absolutely must not be worn tight. If the stocking is pulled to its full length and caught at the hem there will be few, if any, "runners" occurring within a reasonable time. Wear your stockings comfortably, not too loose or too tight. One extreme is as bad as the other.

A stocking with a lisle top and foot will wear better than an all silk one.

Choice of a Room In Resting Eyes.

When your eyes are tired try bathing them at night time in a little warm water to which a pinch of boracic powder has been added. Use an eye cup for the purpose.

It is a good plan to lie down in a darkened room for about twenty minutes every day if you can. This rests the eyes splendidly. In choosing your room, if you have weak eyes be careful that it has not too sunny an aspect, and try if possible to have a bedroom with green blinds.

White blinds only serve to increase the morning glare, and if the sun beats down fiercely upon your face from early sunrise not only will your rest be disturbed, but your eyes will suffer as well.

WORTH KNOWING.

Much in demand will be the buttons of brass, silver and steel.

A straight line at the base of the neck is decidedly trying.

Sashes now often mold the hips, but require the greatest care in arrangement.

The braiding on velvet gowns is most elaborate.

Half and half stockings are new and striking. The upper part of these new stockings is in decided contrast to the lower part.

In the coming season there will be a great deal of black millinery braid used, also neutral shades and shades matching the dress goods.

Long trains of white broche metal tissue are used in a detached way on robes of soft white chiffon or charmeuse.

The new blues for spring are powder, sero, artillery and blue gray.

Young girls are wearing the modified Cossack costumes with shorter waist lines.

THE NEW STATE CONSTITUTION—7.

Will County Government Be Neglected as Usual?

It is time that somebody began to take an interest in the county government as a political institution. The cities have had their reformers for fifty years. City charters have been tinkered and patched and rebuilt and new principles tried out and perfected, but until the last five years nobody ever made any attempt to reconstruct or improve the basic organization of county government. There are hundreds of books on the subject of city charters but not one on county government!

The form of government which New York State has is the same as in most of the other States. Among the four thousand counties throughout the country there is not one which claims to be a model or which anyone thinks worth copying. There has been no progress in fifty years and, worse than all, practically no attempt at progress.

County Organization a Joke.

As an example of orderly organization county government is a joke. All the officers are elected independently of each other and are co-ordinated theoretically by elaborate laws. There is no governing body, for while the Board of Supervisors goes through the motions of governing by granting the appropriations it has no power, except on paper to control and direct the expenditure. The County Clerk, the County Treasurer, the Superintendent of the Poor, the Sheriff, the District Attorney, are each a law unto themselves, constituting in effect each a separate government of their own with power to tell all the other officers to go to glory. The county is like an automobile with a separate motor at every wheel, each going its own gait, without any central control.

Under these conditions county officers find themselves in a very hard situation. They are constantly being blamed for matters over which they have no real control. Any man who takes a county office must be prepared for all sorts of unjust accusations. If he tries to do well his efforts may be negatived by the work of some other officer who is not in sympathy with his reform.

It is practically impossible to make a complete diagram of a county government and put in all the inter-relations which are laid down in the county [illegible] other laws, for the lines cross and criss-cross so endlessly that the diagram begins to look like a ball of yarn after the cat got through with it. The county law is an enormous patchwork of successive and conflicting amendments and few county officers have ever been known to read it. The conduct of the successive county officers is really regulated mainly by tradition and no two counties have the same traditions as to the proper conduct of their offices. The average voter hears very little about his county government except at election time when he considers the momentous question of which men shall get the jobs and draw the salaries.

The condition is only partly the fault of the lawmakers at Albany, for the Constitution specifically requires that the various county officers shall be separately elected and accordingly the various county officers are restrained from excesses only by the fear of prosecution by the district attorney or the Governor for transgressing a tangled hedge of legislation.

Control by Litigation.

Control of public officers by cumbersome court process is of course too roundabout to be effective and it is said on excellent authority that no county officer in the state can be found who is conducting his office in strict regard to the written law. The tendency of the public is to be satisfied if the county officials are honest, but easy-going good intentions on the part of transient amateurs in public office is capable of wasting far more money than is likely to be stolen deliberately by thieves. It is not necessary for a corrupt man to get into office in order to rob the treasury, if the man on guard is lax and easy-going enough to give him a chance to do it from the outside.

What attention the Constitutional Convention will give to counties remains to be seen. The least that it can do is to unshackle them; to remove the constitutional fetters that now embarrass all attempts at progress and which now compel the metropolitan counties to have the same form of government as the rural counties. Even a good form of county government ought not to be imposed arbitrarily upon every county in the state regardless of different fundamental conditions.

County government is the very citadel of political bossism and the friends of county reform have only just begun to organize. What they propose to do will be discussed in the next paper.

[This is the seventh of a series of nine articles prepared jointly by the Municipal Government Association, the County Government Association and the New York Short Ballot Organization on questions to come before the Constitutional Convention.]

BUTTERFLIES ON FROCKS.

Combined In Many Designs For Ornamenting Spring Gowns.

SPRING LINGERIE DRESS.

The butterfly motif is used effectively in the decoration of many of the models shown for spring and summer. The pretty frock of white cotton voile here illustrated is embellished with a hand embroidered design in butterflies and scrolls. The skirt has the smart yoke shirred in this case. There is a high frilled collar, with a velvet band to secure it to the neck. The girdle is of black velvet ribbon.

War; Pathos and Humor

A subaltern was marching along with his company, He was very young, and his men evidently thought him inexperienced, so they struck up "A little child shall lead them, lead them gently home." When they had finished he halted the company and said, "Now we'll have that verse over again." Game, wasn't he?

Here is a letter from a British prisoner in Germany. Its authenticity is not vouched for:—

"Dear Charlie: We are having a fine time here, and they do us well. Every night we have a six-course dinner, with champagne, long Corthas, and 65 brandy (free). Our sheets (linen) are changed every night, the bathrooms are the last word in luxury, we are allowed to do what we like, and the Germans are perfectly splendid fellows. P. S.—Your Brother Bill was shot this morning for complaining."

The fame of Tipperary has even reached the Celestial Empire, where the native newspapers are giving translations of the famous war song. The Chinese version and its literal translation follows:—

Shih ko yuan lu tao Ti po lieh li

Shih ko yuan lu tao Ti po lieh li
Yao chien wo ngai tzu nu
Tsai hui Pi ko ti li
Tsai chien Lei ssu Kwei'rh
Shih ko yuan lu tao Ti po lieh li

Literal translation from the Chinese characters:—

This road is far from Ti po lieh li—
We must walk for many days;
This road is far from Ti po lieh li—
I want to see my lovely girl,
To meet again Pi ko ti li,
To see again Lei ssu Kwei'rh;
This road is far from Ti po lieh li—
But my heart is already in that place.

It will be seen that Piccadilly is "Pi ko ti li" and Leicester Square "Lei ssu Kwei'rh.—S. H. P., Tientsin.

Certain manufacturing firms have been very prodigal of their gifts to English regiments and war charities, but they are getting a little tired of it. One well-known manufacturer of typewriters lent to regiments, refugee committees, etc., seventy-one new machines. Since last August the British War Office has bought over 4,000 typewriters, but has not given the firm in question a single order. Naturally they are recalling their machines. They find that most have been badly used.

The war brings many new activities into operation. The latest seems to be the manufacture of Indian sweets for the Indian army. The warriors from the Eastern Empire eat an enormous amount of sweets, and catering for this foible apparently pays.—London Mirror.

A recent visitor to Paris had a dramatic glimpse of the spirit of France. The Madeleine, in complete darkness, shadowed the Rue Royale with its occasional glimmer of light. As he passed, a long procession of men and women, all in mourning, came out of the grey stillness of the church, hundreds of them, very quiet, the men biting their moustaches, the women crying, but all of them eerily still. Instinctively he took off his hat as he stood on the curb, for he felt he was in the presence of a nation's grief. In the gloom of the Madeline's aisles these French men and women had been praying for the souls of their dead and for victory for France. Here was war as they have not yet learned to know it in England, war with all its awful meaning—the death of the young, the sorrows of the old.

He thought he had always understood something of the spirit of France, but on this dreary, drizzling Sunday evening he realized for the first time the full splendor of her character. The stillness of the long line of passing mourners told of courage, of restraint, of sacrifice offered without hesitation or regret. The French have not the English love of adventure or the English love of fighting for its own sake. With the acute consciousness of a realistic people, they have all the time an acute comprehension of what war means. Yet they are fighting with unrivalled courage and patience, and when the soldier dies those who have loved him are glad behind their tears because he has died for France.

DODGERS DEVELOP PUNCH

Dayton, Fla. March 22.—Class was written all over the Superbas in their game with the Athletics yesterday. Instead of crumpling u pas the Dodgers were wont to do, they kept right after the Mackmen and finally won by 5 to 4.

It was by far the best exhibition game played by the Flatbush fusileers since the exhibition season opened. With one run t othe bad in the eighth inning, they opened up on Voltz much after the fashion of last Friday, trying the score and putting over the winning run. Schultz, Cutshaw and Wheat hit safely; Daubert sacrified and Myers and Wheat pulled the squeeze play, scoring the winning run. The same teams will play their last exhibition game tomorrow.

Score by innings:

Athletics..... 0 1 0 0 0 2 0 0 1—4

REGULAR TROUNCED SAN ANTONIO CLUB

San Antonio, Txas, March 22.—The New York Giants fairly smothered the Bronchoes yesterday. The final countw was 11 to 0. On hits alone the Giants would have "cashed" by a large margin, for they certainly warmed up to "Ben" Davenport. The Giants pilfered elevenbases, and of these two were stolen when the batter was Davenport and Haunstein. [illegible] ever seen in the local park came off the bat of Captain "Larry" Dayle, of the Giants. hTere were two on the bases when he hoisted one over the right field fence, far down. This made the score 4 to 0, as one already had counted. After that it was just a case of put on the brakes and let her skid.

The Giants counted five more in the fifth inning on a conglomeration of hits, steals and errors. Ten men faced Davenport in this frame, which accomplished his retirement. One in the sixth and one in then inth finished the Giants' scoring.

Schauer and Schupp were the New York workers. Given some excellent support, the hurlers rocked along in fairly easy style all the way. Twice the Bronchoes bunched a couple of hits, but on neither occasion was the deciding punch forthcoming.

AUSTRIAN

Vienna, via London.—The Austrian War Office today made public the following communication:

"In the Carpathians yesterday there were heavy battles on the front between the Uzok Pass and the Koniecznа Ridge.

"On the night of the 20th hostile detachments attempted to capture by a surprise attack some of our vantage points but were repulsed with great losses. In the morning the Russians renewed their attempts with stronger forces. In some sections the batle continued all day. In the evening all the Russians forces operatifg against our positions on the River San near Smolnik and also at Pigony were repulsed. We captured 1,070 prisoners.

RUSSIAN

Petrograd, via London.—The War Office today issued the following official communication:

"From the middle Niemen the Russian advance continues successfully. On the other parts of the front on the right and left banks of the Vistula and in east banks of the Vistula and in east Galicia there is no important change.

"In the Carpathians considerable success has been obtained in the Svidnik and Smolnik districts, where the Russians secured in several regions the enemy's principal positions.

"The Russians have taken 2400 prisoners, forty-six of them officers and two enemy's attacks in the direction of Uzok and Munkacs have been repulsed.

"Near Przemysl there was energetic firing on the western front. Here the Russians captured the village of Krasinski. All around the fortress the garrison has been driven from the line of its fortifications."

SERVIANS

London.—Resumption of military operations by Austria against Servia is indicated in a message from Nish received here today by the Servian Legation. The telegram follows:

"In an artillery duel near Belgrade on the morning of March 16 our guns showed superiority over those o fthe enemy, whose fire was devoid of result, although artillery of very heavy calibre was used.

"Our artillery destroyed numerous boats gathered at port Afadakale, near Prehava, and sank a pontoon bridge at Orchava.

"The precision of our fire soon silenced the enemy in a slight artillery duel near Smederevo."

ROUND ABOUT

The British Government intends to take over control of the factories in England for the production of war material. The Clyde workers, the Chancellor said, had already taken a ballot in favor of accepting the Government's proposal that their dispute should be referred to arbitrathion and in the meantime had returned to work. As to trade union restrictions which tend to diminish the output, the Chancellor asked that while the war lasted they should be suspended as far as they concerned semi-skilled and female labor, which had been usefully employed in French munition factories. In conclusion, he asked for the co-operation of the labor leaders in dealing with the drink question, which was a most difficult one. In some districts this was very serious and, he declared, was gravely interfering with the amount of output.

What Surgeon General William C. Gorgas calls the most remarkable sanitary commission ever sent from any country will leave the United States April 1 for Servia. That country, overrun with typhus fever and threatened with cholera, which may try, has appealed to the United States and is to be aided with men and money. The American Red Cross has contributed $25,000 and the Rockefeller Foundation an Equivalent amount. Miss Mabel T. Boardman, executive head of the Red Cross fund, says hundreds of thousands of dollars will be needed to disinfect an entire nation, and possibly a continent. The Servian Government has assured the commission of its fullest co-operation.

Miss Violet Oakley, the Philadelphia artist, is painting a great picture of the constitutional convention held in Philadelphia in the summer of 1787, for the new Cleveland Court House. She has taken nothing for granted. She has read volumes about the convention itself, has read many more volumes about the individuals who sat in that famous convention, and has examined the best-known portraits of all the actors in that gathering. She has even crossed the ocean to study the pictorial treatment employed by celebrated artists dealing with similar subjects. The amount labor she has devoted to this new canvas has thus been prodigious.

"A Herald of Progress"

It Is Your Duty Today to Nominate Your Choice of Men as Candidates for Election as DIRECTORS of the New Chamber of Commerce.

Aiming to Make Chamber Truly Representative Entire Membership to Meet in City Hall Friday Night; Will Vote Upon Adoption of New Constitution and By-laws.

Today a communncation carrying three messages has gone out to each of the members of the new Chamber of Commerce. These are its messages:

NOMINATION OF MEMBERS.

With the letter has been sent a ballot for the nomination of directors. This ballot contains the names of the entire membership, and blank spaces in which the names may be inserted of the nine men whom the member desires to nominate. All of the nominees receiving more than four votes will then become candidates for election. The names of these candidates will be printed on the final ballot, the candidate receiving the highest number of votes appearing at the head of the list and the others following in order. This method of election has been followed by Chambers of Commerce in South Bend, Williamsport, Seneca Falls, Kalamazoo and in a number of other places. It has been found to work out equitably in every case and is a result that is based on the experience of a large number of organizations elsewhere.

MEETING OF ENTIRE MEMBERSHIP

A meeting of the entire membership is to be held at the City Hall on Friday at 8:00 p.m. The principal purpose of this meeting will be to submit the new constitution and by-laws to a vote of the members. These by-laws have been evolved from the experience of scores of Chambers of Commerce throughout the United States. They are intended to be as brief as posssible; to present as few limitations as possible; to prompt decisive action by the organization.

At this meeting also the names of the nominees for directors will be announced. There will probably be a speaker from out of town to tell something of the work of organized community effort in other cities.

PROGRAM OF WORK FOR THE COMING YEAR

At each of the luncheons during the past week a question blank was placed at each plate. On this question blank appeared the following questions:

1st.—What in your opinion is the thing of first importance that should be undertaken by the Chamber of Commerce to improve trade conditions in your own line of business?

2d—What, as a citizen, do you believe that the Chamber of Commerce should undertake for the good of the city at large?

This blank will also be sent to each of the members today. On the total number of replies received the program of work will be based. The work of carrying out the wishes of the organization as these replies express them will be placed in the hands of committees and the committees that undertake each line of work will be selected from men who have expressed an interest in that line of work. By this procedure the actual wishes of the organization will be determined. It is practically impossible for any man or group of men, however conscientious, to tell what the entire community actually wants. The purpose of this system is to enable the people themselves to state their desires clearly. By selecting the people to carry out these desires from the men who want to see them carried out their success will be insured.

It is highly important that the members of the Chamber of Commerce express their wishes on these blanks and return them to the Chamber of Commerce at the earliest possible date. The organization of the Fulton Chamber has placed in the hands of the men of Fulton a powerful weapon for the city's good. It cannot be effective unless it is directed in the right channels. It cannot be directed in these channels without the co-operation of every member.

By having the purposes of the organization clearly stated in concise paragraphs it is possible for the executive officer to exercise effective control over each committee as well as the whole body. It

LATE WAR BULLETINS

FRENCH

Paris, via London.—The following official statement was issued by the War Office today:

"On the plateau of Notre Dame de Lorette we hold all the trenches which have been in dispute during the last few days, except one portion ten metres in extent, which remains in the hands of the Germans.

"At Les Eparges the enemy delivered five counter attacks, with the object of recovering positions won by us, but was completely defeated.

"We have made progress to the north of Badonviller."

"To the north of Arras, at Notre Dame de Lorette, a German counter attack on Saturday evening deprived us of some sections of trenches. We recaptured them yesterday.

"At La Boisselle, northeast of Albert, mine warfare continues. After having blown up one of the enemy's galleries we occupied the greater part of the pit formed.

"During Sunday Rheims received about fifty shells.

"In the Argonnes we inflicted two serious reverses on the enemy. Near Bagatelle we blew up three mines and two companies of our troops stormed a German trench, in which they maintained their positions despite strong counter attacks. Five hundred yards from there the enemy, after exploding two mines and bombarding our trenches, attacked a front of about 250 yards. After some very hot hand to hand fighting our assailants were hurled back, despite the arrival of their reinforcements. Our artillery caught them under its fire as they were falling back and inflicted very heavy losses on them."

GERMAN

Berlin, (by Wireless).—An official statement given out today by the German Army Headquarters says:

"A fresh attempt to take the German position on the south slope of the Lorette heights was made last night but resulted in failure. Another French night attack, this time north of Le Mesnil, in the Champagne district, also was without success. Furthermore, all the French efforts to win back the position at Reich Ackerkopf resulted in failure.

"The Russians yesterday were driven from Memel, on the Baltic sea, in East Prussia, after a short engagement to the south of the town, followed by tenacious fighting in the streets. Under the protection of Russian troops a Russian mob looted the private property of German citizens in Memel. Carloads of goods were conveyed across the frontier. A special report on this looting will be published.

"North of Marianpol Russian attacks have been repulsed, with heavy Russian losses. West of the Orgge river, near Jadnorosak; to the northwest of Ciachanow Russian attacks by night and by day have broken down under the German fire. Russian prisoners to the number of 420 were captured."

RUSSIAN

Petrograd, via London.—The following statement from general headquarters was issued today:

"From Memel (East Prussia) to the Vistula and on the left banks of the Vistula there has been no change. Russian troops which advanced from Tauroggen occupied Laugszargen after an engagement, capturing prisoners and engineering stores.

"In the Carpathians stubborn fighting is taking place on the roads toward Bartfeld, in the valleys of the Ondawa and Laborcza rivers, near Lupkow Pass and on the left banks of the Upper San. The Russians have made successful advances. During the last ntenty-four hours we have captured 2,500 men, fifty officers and twenty machine guns.

"In the direction of Nunkacz the Germans in dense formation attacked the Russian positions at Rossokhazo, Orawchik and Kosiuwkawa, but were everywhere repulsed, suffering heavy losses.

"In consequence of the joyful event of the surrender of the fortress of Przemysl the generalissimo, Grand Duke Nicholas, has been awarded the St. George's Cross of the Second Degree and the commander of the army before Przemysl, General Seliwanoff, the St. George's Cross of the Third Degree."

London, Monday, 11.30 P.M.—The mention in the Russian official statement of the decoration of General Seliwanoff as commander of the army besieging Przemyl has caused considerable surprise in London, as it was understood that the Bulgarian General Radko Dimitrieff was in command. Whether he was transferred or removed is not known.

The London evening newspapers print eulogies an dthe picture of General Dimitrieff as "the hero of Przemysl."

"RUBE" SENT BACK TO GIANTS' SECOND TEAM

Marlin, Texas, Mar. 23—Pipe, pitcher, and Holloway, infielder, are two other Giants' rookies who are to be players of the St. Paul (Min) club. Holloway, Glass and Marshall have reported to the St. Paul's training camp, in Fort Smith.

There was to have been a picked game between the regulars and colts yesterday, but a heavy wind and sand storm prevented.

Marquard's showing against the Waco team in Waco did not appeal to the Giants' manager.

U. S. BLOCKADE NOTE WILL CITE CIVIL WAR CASES

Washington, March 23.—President Wilson had under consideration today the draught of a note soon to be sent to Great Britain and France presenting the view of the United States government on the blockade of commerce between Germany and neutral countries.

The fact that the communication would go forward within a few days was stated officially at the White House. No statement of its character was made. Though in well informed official quarters it was understood that strong objection would be voiced against the blockade, on the ground that it was based on no precedent in law or history.

That the attitude of the United States would be the same as that held during the civil war on the subject of blockade was indicated by officials, who suggested that since the recent exchange of notes with Great Britain there had been a popular misconception of the position of the Washington government in 1863. It was said that the attitude of the United States on the doctrine of "continuous voyage" had been best expressed in the cases of the Springbok and the Peterhof, two British vessels captured and taken into prize courts.

The Springbok was captured on a voyage from England to a British port in the Bahamas. She was laden with gunpowder and army supplies. The Supreme Court of the United States, to which the case was appealed, ruled that the apparent destination of the vessel was the Confederate States, and the fact that the vessel was to call at the Bahamas should not alter the continuity of her voyage. The court held that the cargo should be condemned and that vessels which could be proved to be intending to violate a blockade would be intercepted at any stage of their journey.

In the case of the Peterhof and others known as the Matamoras cases, however, a ruling was made on an entirely different set of circumstances, constituting, in the view of officials here, almost an exact parallel with the situation today with respect to commerce between the United States and Holland or other countries contiguous to those at war. The Peterhof was captured on her way from England to Matamoras, Mexico, and her cargo condemned by a prize court. When appealed to the Supreme Court, Chief Justice Chase ruled that the mouth of the Rio Grande was "not included in the blockade of the ports of the rebel States, and that neutral commerce with Matamoras, except in contraband, was entirely free.

The Chief Justice held that "neutral trade to or from a blockaded country by inland navigation or transportation," is lawful, and "therefore, that trade between London and Matamoras, even with intent to supply, from Matamoras, goods to Texas, violated no blockade, and could not be declared unlawful."

This position, officials indicated, might be referred to in the fohtcoming American communication to Great Britain and France, which have declared their intention of detaining "all commerce" whether in contraband or non-contraband.

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

THE PESSIMIST.

I'gets my nanny when I meet a pessimist upon the street, who swings his tongue in plaintive bleat—that's why I write this poem. He sulks along in deep distress, and ever flashes "S O S": he's dead sore on the world, I guess—there's cobwebs in his dome. He's foreign to the sunny smile and thinks that life is not worth while: he's like a cross grained, grating file—with soul devoid of song. He chills the very atmosphere; he puts the jody sign on cheer and wears an everlasting leer upon his visage long. He sees no beauty in the flower; he knocks and grumbles by the hour, his countenance is ever sour—a mirthless soul is he. Say, on the level, do you know? I'd like to slam the cuss a blow and jar him hard from knob to toe—I sure would, bully gee! Why should a man of knowing years go 'round and paddle gloom and tears and add a chapter to our fears, when ev'rything's O. K.? Why should we tolerate the guy who never has an optic dry and does his best to paint the sky a dark and gloomy gray? We ought to send him to some isle and teach him how to laugh and smile and make his joyless life worth while, or chase him off the earth. Our lifetime is so gol darn short we haven't time to howl and snort—we've got to delve in healthy sport and happiness and mirth. I'd like to get my freckled fists tattooing on the pessimistic phizzes—man on the smiling lists—and knock 'em there to stay. The man who doesn't smile, by tuck! is like a bell upon your neck, as worthless as a phony check—away with him, away!

CHURCHES MAKE UP DEFICIT FOR MISSIONS

A deficit of $400,000 in the contributions for missions this year is being faced by the Protestant Episcopal church throughout the country, and urgent appeals are going forth to the laity to meet this condition by increased contributions. One of the ways suggested is for every communicant of the church to give one day's salary.

An appeal has gone forth signed by Daniel S. Tuttle, presiding bishop; the Rev. Dr. Arthur S. Lloyd, president of the board of missions, and Bishop Edwin S. Lines, chairman of the emergency committee, the other two signers being members.

ARBOR DAY IN FULTON

Appeals from the state department are constantly being sent out in the interest of the conservation of forests. The college of forestry at Syracuse distributes phamplets urging a co-operation of communities with the college in its work. Hugh Baker, dean of the Syracusee college of forestry, was heard last winter before the Chamber of Commerce in an intensely interesting talk on the conservation of our forests, and enthusiasm over the results which might obtain by Fulton co-operating with the college of forestry at Syracuse was voiced.

The State annually distributes at the wishes of the people hundreds of youn gtrees without expense to the recipients. The college of forestry will send an experienced man, to any community so desiring, for supervising the planting of such trees In many cases the high school boys do the work under the instruction of the trained man, and really derive a wholesome lot of pleasure from their efforts besides leaving their city amore attractive spot.

The addition of trees and shrubbery to the river banks would be a happy beginning in making Fulton more attractive. The trees and instruction in planting them are ours for the asking. Our boys have muscle and enthusiasm and once the proposition be put to them in its right form the dirt would fly and the trees be put in their places.

Why should we not avail ourselves of an opportunity? Has it been lack of initiative? The time for action is ripe. Arbor day could be made a real day in this city.

Why not let the boys in on our city building now? The issue is a live one for budding citizenship and the civic pride developed through the movement might surprise even the best of optimists.

MOTHER'S PENSIONS

The Mothers' Pension bill comes up Wednesday for final vote. Despite dark hints that "influences" are at work to delay the measure, we have no doubt it will pass by a large majority. It is a good bill. It will be a good law—an danother big step in the right direction.

One of the best features of the law will be its provision that each community in the State shall care for its mothers according to its means. There is no rigid mandate from the Legislature—no dictation as to the amount that shall be devoted to the work of keeping the mother and her children under one roof. Each county will have its own Child Welfare Board. Each county will be required to appropriate money for pensions according to its own judgment of its own need. It is also a wise provision that women shall be well represented on these local boards. So far we have not been able to improve on woman as a guide to matters dealing with children and the home.

More than all else this law will work toward the day when the curse of institutionalism shall be finally lifted. The best institution is a poor substitute for a mother. The worst is a crime against posterity. With this law in force it will not be a long look ahead to the day when no mother will be asked to give her children over to the care of the State because she has not the means to feed and clothe them herself.

It is well, that, that the agitation for turning the administration of the pension funds over to the charity organizations has died away. While there was something to be said, possibly, against the duplication of Machinery, there was more to be said against the idea of declaring even by implication that a mother's pension is in any way a charity. It is nothing of the sort. The State is merely tardily recognizing a long-standing obligation. No mother should feel or be made to feel that a pension is a charity or even a reward.

With a heroism finer than the soldier's she has looked in at the gates of death to bring forth the men who make the State. That the State should life from her the burden of crushing money-need is little enough.—Press, New York.

OUT-OF-DATE LAWS

It is no longer unlawful in any State of the Union for a man to kiss his wife on the Sabbath, but in Maryland an act of 1723 prohibits cooks and even church janitors from working on that day.

In Baltimore a year or so ago there was a great hubbub because the authorities, in response to an unreasonable agitation, attempted to enforce the ancient statute which makes illegal the purchasing of minor articles of necessity or the doing of necessary labor on Sunday. Efforts have bee nmade to enforce it in other parts of Maryland, to the very great inconvenience of many people.

The people's minds must needs be vacuous to be content with no recreation whatever on the day they rest from their labors, but such would be their condiiton did the blue laws rigidly obtain. There has been just so much application of them in Maryland as to get on the nerves of many people, and the result has been the organization of the Anti-Blue Law Association, which will conduct a publicity campaign in that State with the hope of inducing the next Legislature to repeal the obnoxious statutes.

If there happens to be anything in the old laws applicable to twentieth century life, and desirable, it can be left standing, but it is foolish to let laws remain upon the statute books which were ill fitted for a State even when Maryland was wearing its swaddling clothes.—Press, New York.

FARMER LOSES TWENTY HEAD OF COWS

A herd of 20 cows on the farm of David Clement in West Monroe was killed Monday by Deputy Sheriff Curtis of Central Square. The cows were on Saturday condemned by State inspectors who pronounced them victims of foot and mouth disease. A great trench was dug on the Clements farm and into it the animals were thrown. Quick lime was thrown over them.

Sheriff Curtis was at the John G. Burr place near Central Square on Saturday when his forty-three head of cattle were killed and buried. The cows were shot and then thrown into a trench sixty feet long and five feet wide and eight feet deep. The cattle were buried in quicklime.

JAMES DECKER GETS JUDGMENT AGAINST CITY

The judgment roll in the case of James Decker vs. the City of Fulton was filed yesterday and shows that the total amount is $338.65, of which $138.65 is the costs of the action.

Satisfaction of judgment was filed by the plaintiffs in the action of Arthur J. Thompson vs. New York Central Railroad Co., the amount being $3.40.

Opinions

Love Before Duty

The Hon. Josephus Daniels—bless his great, big early Victorian heart—would have the young man marry his choice offhand, though the navy and the United States itself crumbled. Which, if it did not square with his utter lack of perspective, might seem a surprising sentiment in one whose zealous regard for the service led him to abolish the wine mess in the ward-room. Its expression at this time of uncertainty, when the young naval officer may be called upon at any moment to postpone or half forever his nuptials, is at least as reassuring to the country as the contemplation of Mr. Daniels' administration in general.

Uncle Sam needs good naval officers too badly to make life a burden to any of them through silly restrictions against marriage. And young Austin, dismissed after graduation from Annapolis for violation of a rule since discarded, seems particularly deserving of reinstatement. He must 'not be held responsible for the sentimental bath into which the egregious Josephus has taken occasion to plunge that he might splash the nation. Rather must this be attributed to the example set at this crisis by that arch sentimentalist and ranking colleague, Mr. Bryan.—Tribune, N. Y.

Excise Legislation

In 1910 under the last Republican administration thirteen important amendments were made to the liquor tax law designed to strengthen that law and eliminate some of the evils of the liquor traffic and improve conditions in the interest of real temperance and true reform. These amendments have all proved to be a benefit to the people and the State. As soon as the Democratic party came into power under the Dix administration bills were introduced to repeal all of these amendments but they were so popular and effective that it was impossible to do so.

The Republican party is again in power in this State and this is the time and this is the year for the Republican leaders of the legislature to take another step forward and enact wholesome excise legislation which will be a benefit to the people of the State. The Democratic administration has left the State on the verge of bankruptcy and according to the best information obtainable it will be necessary to raise about $18,000,000 by direct tax. This being true it would seem to be a wise policy on the part of the legislature and for Governor Whitman's administration to pass a high license bill at the present session of the legislature in order to make the license traffic pay some of the expenses of the government which it is largely responsible for creating.

The philosophy of the Raines Liquor Tax Law is based on the theory that inasmuch as the liquor traffic directly and indirectly by multiplying vice, crime, and pauperism creates a large proportion of the expenses of the State therefore the business should be heavily taxed so that it will make a fair contribuiton to the state to help pay the expenses of the burdens created from the liquor traffic. When the Raines law went into effect there were about 40,000 licenses in the State of New York. After it had been in effect a short time there were only about 23,000 licenses. This was a reduction of nearly 50 per cent of licenses in the State of New York and this was the greatest step forward in the cause of temperance that has ever been taken in the State of New York. The Raines law closed more saloons and more drinking places by one stroke than all the roving paid lobbyists in the country.

The time has come, however, to take another step forward. The present legislature should enact a law raising the licenses of the State 50 per cent. This would eliminate from 5 to 10 per cent. of the saloons. It would remove the most objectionable class of saloons. It would improve conditions and it would raise five or six million dollars in revenue from the liquor traffic instead of putting this amount upon the farmers and other taxpayers of the State. This would be a step in the right direction and an act of this kind would meet with the approval of all intelligent and right thinking citizens. It would give to the approval of all intelligent and right thinking citizens. It would give to the communities of the state about $3,000,000 and it would give the State about $3,000,000 and it would clean up and improve conditions and advance the cause of real temperance and true reform.

The Lyons Republican appeals to the members of the legislature to take up this question in a serious way and enact some real beneficial wholesome excise legislation that will improve conditions advance the cause of temperance and benefit the taxpayers.—Republican, Lyons.

A PRONUNCIAMENTO

By I. E. HYDE

Oh! Alice; keep quiet one moment,
I'm in work clear up to my knees.
There's washing, and baking, and churning,
And yet you will stand there and tease.

This washing; Oh, mercy! What's in it?
Sheets, shirts, pants, and stockins, and coats.
The way the men work we poor women;
They think we're no better than goats.

And baby; Oh, hush! Donald darling;
For mamma must mix down the bread.
Um-m-m—there, sweetheart, go sleepy;
Your mamma must work till she's dead.

Now, here, Bruce has lost off a button,
The meat must go into the pot,
The bread must be molded for baking;
The water for scrubbing is hot.

If I only had hands by the dozens,
I could soon get the house looking neat.
For I know when Mack comes to his dinner,
He'll talk of his mother so sweet.

Her house was never untidy,
Her dinner was ready at noon.
And then don't you doubt for one moment,
My temper will fly all too soon.

I'll tell him his mother was cherished,
As woman should be by her right;
Not worked, and scolded and pestered,
Until she was looking a fright.

They tell me that men oft' go drinking
Because of harsh words from their wives.
And yet, they claim male sex is stronger,
And should rule the female all their lives.

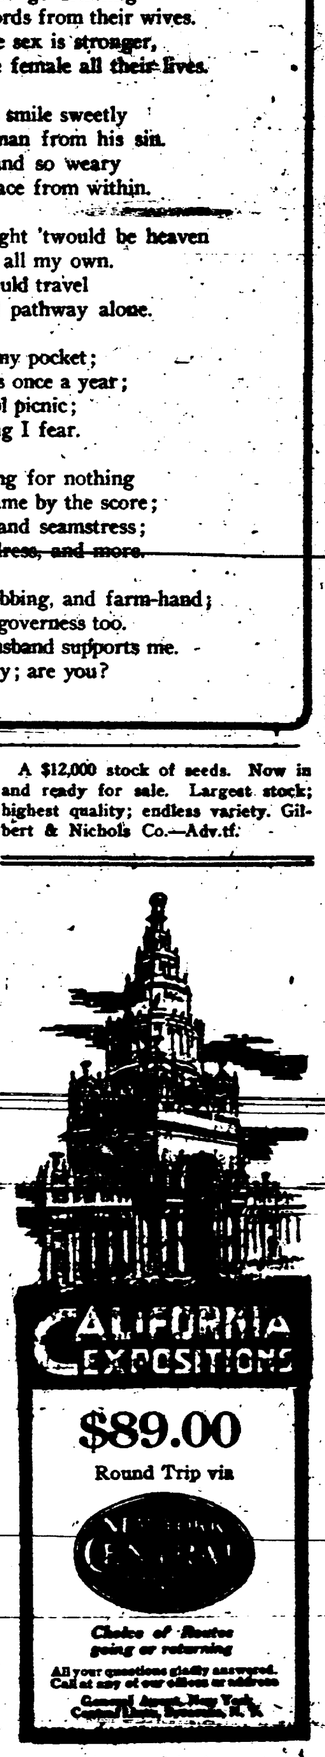
I'm sure we can't always smile sweetly
To keep the poor man from his sin.
We're often half sick, and so weary
We loose all our grace from within.

Before marriage, I thought 'twould be heaven
To work in a home all my own.
But now, Oh, I wish I could travel
Down life's blessed pathway alone.

I'd have a few cents in my pocket;
I'd have a new dress once a year;
I'd go to a Sunday school picnic;
I'd dare to go fishing I fear.

While now, I am working for nothing
At trades I could name by the score;
I'm mother, and nurse, and seamstress;
I'm cook, and laundress, and more.

There's dairy work, scrubbing, and farm-hand;
I'm a gardener and governess too.
And for this, my dear husband supports me.
I suppose I am lucky; are you?



FINDS STRONG NATIONAL MENTALITY IN AMERICA

H. G. Wells, in an article in the English Review on "The Peace of the World," has this to say on America's part in the Great War:

And there has been much in America, much said and much done, since the war broke out that has surprised the world. I may confess, for myself, and I believe that I shall speak for many other Europeans in this matter, that what we feared most in the United States was levity. We expected more excitement, violent fluctuations of opinion, a confused irresponsibility and possibly mischievous and disastrous interventions. It is no good hiding an open secret. We judged America by the peace headline. It is time we began to offer our apologies to America and democracy. The result of reading endless various American newspapers and articles; of following the actions of the American government; of talking to representative Americans, is to realize the existence of a very clear, strong national mentality, a firm, self-controlled, collective will, far more considerable in its totality than the world has ever seen before. We thought the United States would be sentimentally patriotic and irresponsible; that they would behave as though the "new world" was indeed a separate planet, and as though they had neither duties nor brotherhood in Europe. It is quite clear, on the contrary, that the people of the United States consider this war as their affair also, and that they have the keenest sense of their responsibility for the general welfare of mankind.

SUNDAY PREACHES ON CONVERSION OF PAUL

Billy Sunday preached this afternoon on the conversion of Paul. He said:—

I wish to call attention to the relation of Paul'ss conversion, to his teaching and conduct.

The conversion of Saul is one of the most important events in the history of the world. Not a battle has ever been won which brought greater blessings than the battle fought on the road to Damascus between the invisible Jesus and the persecution of His people.

This battle was the first Waterloo of the Christian religion and the forces which were for man's progress, purity and in transforming him into the likeness of God, and making this earth like heaven, triumphing gloriously for the cause of Christ.

Through the conversion of Saul, Christianity received a new impetus. Up to this time (perhaps ten years after Pentecost) many of the disciples were living as reformed Jews. They believed no Gentile could be a Christian except he became a Jew and believed in the law of circumcision.

Just this time, however, a new sun arises. Jesus drew the curtain of night over Judaism of the past and unrolled before us a future which teaches salvation, full, free, perfect and eternal by faith in Him.

Saul is now going to teach the same thing—in a little different form sometimes, but in reality the same thing. Through his teaching churches were to be multiplied in membership by thousands. Men and women were born again by hundreds and thousands during his own life; to his immortal reputation, to the perpetual praise of the God-made Christian, no single life except Jesus' has been so fruitful for good.

Now to state the relation between that man's conversion, which changed him from being persecutor to the most eloquent preacher the world ever knew—changed him from using his muscle to kill to using it to help—changed him from living to ruin souls and bodies of men and women to that of sacrificing his own body and soul for the benefit of the souls of others. Jews, genteles, bond, free, male and female, to show the relation of that change to his teaching and conduct must be profitable to any thinking soul.

They tell us that by studying the history of Caesar we will become enthused over his power; if we study the history of Napoleon we will become thrilled with the genious of that great warrior; if we study the history of Luther we will have our eyes opened.

But what is the study of the conversion of Paul to anyone who gives it diligent and reverent attention but opening the spiritual eyes and arming us for the conflicts of life that we may be able to fight more hopefully, valiantly.

The text brings out all that I want to say: Acts ix., 4. "He fell to the earth and heard a voice saying, 'Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?'

Force Saul's First Argument

Paul started out to convert men by muscle, not by brains. He thought the way to make these renegade Jews (which hec alled those who believed in Jesus) go back to the religion of their forefathers, which he believed to be thee only true religion, was to punish them by the use of muscular, physical, political and ecclesiastical force rather than by appealing to the conscience of the individual or the intellect.

Perhaps some cannot be converted any other way than by force. Paul was one of that class and the Lord overpowered him by physical force.

Jesus said to Paul, "You are going on the puglistic fashion, are you? See how easy I can knock you out."

The Lord never tried to convert any other person that same way. He said to Peter, "Follow me and I will make you fisher of men." To Matthew He said, "Follow me," and he arose and followed Him. To the woman at the well He said, "Go call thy husband." To Bartimaeus He said, "Thy faith hath made thee whole." To the woman taken in adultery He said, "Neither do I condemn thee; go and sin no more."

When Jesus comes to a man who thinks the only way to reach people is persecuting them, He overpowers him, reaches him in his own way—persecute me and I persecute you.

Paul realizes that the Lord is greater than himself, for he asks: "Who are you?"—he sees no one, but a spirit talks to him. The voice from the unseen speaks to him. God used the forces of nature to overpower him, but he sees no man.

Jesus answered: "I am Jesus whom thou persecutest." I am one who used the lightning to knock you down. I am the one who said 'Why persecutest thou me?" After using physical force to get Paul to realize that his method to get people to do what he thought they should do was wrong, Jesus appeals to his reason and his conscience.

In the text He asks Paul to give a reason. Christ wanted to know what He, Jesus, had done, and what His people were doing. In other words, He said to Paul, "You profess to be rational: why then do you act as you do toward them?"

He did not say, "Why do you persecute my disciples?" Paul, you know, had been breathing out threat against the disciples. The question, therefore arises how Paul could be persecuting Jesus by persecuting the disciples.

Vicarious Blow Turned the Tide

I walk down the street, a boy provokes me and I turn around and slap him. Some irate woman comes up and says, "Why did you hit me?"

You'd be surprised, wouldn't you? If she would say, "What did you hit my boy for?" you'd not be so surprised; but of she would say, "Why did you hit me?" you'd beg her pardon, and say you never saw her.

Suppose she would answer, "Hit me, hit my boy," you'd ask, "Why, how is that—I cannot see how hitting your boy I hit you?"

What answer do you think she'd give? Paul had that same question put to him on the road to Damascus. It turned him from being a persecutor into a blessing in this world.

Jesus, whom he had not seen so far as we know, asks in the words of the text, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?"

Jesus had gone into heaven before Paul began persecution. Don't you think Paul might ask, "Why does He say that? I never saw Him! I never tried to put Him in prison. I thought He was dead."

If you will give me the answer Paul would find to that question. I will guarantee to give you everything Paul taught, in the way he taught. I will teach you why he did this way and why he did that way; I will give the key to his conduct as a missionary; I will give the key to his quarrel with Peter at Antioch.

It's the light that illuminates his whole life. God gave that revelation to Paul on his journey to Damascus. Paul developed it under the guidance of God. I believe that Paul got the revelation that governed his teaching and moulded his whole life in this one question and the answers God led him to give.

Christ and Disciples One

The first answer that is possible is Christ and His disciples are one. No other possible answer could be clearer. If Jesus and His disciples are one, then persecuting the disciples is persecuting Jesus.

"For ye are dead and your life is hid with Christ in God. Know ye not that your bodies are members of the body of Christ?"

One of the great things that Paul teaches is that Christ is the head and the believers the body. Different believers are different parts of the body. One is ... one a limb, a thumb or a finger.

"But I would have you know that the head of every man is Christ, and the head of the woman is the man, and the head of Christ is God." How can that be? Christ and you are one.

Go through the Epistles and take out every verse that teaches the union of Christ with the believer. That's the great central truth. All thoughts like the planets revolve around it. Apply that to your life and it will make you a new man or a new woman and turn this old wilderness of woe into a paradise of beauty. Ignore this and you ignore the teaching of Paul and of Jesus Himself.

"Let not sin reign in your mortal bodies that ye shall obey the lusts thereof."

"When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall we appear with Him in glory."

The second answer: The disciple is in Jesus. If I am in a house it cannot burn me if I stay in it unless you burn the house, too. You cannt burn the house without burning me.

Jesus likened it to a garment: "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ; make not provision for the flesh, to fulfill the lusts thereof."

He is the garment that covers me—can't say I am not well dressed. If I have on Jesus I am dressed in the best heaven affords. "Put off these, anger, wrath, malice, filthy communication; put on therefore as the elect of God, holy kindness, meekness, humbleness of mind.

If I have on the new man I am ready for the banquset of heaven. Can't look at me and say I am a sinner. "Put on the whole armor of God."

"There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus."

Believer and Christ One

The third answer is Christ in the disciple. The disciple and Christ is "There is neither Greek, Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision. For me to live in Christ—to die is gain." "My little children of whom I travail in birth until Christ be formed in you." "That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith." "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me."

Christ moves my hands, my tongue, my eyes, my ears and my feet. My teaching is His teaching—my conduct is His. My life is the manifestation of the Christ life in me.

You cannot think of any other answer. Take these three things from the teachings and you have little left. This shows Paul got his in the revelation Christ gave him on the road to Damascus. He never forgot the question of the text.

Another thing—Paul meets Jesus in Damascus, among the heathen, converted on the highway not the Holy Lands, not Jerusalem. This harmonizes with the teaching that Jesus is a spirit.

What a revelation it was to Paul that he did not need to go to Jerusalem to worship, that Jesus was with him in the Philippian jail, on the island, in the shipwreck, on Mars Hill, when he was bound with fetters in Rome. "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation or distress or persecution, or famine, or nakedness or peril or sword?"

"For I am persuaded that neither death nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus."

"Our fathers worshipped in His mountain, and ye say in Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship."

"Jesus saith unto her, woman, believe me, the hour cometh when ye shall neither in this mountain nor yet at Jerusalem worship the Father.

"Ye worship ye know what; we know what we worship—for salvation is of the Jews.

"But the hour cometh and now is when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in Spirit and in truth, for the Father seeketh such to worship Him."

"Cannot Rob Me of Truth"

You may take away my Bible, but you cannot rob me of its truth. Jesus is everywhere.

Note the relation in Paul's teaching to that of Jesus. A certain class is saying: "Let us go back from Paul. I cannot understand Paul; he was an extreme Calvinist; he's self-opinionated and harsh."

"Well, where will you go—to Jesus?"

All right. I'll go with you. Come on; what do you find?—the Christ of Paul, the Christ of the four Gospels—Christ—Paul.

Go to the Christ of Matthew; read the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew. You'll find the same Christ in Matthew that you do in Paul. Find the same teaching in Matthew that you do in Paul. Haven't gotten one step from Paul.

Go to the Christ of Mark; read the third chapter, verses 31 to 33 inclusive. Haven't gotten one step from the Christ of Paul.

Go to the Christ of Luke. What do you find? Rea dLuke, the tenth chapter, 30 to 37 verses.

Go to the Christ of John. What do we find? Haven't gotten one step from the Christ of Paul.

Instead of getting away from Paul's teaching got the same thing only in a little different form.

Another thing, Paul unites capital and labor. Paul takes capital and labor by the hands. Says to capital: "You treat labor fair." Says to labor: "You treat capital fair."

Philemon was a Christian of Colosse. Onesimus worked for Philemon. He robbed him and fled to Rome. Became converted through hearing Paul preach. Paul sent him back with this letter to Philemon.

"I beseech thee for my son, Onesimus, which I have begotten in my bonds; which in times past was unprofitable, but now profitable to thee and me; whom I have sent again. Thou therefore receive him, that is mine own bowels. Whom I would have retained with me, that in thy stead he might have ministered unto me. But without your mind I would do nothing. Receive him not now as a servant, but above a servant, a brother beloved, especially to me, but how much more unto thee, both in the flesh and in the Lord. If he hath wronged thee or oweth thee aught put that on my account; I will repay it."

Paul Solves Foreign Missions

Another thing. Paul solves foreign missions. The heart is what God looks at when He writes His judgment, not according to the flesh.

In Christ there is no such thing as rich man, poor man, society woman or maid, wise man or unlearned, millionaire or pauper.

The coal mines were as dear to Wesley as the halls of Oxford. Africa was as dear to Livingstone as the Highlands of Scotland.

You here, we yonder, one in Christ. This will break down national animosity when we see Jesus as a Spirit, moving everywhere.

Take this thought home with you: Jesus is one with you. The moment you trust Him it will break down the walls that separate you from others. It will flood your soul like the sun lighting up the crest of an eastern hill, spilling over into the valley.

I am so happy in Jesus
From sin and sorrow set free;
So happy He is my Saviour,
So happy Jesus loves me.

I heard the voice of Jesus say,
"Behold, I freely give
The living water, thirsty one.
Stoop down and drink and live"
I came to Jesus and I drank
Of that life-giving stream;
My thirst was quenched,
My soul revived,
And now I live in HIM.

PICTURE OF "MRS. DUDLEY," THE FRIEND OF MANUFACTURER MAYO, FOUND IN ROOM OF MISS COOK, SELF-SLAIN GIRL

These pictures of "Mrs. James Dudley," friend of Virginius J. Mayo, and two of the three children she has in the Mayo house in Brooklyn, N. Y., were found in the room of Miss Lillian May Cook, at the Young Women's Christian Association, in New Haven, Conn. The picture of "Mrs. Dudley" is the first real one of her to be found. Miss Laura Cook was asked how it was that her sister, who ended her life in New Haven and thus revealed several hidden chapters in the life of Mayo, happened to have "Mrs. Dudley's" photograph. She said that Lillian always believed "Mrs. Dudley" to be a good friend of hers. "And I know she is our friend now," she added. "I shall continue to think just as much of her despite the disclosures."

BONFIRES GOOD STREET CLEANERS

This Is Opinion of Commissioner Stevenson; Cheaper Method Than Breaking Ice

At last night's meeting the Board of Public Works took up the matter of street cleaning with Commissioner Ramsey. Chairman Stevenson stated that he believes a cheaper method of removing ice now almost two feet thick in some city streets should be devised. He suggested building great bon-fires in Cayuga st., hiring a man to carry fuel and watch the sparks. "Your force is too large now" said the chairman. "I think this other method would be cheaper and a great deal more effective.' The same method has been tried in Syracuse.

Commissioner Rumsey did not agree to the idea as he thought the practice would prove dangerous, but said if directed he would try it out. No directions were given and the meeting closed with the board practically agreeing that while many sections asked for improvements there is not enough money on hand at the present time for any purpose than the proper care of the main thoroughfare.

After hearing several general complaints from citizens and referring them to the proper bodies for redress the commissioner audited bills drawn against the following funds:

Sewer fund	$17.26
Lighting fund	975.55
Sprinkling fund	10.57
Improvement fund	86.41
Water fund	461.80

The following resolutions were presented and passed: Resolved, that permission be and is hereby granted to Anna E. Schem to make changes and alterations to the curbing and pavement in 1st st according to map hereto annexed and made part hereof. Such changes to be done at expense of Anna and E. J. Schem under the direction of the City Engineer. Carried.

Resolved, that the Massaro Mfg. Co. of Fulton be and hereby is granted permission to build and maintain one bridge across Walt st and the old canal connecting the factory and the True Bros.' mills according to plans filed with the city clerk. No structure or supports in connection therewith to be constructed or maintained outside of property lines. The Massaro Mfg. Co. to indemnify the city of Fulton for all loss or damages that may be caused by reason of the erection of said structure. Carried.

Floyd S. Spangle, attorney for Hatty Hill, appeared before the Board. The matter presented was a claim for property damage on account of change of grade. The Board referred this matter to City Attorney George M. Fanning.

The new appointee to the Board, A. W. Wiltsie, was not present. Commissioner Stevenson presided and Mayor Fox and Commissioner Garrett were interested isteners to the proceedings.

INDIGNATION MEETING

Cayuga Street Being Cleared of Ice—Supt. Rumsey Handicapped.

This morning about thirty merchants gathered in Cayuga street and held an indignation meeting over the mass of chopped ice from which the street is being cleared. Here and there signs were stuck upon the heaps bearing the caution "Watch your step."

Superintendent Rumsey is handicapped in the work by not having enough teams and men to do the work. Opinion was freely voiced among those at the meeting that had the effort of the teams and men at work on the outskirts of the city been concentrated upon the business section until the work be completed it would have been wiser.

The curbstone orator has vouchsafed many opinions on the perplexing situation, but the fact remains that Supt. Rumsey is doing the best that he can possibly do with his limited number of helpers. The one main idea, however, is that some one busy themselves to help our street superintendent. Help is usually more efficient than blame.

OLD BRIDGE SOON TO BE REMOVED

Samuel Rosoff, of New York city, who has the contract here for filling in the old canal, appeared before the Board of Public Works last night and gave notice to that body that he had about finished with the filling at the south end of the city and that he would commence work at the northern end, back of the gun works, next week. He stated that if the city contemplated constructing any sewers in that vicinity they should do so without delay as he would not want to be held up by the city's work. He also stated that the entire bridge over First street would be removed within six weeks provided he meets with no difficulties.

OSWEGO Y. M. C. A. TO GIVE CIRCUS

Seventy-five young men and boys in Oswego have been in training for the big circus to be given at the Y. M. C. A. Thursday and Friday evenings. Clowns, rough riders on blooded animals, pantomime, etc., will make an interesting program.

Boy Scouts will give demonstrations of the many things they have learned under the training oftheir scoutmasters Wheeler and Hebrlein.

SENATOR HILL'S ESTIMATE OF SPEAKER SWEET

The following is taken from the Lestershire-Endicott Record, owned and edited by Senator Hill:

Efficiency, competency and economy are the striking political virtues practiced by Speaker Sweet of the lowerb ranch by Speker SweetK Oo lower branch of the New York Legislature and in his treatment of these fundamentals of government, with which he has wide familiarity, one judges by his every word and action that his sincerity and determinedness of purpose are of the heart and not merely of the head.

The speaker's sterling worth as a man and a leader of his party has already been given the acid test of good performance under trying conditions and in the face of obstacles that might have proved insurmountable for others. He is standing hard by the governor in the carrying out of party pledges. Sometimes his friends differ with him in non-essentials, but never in principle. His diplomacy brushes aside petty annoyances that always come to a speaker of the House. He is big, and broad, and fair to all. He is a partisan, but not one whose character is stunted by his beliefs and his perjudices. He is back of every man who desires good, honest, efficient government and if he and Governor Whitman do what they want to do, and accomplish what they are working with mind and heart to do, the people of the Empire State will be great gainers.

Seven Experts Said It Was Right

BEFORE this PRINTZESS suit, or any of its companions came to us, it had to pass under the scrutiny of seven experts. At seven different stages of its progress it was turned over to these men—they examined it for the slightest imperfection, for the smallest indication that it would not be turned out exactly right. They consulted the designer, the cutter, the tailor, the presser. Small chance for even the smallest error to pass—and all done in your interest—that you might not suffer the vexation, the delay, and the disappointment of finding the one garment that you liked and wanted, imperfect and unfit for wear. That's why we want you to know PRINTZESS suits and coats more intimately. The more you know about them, the higher regard you'll have for them. Come in and let us explain to you some of the things that make PRINTZESS suits better.

GERMANS WILL EVACUATE ANTWERP MAY 1 AND ENTRENCH ON MEUSE

Line for Final Stand Selected; Army Instructed to Conduct Retreat Without Devastating Country

Amsterdam, March 23.—Exclusive news which reached here from a most authoritative quarter indicates clearly that the Germans intend to evacuate Antwerp by May 1. They will intrench directly from the Yser to the Meuse, where they expect to make their final stand in Belgium.

The German Intelligence Bureau recently has been exceptionally active in in Belgium and France and has sent to main headquarters exhaustive reports about the strength of the Allies all along the line, with the view to making it understood in Germany it is futile to resist their pressure.

Plans for an elaborate defence of Antwerp recenty were given up because it has become obvious that Antwerp will be of no use to the Germans unless they violate Holland's neutrality, and the violation of Belgium's neutrality had results calculated to cause the Germans to pause before violating that of another country. All the German commanders in Flanders and Antwerp have been warned to be continually in readiness to leave their posts at thirty minutes' notice. The German troops have received instructions not to destroy anything on their retreat if the Belgians are willing to let them retreat unhurt.

PRZEMYSL RESISTS GUNS FOR 185 DAYS

Paris, March 23.—The siege of Przemysl is the fifth longest siege that has occurred in the last 136 years having been surpassed in duration only by Gibraltar, Sebastopol, Vicksburg, Richmond and Port Arthur. The important sieges durin gthat period of time have been:—

1779-81.—Gibraltar, 3 years, 7 months, 12 days. Relieved.
1856.—Sebastopol, 332 days. Capitulated.
1857.—Delhi, 131 days. Relieved.
1857.d—Lucknow, 149 days. Relieved.
1862-63.—Vicksburg, 186 days. Fell.
1864-65.—Richmond, 287 days. Evacuated.
1870.—Metz, 134 days. Capitulated.
1870-71.—Paris, 135 days. Fell.
1877.—Pleyna, 144 days. Fell.
1899-1900.—Ladysmith, 120 days. Relieved.
1905.—Port Arthur, 241 days. Fell.
1912-13.—Adrianople, 155 days. Fell.
1914-15.d—Przemysl, 185 days. Fell.

For 185 days Russian troops have been hammering at Przemysl and Russian heavy guns have roared their defiance at the defences of the Galician fortress, which has been likened to Metz as regards its stratgetic value.

By September 20 the Russian lines entirely invested the fortifications. From that time until October 2 there was practically an unbroken bombardment. On September 28 desperate fighting was reported along the outer circle of forts, and on October 2 two of these forts were taken. A demand was sent to the commander of the defences, under a flag of truce, summoning him to surrender, but this was refused. On October 5 the attack reached its height.

The first intimation of danger the Austrians had was when the Russians began tumbling over the walls of one of the outer forts. The garrison was driven back into casemates, where the Russians followed them. Hand to hand fighting of the most desperate character ensued, which left the invaders in possession of part of the outer ring defences.

Heavy artillery was now brought up by the Russians for the reduction of the main defences. The Austrians made desperate efforts to bring up sufficient troops to raise the siege, while the Russians redoubled their efforts to storm the positions before help arrived. Assault after assault was delivered, and, according to German estimates, more than forty thousands Russians fell in the attempts, which were unsuccessful in the main, although many of the outer forts fell.

Although there have been several reports recently that the surrender of Przemysl before the announcement of its surrender was that the Russian attacks were infrequent that the the defenders had little to do.

With the fall of Przemysl the only important fortified town in Galicia which is still in the hands of the Austrians is Cracow, in northwestern Galicia, close to the German border.

In the early days of the war the Russian offensive campaign, as outlined unofficially, contemplated the invasion of Germany through East Prussia, on the north, and simultaneosuly into Silesia from Galicia. The Russians succeeded in penetrating Galicia, but the success of the Austrians in holding Przemysl and Cracow blocked attempts to invade Germany across the Silesian border.

CHINA RESISTS GERMAY'S ATTEMPT TO CAUSE BREAK

Paris, March 23.—The following statement is issued by the Minister of the Chinese Republic:

"As my attention has been calledto the reported interference of Germany in China and to the journey of the German Military Attache to Mongolia, I have requested the facts from Peking. Having found the people usually sympathetic toward China, I venture to submit the facts for publication.

"When hostilities between Great Britain and Japan and Germany began, in order to facilitate the military operations, China defined the war zone. After the fall of Tsingtao the government proposed the abolition of the zone and sent a communication to the Japanese Minister. This matter is China's duty to settle.

Having no connection with Germany, China will not allow herself to be influenced by Germany in any way to compromise her cordial relations with Great Britain and Russia and never will be duped to the detriment of her own interests.

"When the Chinese Foreign Minister was informed by the Russian Legation that the German Military Attache was travelling in Mongolia and intended to blow up the Siberian Railway he protested to the German Minister, asking for explanations. The latter wrote that the Attache, as an officer, long since had gone to the front.

"At the same time telegr[illegible] sent to the Mongolian anthorities to watch the traveler secretly. The Chinese government will not tolerate these reprehensible acts, and the inquiry is being continued.

"Following the occupation of Takienlou by a portion of the mutinous troops on the frontier of Szechuan a force was sent to retake thhe town. Afterwar they returned to the cantonment and never assembled. On the Thibetan frontier all foreigners are safe, as reported by the British Vice Consul. A newspaper rumor that the German Minister instigated the movements of these troops is false.

"Negotiations continue on the Japanse demands. The Chinese goverenment concedes the points concerning the South Manchuria lease and Port Arthur. The increase of the Japanese forces in Shantung is confirmed, but the Japanese Minister asserts these troops are to replace the garrison.

(Signed) HOU WEIH-TEH,
Chinese Minister in Paris."

SEEING N. Y. AT THE QUIRK

A trip to New York is one of the most enjoyable feature pictures ever presented in Oswego. The audience is taken direct to the great metropolis, the greatest city in the world, and while supposed to be seated in the sight seeing yacht is taken around the island of Manhattan, seeing everything to be seen from the Statue of Liberty to the ocean liners and war ships. Then the audience is supposed to be seated on the sight seeing car or rubber neck wagon and is taken through the principal streets and parks of New York, seeing the principal buildings and bridges together with many special events which are laughable. Some of the scenes witnessed keep the audience in a roar of laughter. They are then taken across the Brooklyn Bridge to the Brooklyn Navy Yard and back thru Central Park.

Garland Gaden, who explains to the audience the details of the trip, has often been seen at the Richardson theatre as leading man with prominent attractions.—Oswgo Times, Mar. 22.

MRS. LENA M. HORR

Mrs. Lena M. Horr for the past twenty-six years a highly estemmed resident of this city, died at the family home, 253 W. 1st st. last evening, aged 46 years.

Mrs. Horr is survived by two sons, Frank and Henry, of Fulton and five daughters, Mrs. Pearl Hostler of Syracuse; Mrs. Jennie Plummer, Mrs. Florence Kane, Miss Blanche Horr and Miss Nina Horr, all of this city. One brother, Henry Halstead of Syracuse and four sisters, Mrs. Duseler and Mrs. Lucas of Baldwinsville, Mrs. Bradley of Phoenix and Mrs. Nora Horr of Port Byron, also survive.

is possible to obtain an effectual trial balance of what the organization is actually doing. The planks of the program are placed as debit items which must be met. The work of the committees (in this case they were sub-committees of the general committee) appear as credits. The "checking-up" was done at regular intervals—quarterly, and yearly. When a plank in the program showed no credit item opposite (no committee accomplishment) it was a signal of inefficiency. The "weak spots" were made painfully prominent. Instead of following the old custom so general among commercial clubs, of eternally boasting of achievements never accomplished, this western organization deliberately sought out its weaknesses and held them up to examination. A failure that is KNOWN is the foundation of success. The wonderful record of that unique organization proved the value of its new policy.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

Albany March 23—Improvements to the amount of over four millions of dollars are now being made under the supervision of State Architect Louis F. Pilcher. The improvements which the State is to make as soon as the preliminary steps have been taken are not included in the work already under contract.

In the city of Buffalo an army for Troop "I" is under construction, the cost of the work being $130,000. Additions to the Buffalo State Normal School costing $369,000 are olse being built.

At Farmingdale, Long Island, structures for the new college of agriculture are being erected at a cost of $300,000. The necessary buildings include a power house, a asronomy building, a domitory, a residence for the directors, a sewage disposal plant and a water supply system.

Extensive improvements to the Manhattan State Hos[illegible] Island when completed will [illegible] many hundreds of thousands of dollars. At present a reception hospital is being built at a cost of $150,000; a nurses home at a cost of $110,000 and a patients building at a cost of $175,000.

Seven cottages, a hospital, a power house, a water supply system, a sewage disposal plant and other improvements at the Bedford Reformatory for women will aggregate $400,000.

The New York Training school for Boys at Yorktown Heights is being added to by seven cottages and a power house. These improvements will necessitate an outlay of $150,000.

The Middletown State Hospital at Middletown, Orange county is being supplied with a new power house, the expense being $25,000.

Over two hundred thousand dollars is being expended to add a patients building and an electric plant to the Binghamton State Hospital at Binghamton.

In Albany, Troop "B" the local cavalry company is being supplied with an armory. The appropriation for the building is $125,000. The contractor to whom the contract was originally given was unable to complete the building under the appropriation and the work was given to another builder.

Extensive improvements are under way connected with Great Meadow prison at Comstock. Here a new power house, cages, connecting corridors, a laundry, a bath house, a mess hall and kitchen and a south wing are nearing completion. These improvements will aggregate approximately $600,000.

At the Romes Costodial Asiyum at Rome, a patients building is being constructed. The work will cost $130,000.

Other work under contract include the construction of a hospital and patients building for the Newark Custodial Asiyum. The appropriation for these improvements is $180,000. At Letchworth Village, Thiells, four cottages to cost $160,000 are under construction and at Hudson, two additional cottages are being added to the buildings of the Hudson Reformatory. The cottages will cost $130,000 when completed.

A new heating plant is being constructed for the Ogdensburg State Hospital. The cost of this work is $40,000.

In addition there are many small contracts which aree being carried out by the State affecting institutions in diverse localities. Some idea of the enormous outlay of money which the State is called upon to make may be obtained when it is remembered that it has hundreds of thousands of indigent and mentally and physically ill to care for.

FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE

How to Know It and What to Do

At a mass meeting held in the court house in this city and attended by prominent men from nearly every part of the State the following facts and suggestions were prepared by the information committee.

Foot and Mouth Disease is an infectious and communicable disease which attacks cattle, sheep and swine. The eruptions occur in the mouth, on the udder and feet. These eruptions consist of blisters varying in size and containing at first a clear liquid which later becomes grayish in color. As the disease progresses salivation increases. The saliva is frothey and tends to form long tenacious threads. There is often a smacking of the lips or grinding of the teeth when one enters the quarters of an infected herd.

Foot and Mouth Disease ordinarily has a short period of incubation and runs a rapid course. There is very little, if any, immunity following the disease. Cattle frequently suffer from the second and occasionally the third attack within a few weeks.

The virus of Foot and Mouth Disease is known to bepresent in the liquid of the blister. It is transmitted directly from diseased animals to others with which they come in contact. The virus is spread indirectly by escaping from the diseased individuals to the littler, stable floor, manger, pasture, forage, drinking water, highways, railroad cars, etc., as well as on the hands, clothing and shoes of attendants.

Man is attacked with Foot and Mouth Disease occasionally but fortunately not often; to children of tender age the disease may be fatal. The most common source of human infection is the drinking of raw or improperly pasteurized milk from diseased cows.

Every person should do all in his power to assist the authorities in enforcing the general quarantine against the disease. The disease will continue to spread and the quarantine will continue to limit farming business so long as carelessness and indifference continue. This applies especially to those living within and adjacent to the quarantined districts. The eradication of the disease depends upon the enforcement of these precautionary measures to prevent the spread of the virus and the setting up of new diseased areas.

No farmer should bring into his herd any animals that have recently come from a territory under quarantine or that have been shipped in cars that might have been infected. Infected animals may carry the virus for some months.

[illegible] not buy hay or grain that came from the infected districts just before or just after the disease appeared. Every farmer living near the quarantined districts should keep close watch to prevent dogs, cats and even birds that might have come from infected premises from coming in contact with his animals, or even on his farm. Every farmer should for the purposes of self protection hold his animals as if in quarantine.

The use of disinfectants in and about the stable is advisable. It is recommended that some receptacle containing a disinfectant solution be placed at all doors leading into the stables and that persons entering same be required to disinfect their shoes or boots when passing in and out. As an extra precaution, disinfectants may be placed at the farm gate or entrance to the premises for those who might visit the stables. A barrel cut so it will hold three or four inches of disinfectant solution makes a very satisfactory receptacle. For disinfectants the following are recommended:

A five per cent. solution of pure carbolic acid (seven ounces to one gallon of water).

Chloride of lime, U. S. P. strength (thirty per cent. available chlorine), one pound to three gallons of water.

Formaldehyde, one quart of forty per cent. solution to five gallons of water.

A three per cent. solution of cresol compound, U. S. P. (four ounces to one gallon of water).

If necessary to bring animals to a farm, walking them through disinfectant and even sponging the coat with the same would be adviable. It will be necessary to disinfect the feet of horses owned upon the farm when returning to the farm. In fact let the free use of disinfectants become a farm and neighborhood watchword.

The financial loss from a visitation of this dread disease is not alone to the live stock owner. The State of New York is dotted with cities and villages to a very great extent dependent upon the live stock interests surrounding them. It is a New York State danger and can be prevented by a thoroughly aroused and united action. Sentiment, prejudice and indifference will stagger the State with the losses involved. Care and attention to precautionary measures will check the present ravages and eventually eliminate the disease.

BURCHIM ESTATE HAS NO SUIT YET

Letters of administration were issued in Surrogate's Court yesterday on the estate of William Burchim, who was killed in Oswego by a D., L. & W. engine. The personal property of the decedant is valued at $250.

The estate has a right of action against the railroad but as yet no suit is brought.

A petition for letters of administration on thee estate of Andrew J. Baker, late of Seneca Hill, was filed by Mrs. Helen E. Baker, his wife. The estate is valued at $500 personal and $3000 real.

The will of Clark Landers, late of Hastings, was admitted to probate. Mr. Landers left an estate of $6,000, principally to his wife.

The will of Mrs. Laura J. Bennett, late of Schroeppeel, was admitted to probate and letters issued to her son, George D. Bennett. The life use of [illegible] goes to decedent's husband. The property is valued at $5,000.

DR. DUNBAR PASSES SERVICE EXAMINATION

While five candidates passed at Monday's session of the State Civil Service Commission, held in Albany, for the position of Superintendent of the Oswego County Tuberculosis hospital, it is believed that within a few days the hospital managers will select Dr. Dunbar of Richland for the position which pays $1200 a year.

Those who passed are: Edmund C. Boddy, Rochester; Joseph Leo, New York; Alva G. Dunbar, Richland, Osgoco County; Harry Marcus, New York, and Charles H. Turner, Elmira Heights.

OIL KING CREDITS SUCCESS TO WIFE

Rockefeller Often Declared He Owed All to Her.

WERE VERY DEVOTED PAIR.

Old Time School Friend, Discussing Courtship Days, Says, "I Saw That 'Cetty' Spelman and Johnny Rockefeller Thought a Good Deal of One Another From Beginning."

"Whatever is good about me, whatever success I have made, I owe it to her."

This was John D. Rockefeller's tribute to his wife, who died recently, to old friends the last time they were in Cleveland together.

"And the same thing expressed in similar words was what I heard him say twenty-five years ago," remarked one who was present.

"I can go back further than that," added another. "He was absolutely devoted to his wife before they married. She was on friendly terms with several young men, but she seems always to have been John Rockefeller's choice out of all the women in the world, and he had eyes for no other."

"John was awkward and homely, just a countrified boy," said a very close friend of the Rockefellers, who was in their class at Central high school, in Cleveland. "But I saw that Cetty Spelman and Johnny Rockefeller thought a great deal of one another from the beginning. We girls couldn't see why. Perhaps Cetty wasn't exactly rich and beautiful, but her father was as well off as any of the girls in our class, a member of the Ohio legislature and somewhat known for his philanthropic work; so—you know how these things are among children—we thought that it was strange for her to rather show a leaning toward Johnny.

"Cetty" Deeply Religious.

"I think that Cetty had more influence on the girls in the class than any other. She was deeply religious, but not the sort of a person who wanted to talk about it all the time and try to [illegible] thinking. She merely had very pious notions about everything, and, by example more than by talking, she exerted a strong influence upon the rest of us. For one thing, she didn't believe in dancing and theater going because she did not think that it was proper for church people to engage in pursuits that she considered worldy. As a little girl she could sing and play on the piano, and, of course, Johnny Rockefeller played the violin. Perhaps their music made them enjoy some of those first hours together, but I don't believe it was that so much as their admiration for one another.

"Johnny didn't graduate and he didn't go to college because he couldn't afford to do so, and I know that he tramped around a good deal looking for work. But even at this time Cetty encouraged him. She saw that he was ambitious, and she thought that he was honest, which probably appealed to her more than anything else.

"I remember when she told me that she was engaged to marry him. I said, 'Why, Cetty Spellman!' and I must have looked surprised, for she explained to me some of the reasons for making her choice, the principal one of which was that she loved him better than she would ever love any one else.

"Soon I saw why she made her choice, and I have known ever since why she never regretted her action. If ever a couple were intended for one another it was the Rockefellers.

"Cetty and her sister went away to college in Massachusetts. When she came back she became a teacher in the old Brownell school. And she always kept up a good deal of church work, being a Congregationalist until her marriage, when she joined the Baptist church, to which her husband belonged. It was said at that time that she was a splendid teacher, and she was soon promoted to be assistant principal. We girls could understand that. She was a little thing, but she was a good disciplinarian, and here again, as in her own school days, not so much by what she said, but by her constant actions.

Simple Tastes Unchanged.

"When Johnny and Cetty were married they went to live in a little two story brick building on Cheshire street. They were as happy as two kittens. Then the money began to come. It didn't seem to make any difference to John and Cetty—not to their old friends. We used to wonder at it, but we would have wondered more if we had not known Cetty so well. She was just as simple and just as much of a dear little thing after they were millionaires and moved out on Euclid avenue as when we were all youngsters in school.

"I've always seen them every year when they came back to Cleveland, and John has joked a good deal because I was never allowed to speak to him when he was a boy, acting upon the advice of my teacher. I knew that Cetty was failing. Her letters have been more infrequent in the last few years.

"Once Cetty said to me, 'To be a good wife and mother is the happiest and highest privilege of a woman.'"

ITALY DEMANDS TRENTE, TRIESTE

Wants Austria to Return "Unredeemed" Territory.

HAS ITALIAN POPULATION.

First Part of Territory Forms Wedge Penetrating Italy Between Lombardy and Venetia, While Second Includes Peninsula of Istra and Runs North to the Julian Alps.

What is commonly referred to in the dispatches as Trent and Trieste, representing the demands of Italy, stand in the Italian mind for the territory south of a line drawn in the Rhaetian Alps, where Italy, Switzerland and Austria meet, eastward to the Carnic Alps, and then southward along the Julian Alps and again eastward so as to include Fiume.

The first part of the territory forms a wedge penetrating Italy between Lombardy and Venetia and cutting Lake Garda, while the second includes the peninsula of Istria and runs north to the Julian Alps, between the Tagliamento and the Save rivers.

The territory indicated is called "Unredeemed Italy" (Italia Irredenta) because it all once formed part of the Italian states of the middle ages and because the majority of the population are Italians in all things but nationality. For the same reasons the Dalmatian islands are also considered to be a part of "Italia Irredenta."

Although the city of Trent indicates to foreign readers the entire wedge, this wedge is known in Italy as the Trentino because the whole region once formed the Roman colony of Tridentini, which in 1027 passed under the rule of a bishop, and then after various changes came under the rule of Austria, together with Lombardy and Venetia.

Wedge Ever Present Menace.

After the defeat of Austria in 1859 by Piedmont and France and even after Piedmont had taken over Lombardy and the kingdom of Italy had been formed in 1861 Austria continued to hold Venetia until her defeat in the Austro-Germanic war of 1866 gave it to Italy, but left the wedge as an ever present menace—the point of the wedge is only twenty miles from Verona and Vicenza.

Istria, a margravate of Austria, is called so from the mistake of the ancient Romans in believing that the Danube—in Greek the Ister—emptied here. In Roman days it was the home of Illyrian pirates, subdued by Rome in 177 B. C. It belonged to Venice until the peace of Campo Formio in 1797 abolished the republic of Venice and gave it to Austria, together with Dalmatia and its islands in the eastern Adriatic. In 1805 Austria was compelled by Napoleon to cede Istria to France, but in 1813 it was seized by Austria, which has retained it ever since.

Aside from the Dalmatian islands, the territory said to have been demanded by Italy includes about 8,000 square miles, with more than 1,000,000 population.

Although the Trentino has a sentimental as well as a predominating strategic value for Italy, Istria, with the naval stations of Pola and Fiume and the great commercial city of Trieste, would not only give her undisputed control of the Adriatic, but place in her hands a large part of the trade of central Europe for distribution in the Mediterranean and the east. Germany has long coveted Istria.

SOOTHES TOOTH; FIRES BED.

Throbbing Molar Cured by Electric Light Bulb, but with Dire Results.

John Wolf, a rural mail carrier, of Ebensburg, Pa., has demonstrated that an electric light bulb will cure a toothache and then some. Wolf was walking the floor with a toothache of the jumping kind when the bright idea struck him. Wrapping a towel around an electric light bulb attached to a long cord, he got into bed, pressing the bulb against the aching molar as a warming pad. The device worked magically. The suffering stopped, and Wolf fell asleep.

Shortly after midnight the mail carrier dreamed there was a fire and that he was fighting his way through smoke and flames. He awoke to find the bed burning. He sprang to safety and gave the alarm, but before firemen arrived the house was almost gutted.

TEACHER LETS BOYS FIGHT.

Puts Them In His Office and Watches Battle.

How one boy was seriously injured as a result of the action of Principal W. D. Robinson of the Garfield school at Kenwood Springs, St. Louis county, Mo., in taking two boys into his office to let them fight while he looked on, was told by Louis Olgar, whose son, Oliver, is in bed suffering from injuries acquired in the fight.

Oliver Olgar and Charles Benson traded pigeons, and a fight followed, in which the Benson lad came out a victor.

Then Mr. Olgar alleged the principal moved his desk a[illegible], put the boys in his office and invited them to fight it out.

War: Pathos and Humor

French Political Parties United by Newspapers

Paris, March 5.—One of the most interesting lectures that has been given in Paris this winter was that yesterday of M. Alfred Sapus, editor-in-chief of the Figaro, on "The Paris Newspapers During the War."

M. Capus was able to speak with more authority and feeling than any other Paris editor about the profound and bitter quarrels in which the Paris press was engaged just before the war. For he is the successor of Gaston Camette, who was killed by Madame Caillaux in the office of the Figaro. And it was the hand of M. Capus which penned the remarkable indictment of the political and social morality of France, inspired by the verdict in the Caillaux case, just two days before the war broke out.

M. Capus, in the beginning of his talk, rapidly and guardedly sketched the situation in July last, and developed the thesis that the newspapers were responsible for forming public opinion. He described graphically how sudden was the necessity imposed upon the press, a sa measure of national defence, to "bury the hatchet," and to set the example to their readers by practicing what it was imperative for every journal to preach: "To demand of the French that they cease immediately to talk about politics."

PARTIES DRAWN TOGETHER

"In these circumstances," continued M. Capus, "the role of the press has been decisive. It has ceased its polemics, drawn the political parties together, developed the themes of resistance and union; it has not allowed itself to be ambarrassed by the remembrance of old discussions; it has given to all the French the impression that they have always been in accord and that, if formerly they disputed with each other and even hated each other, this was merely a way of passing the time while waiting for the enemy.

"The sudden harmony, which the whole world holds for a miracle, and which it has astonished even ourselves, is due to the spirit of layalty among newspapermen. I admit willingly that in doing what it has done, the press has done only its duty. It would have been criminal not to give understood this duty."

M. Capus painted a wonderful picture of the meeting of the newspaper editors with the Minister of War on the opening day of the war. They were summoned to the Elysee Palace to meet M. Messimy.

"M. Messimy did not attempt to hide the profound distress which dominated him. In one week the rapid successions of events had been like lightning: France had just been turned upside down.

"M. Messimy spoke with a feverish voice, his hands closing and opening, [illegible] lack the flash of an awakened passion. The news of the first engagements on the Vosges had already been received; the die was cast; the Minister said in substance, but they were almost his actual words:

"'Gentlemen, I count on your patriotism to accept with good will the new regime that the events impose upon the press. We shall not be able to tell you everything; at the beginning, in fact, we shall tell you very little, but I promise you that everything we tell you will be exact. We shall exaggerate nothing, we shall denature nothing, but we shall at every minute be obliged to suppress information which might seem to us of a nature to compromise the national defence.'

EXPERIENCE WITH CENSORS.

"We were expecting a declaration of this kind. Every one of us felt instinctively that the war of 1914 would have no analogy with preceding wars, even the most formidable."

M. Capus described the anguish and difficulties of the newspapers during the last two weeks of August and the first week of September. He described the withdrawal of the newspapers to Bordeaux, and defended vigorously the decision made at that time by the majority of newspaper editors.

Most interesting was M. Capus' description of the difficulties the editors had at the time of stress with the censor.

"The dialogue between the censor and the press could be summed up in a few questions and answers.

"'It would be very good of you, monsier,' says the voice of the censor over the telephone, "to suppress such and such lines of your article. I ask it of you as a personal favor.'

"'And if I do not do it?' asks the journalist.

"'If you do not do it, I shall be obliged to interrupt the publication of your journal.'

"It is difficult, you must confess, not to assent before this mixture of courtesy and tyranny, and that is why you see so many white blank spaces in the newspapers."

HERBERT ADAMS GIBBONS.

NEW MUNICIPAL MARKET.

Joplin, Mo., Is Justly Proud of Up to Date Building.

Joplin, Mo., is justly proud of its new municipal market, built at a cost of $86,000 secured by bonds voted by the people. It is a fireproof, re-enforced concrete structure spacious enough to contain twenty-eight booths. These booths rent for $5 to $15 a month. Each one is provided with running water, gas and electric light, all provided by the city.

On the main floor of the building there is a smoking room and rest room generously supplied with current magazines and farm periodicals. The market master's office and the city scales are on the same floor. The market master is a civil service appointee. His salary ranges from $900 to $1,200, according to the amount of business transacted at the market. The market is absolutely controlled by this official, who in turn is under supervision by the city commission. Joplin is now under the commission form of government.

The second floor of the market building is in its way an important local institution. It contains a women's rest room and an auditorium that will seat 800. The auditorium is intended for farmers' meetings or for assemblages of civic bodies. For farmers' meetings no charge is made. City folks who meet there pay at the rate of $2 a night.

Back of the market house is ample parking space for wagons and trucks. This space is also used as an open trading ground. The market plant covers an entire block and is located on the principal thoroughfare of the city. Joplin is a city of 60,000, chiefly supported by lead and zinc mines. The new market has been going only a short time, but there is every indication that it is a whopping big success.

A Trick With Words.

An extraordinary memory was that of Dr. Addison Alexander of Princeton Theological seminary. His memory was not only tenacious of facts, but of mere words. For the amusement of young people he would sometimes say, "Now I am going to talk without thinking." He would then pour forth period after period of strange words and incongruous images harmonious and even rhythmical in sound, but wholly destitute of sense. If this seems an easy trick try to suspend your reason and give free rein to your fancy in periods that shall be grammatically correct and yet without meaning.—Youth's Companion.

Smart Veils Draped to Fall In The Fashionable Flaring Lines

SHADOW LACE VEIL.

THE woman of fashion may be known by the veil she wears. Each season has its particular style of veil and favored method of wearing it. This season the preference seems to be for the bordered veil worn in draped style. The black velvet motoring hat illustrated here is completed by a veil of black shadow lace gracefully draped over the narrow brim and edged with a narrow band of black satin. The flare which fashion is insisting upon may be observed even in the lines of the veil.

NEW BRASSIERE.

Made of Cluny Lace, Embroidered Linen and Ribbon Bows.

PRETTY UNDERWAISTS.

Nothing is more desired by the feminine heart in the springtime than handsome new "undies," as our English cousins call them. One department of underwear which the spring maid and matron cannot supply too lavishly is the brassiere department. One handsome illustration of these very necessary adjuncts to milady's toilet is shown in the illustration. Hand embroidered linen with real cluny lace is used in its development, and ribbon bows are used to further beautify it. A feature of this waist is the neatly banded seams, which do away with the usual bulk where a seam occurs.

HER SHOES.

What the Woman Who Is Well Dressed Will Not Do.

The woman who is really well dressed does not wear a smart frock and a becoming hat and then ruin her whole appearance by clothing her feet in a pair of shoddy shoes, run down at the heel and perhaps unpolished. And yet many women who are fastidious as to their appearance, who would not think of going out of the house without their suits being well pressed, their blouses being fresh and dainty, their veils adjusted in just the right way, will forget entirely to look at the condition of their shoes. Perhaps these will be worn and dusty and will be made still uglier by being worn with a pair of soiled and crumpled spats.

There is nothing prettier than well shod feet, nothing uglier than a pair of neglected, rundown, soiled shoes. And now that abbreviated skirts are fashionable the girl who wants to be well dressed will take great pains in selecting her shoes, and once she has purchased an appropriate and pretty pair she will take still greater pains to keep them in good condition.

Never take off a pair of shoes without putting a pair of trees in them immediately. This will help them to keep their shape and also will help to prolong the life of the boots. When there is the least suspicion of the heels becoming run down send them to the bootmaker's immediately and have them straightened. Nothing looks so shabby as a pair of crooked heels.

Now as to some of the novelties to be seen this spring. In the first place the light top boot, which has made such a favorable impression this winter, remains in vogue for spring, all the smartest shoes having either light tan or light gray uppers. Gun metal leather and dark gray tops are also considered smart, while a tan shoe with a tan upper is very chic.

Common Sense Creed.

Almost twenty-five years ago, when life was less strenuous than it is now, the following "common sense creed" was formulated. If its need was felt then how much more will it be appreciated today!

Don't worry.

Don't hurry. "Too swift arrives as tardy as too slow."

Simplify, simplify, simplify!

Don't overeat. Don't starve. Let your moderation be known to all men.

Court the fresh air day and night. "Oh, if you knew what is in the air!"

Sleep and rest abundantly. Sleep is nature's benediction.

Spend less nervous energy each day than you make.

Be cheerful. "A light heart lives long."

Think only beautiful thoughts. "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he."

Work like a man, but don't be worked to death.

Avoid passion and excitement. A moment's anger may be fatal.

Never despair. "Lost hope is a fatal disease."

"If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."

Three Excellent Hints.

If boiled frosting has been cooked too long it may be rendered smooth again by adding a piece of butter the size of a walnut before beating it.

A fine bit of emery board, such as comes for manicuring, makes a good substitute for an eraser when you make an ink spot on paper.

When one buys a child's dress, otherwise good, but with poor machine scallops on it, one can remove the scallops in a minute, and work over them with [illegible]

Good Form

The Visiting Card.

There is probably nothing half so baffling as the innocent bit of white cardboard called by common courtesy the personal visiting card. It is more often anything but a visiting card, having fallen into dubious uses as a means of sending regrets, apologies and introductions, or of representing the sender herself. It is so easy to send a card, much easier than going oneself or writing a note. It is just correct enough to let one out of a situation without criticism, but there is no surplus courtesy. A card, like charity, covereth a multitude of social sins.

But since cards are a necessary evil, or blessing, if you choose to call them so, it is well to know what is absolutely correct. There are variations in cards from season to season, as in stationery, but the conservative card doesn't change in essentials. It should be engraved, either in script or old English lettering and should bear only the name of the owner, the address, if desired and the day at home, if one follows such a custom. A married woman uses Mrs. and her husband's full name on her visiting card; if a widow, Mrs., her maiden Christian name and the surname of her deceased husband. An unmarried woman uses Miss and her Christian names written out, no initials. If she is the eldest member of her family, and there is no danger of confusion, she may use just the Miss and her surname. A husband and wife may have a joint card for use in sending gifts, regrets or announcing change of residence. Otherwise it is safer for a man and wife to use separate cards. Never make the mistake of using a business card for social purposes.

About Invitations.

Notes of invitations to dinners, dances, "at homes," garden parties, etc., are generally written in the third person and must be answered in similar style. Sometimes between intimate friends and for a small dinner party the note of invitation would be written in the first person and, of course, the reply would be worded accordingly. Luncheon invitations are, as a rule, sent by notes written in the first person.

Invitations to dinner or luncheon should always be replied to as soon as received, whether accepted or refused. It is usual to state a reason for refusal, such as indisposition, previous engagement, etc.

From five to ten days' notice is usually given when sending invitations for friendly dinner parties, but for a large dinner party quite three or four weeks' notice is given, so that time is thus allowed to ask others should any of the first invited guests refuse.

Guests arrive ten to fifteen minutes in advance of the actual dinner hour, and punctuality is most important.

Invitations to balls, dances and garden parties are issued on ordinary "at home" cards, the form of entertainment governing being written or printed in the left hand corner of the card. "R. S. V. P." (meaning an answer is expected) does not appear so frequently on invitations as formerly, but when it does an answer should be sent as early as possible.

When You Go Visiting.

When on a visit to friends it is essential that you make yourself very agreeable and fall in with the ways of the house, so that you give no extra trouble to hostess or servants.

Visitors shake hands with the host and hostess morning and night and can do so with any other guests that may be staying at the house.

Always have your bedroom as tidy as possible and so save the housemaid unnecessary work. Letters can be written in the bedroom, and if the hostess rests after lunch then visitors may retire to their own room or go for a walk, as they may prefer.

On the conclusion of a visit it is usual to "tip" the servant who has shown you any special attention. A lady would "tip" the housemaid a sum from $1 to $5, according to length of stay and attention given. A gentleman "tips" the manservant who valets him, the butler and also the coachman if he drives him from and to the station.

Fees are never given by guests to servants after any entertainment, not even after a private dinner given at a restaurant or hotel.

Thimble Party.

If you have a girl friend who is to be married and wish to entertain in her honor, why not give a thimble party? Take your card and write on it "Thursday from 3 to 5 (give date), in honor of Miss Browne. Thimbles."

After all have arrived you can produce towels on which an initial is to be embroidered, dish towels to be hemmed of cheesecloth from which to make dusters. In this way you make it a personal party for the honored guest, but avoid the "shower" part by your providing the gift.

Chewing Gum.

Gum contests in public have gone out of fashion. No more unlovely habit can be formed, and it outrages all the canons of good form. Though at times gum chewing may be necessary or may be thought to be necessary as an assistant to good digestion, it is doubtful if it is ever anything more than a bad habit when done in public.

ANY SHAPE TRUNK CAN GO.

Baggage Smashers in Despair, but Commerce Commission Is Firm.

Washington.—The ladies triumph again and carry to victory with them the trunk makers, costumers, actors—everybody who uses those newfangled five sided trunks with conical protuberances, slant sides and unconventional tops.

The interstate commerce commission told the railroads they cannot exclude pentagonal trunks from the regular baggage service. The railroads wanted to charge excess rates on any trunk not cut on the square.

The commission's decision has filled the baggagemasters with despair. Lamented one in the Pennsylvania's service:

"Just imagine trying to fill a baggage car with conical trunks, trunks with slant sides and trunks cut in every shape from a doughnut to a starfish. What are you going to put on top of a trunk shaped like the pyramids, eh?"

THE NEW STATE CONSTITUTION—8.

What the County Government Association Proposes.

In New York State the question of better county government was opened some years ago by the law which permits the state comptroller to go into any county of the state and examine the financial and other conditions. The law was a dead letter for some time but finally some good work was started, resulting in amazing revelations of graft and irregularities.

For several years the citizens of Westchester County have maintained at private expense the Westchester County Research Bureau with paid investigators and accountants going over the county books, studying county methods. The supervisors of Westchester County were honestly proud of their county government and believed it to be the best in the state. But the investigators of the Research Bureau speedily found evidences of the most ludicrous inefficiency. For example, board of supervisors appropriated for the expenses in their own department $25,000; the expenditures, as shown by the county treasurer's report, were $32,000; actual expenditures $65,000. For the Superintendent of the Poor, $17,000 was appropriated; the treasurer accounted for $108,000 and actual expenditures were $118,000.

Complete Reconstruction Necessary.

Piecemeal reforms have been advocated and some of them have been adopted, but the Research Bureau concedes that thorough reform is impossible without a complete reconstruction of the whole institution of county government. The citizens of Nassau County maintain the Nassau County Taxpayers Association which has begun similar work.

Under the auspices of a volunteer committee in Schenectady, about fifty men and organizations as were known to be interested were brought together in November, 1914, at the first Conference for Better County Government. Some able papers were read and there were two days of earnest and profitable discussion as to what could be done to bring about better county conditions. Although their numbers were few and the opposition strong, they decided to band together into a permanent organization and founded the County Government Association of New York State. The Short Ballot Organization in New York contributed the services of its office and secretary, and its present headquarters is there. A few hundred dollars has been raised and has been used primarily for the publishing of the proceedings of the Conference. For the present the program of the association aside from the problem of increasing the number of citizens who are interested in county government, is laid out in the following resolution which was adopted at the Schenectady Conference:

WHEREAS the present basic form of county government, imposed uniformly on all the counties of the State regardless of their great differences, is exceedingly and needlessly complex, disjointed and wasteful; and

WHEREAS this complexity and disunion cannot now be repaired by legislation on account of the requirement of Sections 1 and 2 of Article X of the present State Constitution, that all the principal county offices shall be separately elective and maintained in isolation:

THEREFORE be it resolved that in the opinion of this Conference the interests of better county government require the removal of the aforesaid obstacles to unification and simplification contained in Sections 1 and 2 of Article X of the Constitution, to the end that the Legislature may be free to devise improved forms of county government, suited to urban and rural counties respectively and otherwise adjusted to varying local conditions, any one of which forms any county may adopt by referendum.

This, of course, is a negative rather than a positive proposition. In itself it makes no change whatever in county government but opens the way to legislation on the subject.

In that simple project lies all the hope which New York State may have for better county government. If the Constitutional Convention throws that resolution into its capacious waste basket, the present decrepit institution will be nailed down probably, to stay for the next twenty years.

In New York City, which has five inefficient county governments within its borders, the workers for civic betterment have a similarly simple program. They wish to add to the constitution the simple words "counties within Greater New York may be consolidated or abilished." There are several large cities in the country, Baltimore, St. Louis, San Francisco and Denver, for example, where county government has been consolidated with the city government to the great advantage of the taxpayers. This ought to be possible wherever city and county boundaries are the same. At present the Board of Estimate of New York City is forced to raise money and hand it over to the county officers to spend without exercising the remotest supervision as to the intelligence or wisdom of that expenditure. With the powerful backing of the municipal administration, the City Club, Citizens Union, etc. this amendment may be secured.

The chance that the up-state counties will also secure their freedom is more remote!

[This is the eighth of a series of nine articles prepared jointly by the Municipal Government Association, the County Government Association and the New York Short Ballot Organization on questions to come before the Constitutional Convention.]

HAND PAINTED NOVELTIES.

Accessories of Wood Decorated to Match the Fancy New Furniture.

The popularity of painted furniture may be responsible for the demand for painted wooden accessories, the small and useful articles in wood harmonizing in treatment with the room's decoration.

One may find numbers of practical articles, such as the three cornered telephone bracket, a useful device for holding a telephone where a limited floor space does not conveniently allow for a table.

These are decidedly decorative, painted in soft gray or green, with an Italian floral decoration, or in a cream ground with the same effect of flowers and old blue appearing in the design.

An attractive feature for the open fireplace is the painted wooden bellows. The painted yellow sides show a floral decoration or conventionalized design, and with red leather sides and brass mountings the bellows are most unusual.

The lamp screen is an effective adjunct for the table where a low light shines at an unpleasant angle. In this screen, about sixteen inches high and consisting of a framework on legs, a panel is affixed, which can be raised at any necessary height to protect the eyes.

Removing Sinews.

Remove the sinew from the legs of a fowl when it is drawn and the meat of the leg will be as good as that of the second joint.

MANLESS OFFICE BUILDING.

Women of St. Louis to Erect Structure For Fair Sex Only.

A woman's office building, from which men will be barred as tenants and where there will be women elevator conductors and women office [illegible] is to be built in the downtown district by the women's council of St. Louis, composed of fifty-four organizations and clubs.

The council will issue stock. It is planned to begin work on the project in the near future.

The architect will be a woman, and women will handle all of the business dealings in regard to the building.

FRANCE GIVES A SIX MONTHS OF Official Report Says Great Retreat to Marne Was Due to Delay of British.

THERE has been prepared a historical review emanating from French official sources of the operations in the western theater of war from its beginning up to the end of January—the first six months of the war.

The plans of General Joffre are set forth and explanation given as to how and why they could not always be carried out, how they were modified from time to time and in what manner they were successful.

The review closes with a resonant note of satisfaction at the results achieved and of the most perfect confidence in the final issue.

It should be understood that the narrative is made purely from the French standpoint. The first of the installments of the document is as follows:

The first month of the campaign began with successes and finished with defeats for the French troops. Under what circumstances did these come about?

The Operations In Alsace.

Our plan of concentration had foreseen the possibility of two principal actions—the one on the right between the Vosges and the Moselle, the other on the left to the north of the Verdun-Toul line—this double possibility involving the eventual variation of our transport. On Aug. 2, owing to the Germans passing through Belgium, our concentration was substantially modified by General Joffre in order that our principal effort might be directed to the north.

From the first week in August it was apparent that the length of time required for the British army to begin the move would delay our action in connection with it. This delay is one of the reasons which explain our failures at the end of August.

Awaiting the moment when the operations in the north could begin and to prepare for it by retaining in Alsace the greatest possible number of German forces, the general in chief ordered our troops to occupy Mulhouse, to cut the bridges of the Rhine at Huningue and below and then to flank the attack of our troops operating in Lorraine. This operation was badly carried out by a leader who was at once relieved of his command. Our troops, after having carried Mulhouse, lost it and were thrown back on Belfort. The work had therefore to be recommenced afresh, and this was done from Aug. 14 under a new command.

Mulhouse was taken on the 19th after a brilliant fight at Dornach. Twenty-four guns were captured from the enemy. On the 20th we held the approaches to Kolmar, both by the plain and by the Vosges. The enemy had undergone enormous losses and abandoned great stores of shells and forage, but from this moment what was happening in Lorraine and on our left prevented us from carrying our successes further, for our troops in Alsace were needed elsewhere. On Aug. 26 the Alsace army was broken up, only a small part remaining to hold the region of Thann and the Vosges.

The Operations In Lorraine.

The purpose of the operations in Alsace was—namely, to retain a large part of the enemy's forces far from the northern theater of operations. It was for our offensive in Lorraine to pursue with more directly by holding before it the German army corps operating to the south of Metz. This offensive began brilliantly on Aug. 14. On the 19th we had reached the region of Sharburg and that of the Etangs (lakes). We held Dieuze, Morhange, Delme and Chateau Salins.

On the 20th our success was stopped. [illegible] is to be found in the strong organization of the region, in the power of the enemy's artillery, operating over ground which had been minutely surveyed and finally in the default of certain units. On the 22d, in spite of the splendid behavior of several of our army corps and notably that of Nancy, our troops were brought back on to the Grand Couronne, while on the 23d and 24th the Germans concentrated re-enforcements—three army corps at least—in the region of Luneville and forced us to retire to the south.

This retreat, however, was only momentary. On the 25th, after two vigorous counterattacks, one from south to north and the other from west to east, the enemy had to fall back. From that time between the Germans and ourselves a sort of balance was established on this terrain. Maintained for fifteen days, it was afterward, as will be seen, modified to our advantage.

The Operations In Luxemburg.

There remained the principal business—the battle of the north—postponed owing to the necessity of waiting for the British army. On Aug. 20 the concentration of our line was finished, and the general in chief gave the order for our center and our left to take the offensive. Our center comprised [illegible] armies; our left consisted of [illegible] re-enforced to the extent of [illegible] corps; a corps of cavalry [illegible] the British army, which had already been engaged for the previous three weeks at Liege, Namur and Louvain.

The German plan on that date was as follows: From seven to eight army corps and four cavalry divisions were endeavoring to pass between Givet and Brussels and even to extend their movements more to the west. Our object was, therefore, in the first place, to hold and dispose of the enemy's center and afterward to throw ourselves with all available forces on the left flank of the German grouping of troops in the north.

On Aug. 21 our offensive in the center began with ten army corps. On Aug. 22 it failed, and this reverse appeared serious. The reasons for it are complex. There were in this affair individual and collective failures, imprudences committed under the fire of the enemy, divisions ill engaged, rash deployments, precipitate retreats, a premature waste of men and, finally, the inadequacy of certain of our troops and their leaders as regards the use of both infantry and artillery. In consequence of these lapses the enemy, turning to account the difficult terrain, was able to secure the maximum of profit from the advantages which the superiority of his subaltern complements gave him.

Operations Between Sambre and Meuse.

In spite of this defeat our maneuver had still a chance of success, if our left and the British army secured a decisive result. This was unfortunately not the case. On Aug. 22, at the cost of great losses, the enemy succeeded in crossing the Sambre, and our left army fell back the 24th upon Beaumont-Givet, being perturbed by the belief that the enemy was threatening its right.

On the same day, the 24th, the British army fell back after a German attack upon the Maubeuge-Valenciennes line. On the 25th and 26th its retreat became more hurried. After Landrecies and Le Cateau it fell back southward by forced marches. It could not from this time keep its hold until after crossing the Marne.

The rapid retreat of the English, coinciding with the defeat sustained in Belgian Luxemburg, allowed the enemy to cross the Meuse and to accelerate by fortifying it the action of his right.

The situation at this moment may be thus summed up: Either our frontier had to be defended on the spot under conditions which the British retreat rendered extremely perilous or we had to execute a strategic retirement, which, while delivering up to the enemy a part of the national soil, would permit us, on the other hand, to resume the offensive at our own time, with a favorable disposition of troops, still intact, which we had at our command. The general in chief determined on the second alternative.

Preparation of the Offensive.

Henceforward the French command devoted its efforts to preparing the offensive. To this end three conditions had to be fulfilled:

First.—The retreat had to be carried out in order under a succession of counter attacks which would keep the enemy busy.

Second.—The extreme point of this retreat had to be fixed in such a way that the different armies should reach it simultaneously, ready at the moment of occupying it to resume the offensive all together.

Third.—Every circumstance permitting the resumption of the offensive before this point should be reached had to be utilized by the whole of our forces and the British forces.

Counterattacks and Results.

The counterattacks executed during the retreat were brilliant and often fruitful. On Aug. 29 we successfully attacked St. Quentin to disengage the British army. Two other corps and a reserve division engaged the Prussian guard and the Tenth German army corps, which was debouching from Guise. By the end of the day, after various fluctuations, the enemy was thrown back on the Oise and the British front was freed.

On Aug. 27 we had also succeeded in throwing back upon the Meuse the enemy, who was endeavoring to gain a foothold on the left bank. Our successes continued on the 28th in the woods of Marfee and of Jaulnay. Thanks to them, we were able, in accordance with the orders of the general in chief, to fall back on the Buzancy-le-Chesne-Bouvellemont line. Further to the right another army took part in the same movement and carried out successful attacks on Aug. 27 on the Othain and in the region of Spincourt.

On the 28th these different units recrossed the Meuse without being disturbed and were able to join in the action of our center. Our armies were therefore again intact and available for the offensive.

On Aug. 28 a new army, composed of two army corps, five reserve divisions and a Moorish brigade, was ordered [illegible]. This army was to assemble [illegible] in the region of Amiens between Aug. 27 and Sept. 1 and take the offensive against the German right, uniting its action with that of the British army operating on the line of Ham-Bray-sur-Somme.

Continuation of Retreat and Cause.

The hope of resuming the offensive was from this moment rendered vain by the rapidity of the march of the German right wing. This rapidity had two consequences which we had to parry before thinking of advancing. On the one part, our new army had not time to complete its detraining, and on the other hand the British army, forced back further by the enemy, uncovered on Aug. 31 our left flank. Our line, thus modified, contained waves which had to be redressed before we could pass to the offensive.

To understand this it is sufficient to consider the situation created by the quick advance of the enemy on the evening of Sept. 2. A corps of cavalry had crossed the Oise and advanced as far as Chateau Thierry. The First army (General von Kluck), comprising four active army corps and a reserve corps, had passed Compiegne. The Second army (General von Bulow), three active army corps and two reserve corps, was reaching the Laon region. The Third army (General von Hausen), two active army corps and a reserve corps, had crossed the Aisne between the Chateau Porcien and Attigny.

More to the east the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth and Seventh armies—namely, twelve army corps, four reserve corps and numerous Ersatz formations—were in contact with our troops, the Fourth and Fifth armies between Vouziers and Verdun and the others in the positions which have been indicated above from Verdun to the Vosges. It will therefore be seen that our left, if we accepted battle, might be in great peril through the British forces and the new French army, operating more to the westward, having given way.

A defeat in these conditions would have cut off our armies from Paris and from the British forces and at the same time from the new army which had been constituted to the left of the English. We should thus be running the risk of losing by a single stroke the advantage of the assistance which Russia later on was to furnish. General Joffre chose resolutely for the solution which disposed of these risks—that is to say, for postponing the offensive and the continuance of the retreat. In this way he remained on ground which he has chosen. He waited only until he could engage in better conditions.

In consequence, on Sept. 1 he fixed as an extreme limit for the movement of retreat, which was still going on, the line Bray-sur-Seine, Nogent-sur-Seine, Arcis-sur-Aube, Vitry-le-Francois and the region to the north of Bar-le-Duc. This line should be reached if the troops were compelled to go back so far. They would attack before reaching it as soon as there was a possibility of bringing about an offensive disposition permitting the co-operation of the whole of our forces.

Eve of the Offensive.

On Sept. 5 it appeared that this desired situation existed. The first German army, carrying audacity to temerity, had continued to endeavor to envelop our left, had crossed the Grand Morin and reached the region of Chauffry, to the south of Rebais, and of Esternay. It aimed then at cutting our armies off from Paris in order to begin the investment of the capital. The second army had its head on the line Champaubert, Etoges, Bergeres and Vertus. The third and fourth reached to Chalons-sur-Marne and Bussy-le-Repos. The fifth was advancing on one side and the other from the Argonne as far as Posesse to Triancourt-les-Islettes and Julvecourt. The sixth and seventh armies were attacking more to the east.

But—and here is a capital difference between the situation of Sept. 5 and that of Sept. 2—the envelopment of our left was no longer possible. In the first place our left army had been able to occupy the line of Sezanne, Villers-St. Georges and Courchamps. Furthermore, the British forces gathered between the Seine and the Marne, flanked on their left by the newly created army, were closely connected with the rest of our forces.

This was precisely the disposition which the general in chief had wished to see achieved. On the 4th he decided to take advantage of it and ordered all the armies to hold themselves ready. He had taken from his right two new army corps, two divisions of infantry and two divisions of cavalry, which were distributed between his left and his center. On the evening of the 5th he addressed to all the commanders of armies a message ordering them to attack.

"The hour has come," he wrote, "to advance at all costs and to die where you stand, rather than give way."

Mistakes In Lorraine Frankly Admitted—Plans of General Joffre Set Forth and Explained.

GERMANS CHECK USE OF KNIFE; SAVE LIMBS IN FIELD HOSPITAL

Greatest Surgeons Engaged In Superhuman Efforts to Lose Not a Soldier For Kaiser.

Field Hospital, Model Outfit, Can Be Moved In Twelve Hours—Death List Small.

THE German military authorities, true to promise, have shown me everything (with the slight exception of their 42 centimeter mortars and their new Zeppelins), and nothing compels your neutral admiration so much as the perfection of the sanitary service here in the east, where the odds are heavy against life saving, says a staff correspondent of the New York Times writing from a field hospital in Poland. With typical Teuton thoroughness they had given me a straw mattress for the night in this field hospital (pitched as close to the firing line as the heavy Russian artillery would permit) so that I could study the system at first hand, while by a lucky coincidence my fellow lodgers included Dr. Parthey, the surgeon general of the Nth army, who was cruising along the frontier on a tour of inspection, and the famous Cologne specialist Geheimrat Professor Dr. Tilmann, the consulting surgeon attached to the same army, who had trotted for a night and a day over the frozen mud roads of Poland in response to a hurry telephone call to come and perform a delicate operation.

And right here you learned one secret of German success—every conceivable kind of specialist, interior, exterior, medical, surgical, mental and moral, is on the job constantly to set the pace for the "salvage companies" in their almost superhuman efforts to lose not a soldier for the kaiser whom science can save.

The surgeon in charge of the field hospital, who rejoiced in the good name of Dr. Biermann, had just finished his report for the month and submitted it to his chief, Dr. Parthey, who invited me to look it over with him, and the figures gave an interesting insight into the German "conservation of life" policy. Of the 1,587 severely wounded who had been brought in during four weeks seventeen died. Professor Tilmann, the consulting surgeon, who has visited America and is well known to the surgical fraternity there, said he thought Americans would be most interested in what the analysis of operations showed.

It disclosed that the Germans believed not only in "conservation of life," but also in "conservation of limbs," for, as the professor pointed out, the table showed that of the hundreds of operations performed only one was an amputation of a limb. "Conservative surgery" he called it. I learned that there was no post battle butchery by enthusiastic young surgeons on the battlefields and that no German soldier needs to be haunted by the fear of being needlessly maimed for life, that in fact no operation was performed until it was pronounced absolutely necessary.

Wounded Are Sorted Out.

From the firing line the wounded are carried to the nearby "hauptverbandplatze," or "main bandaging places," where operations are performed only in life or death cases. Here the wounded are sorted out. Those who can stand long distance transportation are started back toward the distant base, and the serious cases are brought to the field hospital, where the staff of "conservative surgeons" is large enough to give each one a maximum chance for a "life" or limb, even when a rush is on.

In the field hospital, again, the motto is "Move on." The moment the wounded are able to be moved with safety they are transported to the rear, to wherever the nearest railway ends, where a hospital train is waiting for them. This had meant a terrible ride of more than fifty miles on light, Polish farm wagons, about the only things that could navigate the mud morasses of the Polish "highways" with any sort of speed. The cold, for which the Germans had all been praying, however, proved a boon for the wounded by freezing the roads, while on the day that I arrived the German railroad companies had finished rebuilding the wrecked Russian railway to within twenty miles of the front and were beginning to operate trains on schedule time.

A personally conducted tour of the hospital was full of interest. The peasant huts of Polish villages are unfit for hospital purposes, but somewhere in the neighborhood there is generally one dwelling fit for human beings—a "gut-hof" or country residence of small landed gentry, clearly marked on the detailed German general staff maps (scale 1:100,000) so that no time has to be lost in looking for a place to pitch your field hospital. This was a one story, rambling white house, with a cow stable attachment and four acres of grounds.

Most interesting was their prize patient, a Russian, who enjoyed the distinction of having furnished the only amputated limb on the hospital records, a naive, child-like, grateful soul with a ferociously bushy beard. He had had a close call and knew it. He grinned and uttered unbelievable combinations of consonants and kissed the head surgeon's hand, and then he suddenly disappeared out of his cot and tried to show how he could hop on his remaining leg, but was gently put back under cover, and a Russian cigarette was given to him.

He literally was bubbling over with happiness at being alive. He had lain for days and nights on the battlefield and was pretty far gone when found and brought in. A significant little anecdote was told about the "Grand Duke," as he had been nicknamed. In the evening when the surgeon who had performed the operation came around to see how he was the simple moujik reached under his pillow and presently pressed two two-rouble notes into the hand of the astonished physician. He couldn't be persuaded to take the money back. He was anxious and uneasy until he saw the "graft" pocketed; then he became an optimist. The four rouble fee will be restored to him when he is discharged from the hospital.

Ideal Operating Room.

The most interesting room, however, was the bathroom, the only one within a radius of ten miles, I was told, and of a spaciousness that you probably couldn't match in all Harlem. It made an ideal operating room, and I was invited to fit into a picture that Rembrandt could have painted to advantage as a companion to the "anatomy lesson." The spotlessly clean white tiling gleamed softly in the dim light of six tallow candles. A powerfully muscled six foot Silesian landwehrman, lean from long fighting, lay on the collapsible, steel frame operating table, the famous Cologne specialist performing an operation for which an American millionaire would have had to pay $10,000 or more—a laparotomy. A military nurse (there are no women nurses so far a-field) flashed a small electric searchlight on the "operating zone," another passed the instruments, a third stood ready with the dressings.

Three staff surgeons looked on intently, like students at a clinic, while the master worked. The consolations of religion were close at hand, if needed, in the form of a famous German divine, who had donned the humble uniform of an ambulance man and was proud to perform the most menial tasks about the place.

Fighting Line Calls Wounded.

When the landwehr patient came out from the anaesthetic he gazed anxiously into the tired face of the specialist, who looked "all in" from running around Poland in response to emergency telephone calls.

"You'll pull through all right," the specialist said, with conviction. The patient looked pleased and asked in a whisper "how soon he would be back."

"Home!" said the weary professor gently.

"With my company," the soldier whispered.

"They're all like that," Professor Tilmann said proudly—"all impatient to get back to the front. Our wounded can hardly wait to get well. The fatherland need have no fear with such men."

If there is an ingenious time or space saving device the Germans have it, or else something better, and quite typical of all their equipment was the field hospital "tool chest," a wooden box about two feet long, ten inches high and a foot wide fitted with eight wooden trays. This contained every surgical instrument necessary for performing every known operation.

The kitchen was in the back yard—a "goulash cannon." It is really a battery, for it can simultaneously shoot a whole menu—stew or soup from the big-mortarlike kettle in the center and coffee and three other hot items from smaller caliber guns at each corner of this astounding combination cooking stove and kitchen on wheels. The Germans are immensely proud of them, and I can well believe the proposition that they have done more for Germany than even the sensational 42 centimeter mortars, but from an apparently well informed source I learned that the inventor of the original model of the "goulash cannon" was an American. They have an undeniably American look about them. Though "made in Germany," the land of the quick lunch alone could have given birth to the idea.

Cooking With Glycerin.

Julius explained that cooking was done with glycerin. The huge kettle has a double wall and bottom, inside aluminium, outside copper. The space between is filled with glycerin and a coal or wood fire started underneath. When the glycerin once gets boiling hot it apparently will keep your soup or goulash warm for hours. This was, I think, the theory that Julius tried hard to explain to me. Julius was not only cook, but waiter—and it is always a relief to be at the front, if only to encounter such waiters.

From Julius, too, I learned a news item of especial interest to globe trotting Americans—that the cooks of the floating palaces, the Imperator, Vaterland and all the other German steamships that are now temporarily out of the running have been divided up among the various hospital trains and are now cooking for the wounded. The head of the North German Lloyd is in charge of the kitchen car of the Friedrich Field hospital on the [illegible]

"MARK OF TERROR" ON GIRL

Scars Help to Convict Her Ex-Wooer of Felonious Assault.

Two crosses on her face, one on her left cheek and the other on her neck, were displayed by Fannie Mazzocci, seventeen years old, to a jury before Judge Humphrey in the Queens county court, New York. They helped to convict her former wooer, Samuel Demicola of Brooklyn, of felonious assault.

"That is the Sicilian mark of terror," the girl told the jury through an interpreter. "Now I can never marry. Demicola was jealous without cause. [illegible] cut me. This mark says that [illegible] men must avoid me."

[illegible] explained to the jury that oth[illegible] as young men feared the vengeance of [illegible] who had married her.

COLORADO CONVICTS HAVE BASEBALL TEAM

Warden Rewards Good Prisoners by Allowing Them to Play.

Canon City, Colo.—Warden Tom J. Tynan of the Colorado penitentiary, described as "the man who put 'man' in humanity in prison reform," announces that he is organizing a baseball team among the convicts—his "wards," as he always calls them.

Tynan was the first penitentiary warden to install moving pictures and the first to try the system of rewards for good conduct by sending the best behaved convicts to build and improve the roads of the state. He proposes to have a baseball team to compete with teams of the state league and other teams from the surrounding towns and cities. Tynan is a baseball "fan" himself.

"I've got some crackerjack material down here," says Tynan, "and I'm going to utilize it. Got a housebreaker that can outrun Ty Cobb. Join the Feds? No chance. No bush leagues for us. We'll be in the AA class or none at all."

The convict team will go into training as soon as a wall is built around four acres of ground which the warden has laid out for the purpose. Teams throughout the state will be invited to play the convicts on the "home grounds." Later in the season the warden may take his team on two or three short trips. If possible he will arrange a game with the Denver Grizzlies of the Western league.

"I will use the prison baseball team to encourage good behavior among the men," he says. "To be permitted to play on the team or to watch its games will be a privilege bestowed only on the best behaved. The moment a player breaks a prison rule he no longer will be considered a member of the team, and the fan who is recalcitrant will be barred from the games.

"Since we have had moving picture shows for the prisoners there have been 470 less reports of bad behavior. For a slight infraction of the prison rules the privilege of attending the prison movie entertainments is taken away for a certain period. We have a houseful of movie fans, and most of them would rather suffer any kind of physical punishment than miss the pictures thrown on the screen in the chapel every two weeks."

Anvils Date Back of History.

The anvil was known in the earliest times, being spoken of in the Bible, the prophet Isaiah saying (chapter 41, verse 7), "So the carpenter encouraged the goldsmith, and he that smooth eth with the hammer, him that smiteth the anvil." It is not known who first used it, but of course the anvil of antiquity was unlike that of today as perfected by modern workmanship. The anvil still used in the orient, however, is a boot shaped piece of metal inserted in a section of oak or walnut log. Larger or smaller it is used by tinsmiths, shoemakers, silversmiths and blacksmiths. The anvils used in this country are commonly made of cast iron faced with steel and are of parallelopiped form, with a steel cone or beak at one end and a "handy hole" for inserting chisel or other tools at the other end.—Boston Globe.

The Crimean War.

The Crimean war was in 1853-56 between Russia on one side and Turkey, France, Great Britain and Sardinia, as allies, on the other side. It was called the Crimean war because it was mainly fought in the Crimean peninsula. It arose through the demand of Russia for a protectorate over the Greek subjects of the sultan and was closed and its issues decided by the treaty of Paris March 30, 1856. By this treaty Sebastopol, which had been captured, was restored to Russia, Russia abandoned her claim as to Christians in Turkey and the Black sea was neutralized.

Lost It.

"There is a good deal of talk about the English being slow to appreciate a joke," said Marshall P. Wilder once. "I have not found that to be the case at all, although one Englishman did come to me for an explanation after I had made the remark that I dreamed one night that I was dead, but it was so hot that I woke up.'

"'I beg your pardon, Mr. Wilder,' he said, 'but it must be deuced hot in your country.'"

NEW FORDS ARRIVE

George B. Palmer, West Side, has sedured the first shipment of 1915 Ford cars. In theshipment is the handsomest specimen of a touring car to arrive in this city in many a day, says Mr. Palemr,

It is equipped with electric lights, starter and all the accessories that go to make motoring the chief delight of a discriminating individhal.

Mr. Palmer is looking for frequent shipments of cars as the season advances, or as fast as orders are received.

Czar's Fleet Pounds Against Black Sea Ports; Vessels Sunk

London, March 24.—Martin H. Donohoe, correspondent of the Daily Chronicle at Constanza, telegraphs:—

"The Russian fleet has been showing activity in the Black Sea. Several Turkishforts in Asia Minor have been bombarded and transports and laden colliers sunk.

"Everybody who is able is fleeing from Constantinople. The German and Austrian Embassy staffs already have left, and the city is deserted except for the poorer inhabitants and the military guard, the seat of government having been transferred to Asia.

"The Turkish military offensive against Egypt has been definitely abandoned, and the retreating Turks are dying of hunger and thirst in the march across the desert. The Turkish Commissariat Department has been an utter failure."

FEVER JOINS FAMINE TO FORCE SURRENDER

London, March 24.—A Turkish force operating against the town of Suez has been badly defeated, says a statement made public here last night and which says:—

"On the 22d instant, at dawn, one of our patrols discovered a party of the enemy near El Kubri post, opposite Suez. Shots were exchanged.

"Aeroplanes estimated the number at about one thousand, composed of infantry and artillery and a few cavalry.

"The guns at El Kubri opened fire and inflicted casualties, whereupon the enemy retired and formed a camp eight miles east of the Suez Canal.

"Early this morning, the 23d instant, a force under Major General Sir George John Younghusband attacked and routed the enemy, who is now in full retreat.

"A prisoner says this force came direct from Bir-el-Saba, having taken twelve days en route, and that General von Traumer and three other German officers were with it."

WAR CLOUDS COMPEL GREEKS TO WORRY

London, March 24.—The Daily Mail's Athens correspondent telegraphs:—

"The political aspect of the international situation is still occupying the deepest attention of the Greek ministers, who are holding councils daily.

"The allied fleets are repairing during the bad weather. Many workmen are engaged on the French battleship Gaulois, and I have good authority for stating that not only will her repairs be quickly completed but that her fighting value will be quite unimpaired."

Telegraphing from Salonica, the Daily Mail's correspondent says:—

"The Italians are fortifying the Dodekanese Islands, formerly the Turkish Sporades, in the Aegean Sea, with heavy calibre guns, and numerous steamships are said to be taking munitions there."

The Dodekanese Islands, better known as "the islands of the White Sea," lie off the southern part of the west coast of Asia Minor. The principal islands are Stampalia, Leros, Patmos, Nikaria and

STORM KEEPS FLEET IDLE; TURKS PROFIT

Lohdon, March 24.—A dispatch to the Times from Tenedos says:—

"A furious northeasterly gale has been blowing for three days. The seas are running so heavily that the small Greek steamship from Piraeus to Tenedos took twenty-four hours longer than her usual time for crossing. This weather is most unfavorable for naval operations and is thought to be enabling the Turks to repair their battered fortification and mount fresh guns.

"Then battle ships of the allied fleet are anchored under the lee of the island, resting after their recent tussle with the Dardanelles forts, and four mine sweepers could be seen issuing from the mouth of the straits.

"It is impossible to tell how long this pause will continue. The equinoctial gales in this region are said to last either three days or three."

WHAT A LIVE WIRE WORKER SAYS:

"Did you ever stop to think why we organize? Is it because we enjoy each other's company? Is it because we admire each other's talents? Is it because we love each other? Some people seem to think so.

"They give us a reason for not joining the Chamber that they do not like some individual who is active in the organization. Or they hold aloof because they consider the rest of us chumps. Or they do not like the way we sometimes snarl at each other.

"These good comrades all have a very wrong idea of the "why" of the Chamber of Commerce. It is not a pink tea, nor a social club, nor a literary society, nor a love feast. It is not based upon mutual attraction. It is based upon necessity.

"We get together because we must. I have learned from bitter experience that alone I am weak. We are all learning that together we are strong. It is not a question of preference; it is a question of power.

"I, with thousands of others, am trapped in a fire in a great building. Our only exit is barred with massive doors. These doors are locked. My feeble hands cannot push them open. Neither can yours, nor yours.

"But here lies a great beam. Alone I cannot lift it; together we can swing it aloft and use it to break open the doors. I do not know you; you do not know me. I don't care if your clothes offend my eye. I ask nothing of your ancestry or your morals. I don't care about your religion or your politics. The fire scorches my back. I must have air. I want to get out. So do you.

"Take hold with me. Heave! Hit hard!"

Noonday Fire Cleans Out Dentist's Office; Water Floods Stores

Flames Originated in Dr. Orchard's Office; McKinstry and Shipman Stores Untouched by Fire, Leaving Stocks Salable

This morning at 11.50 fire was discovered in the office of Dr. Orchard in the Grand Central block. Dr. Cusack, who was at the time leaving Streeter and Van Sanford's office remarked "something is burning," and at about the same time smoke and flames burst from the windows of Dr. Orchard's office. The fire department responded in double quick time and quickly took in the serious situation.

The offices adjoining the blazing quarters are those of Streeter and Van Sanford and Dr. Halstead, and for a time it seemed the whole block would go as the flames were fanned to greater intensity by a brisk north wind. The present estimate of the loss is $10,000.

Two lines of hose were quickly laid, one up the front way and another leading to the roof where ladders were stretched from the ground. For twenty minutes the blaze steadily increased, resisting both streams and it appeared to the two hundred spectators that the entire block was doomed. McKinstry employes aided by many willing hands started to remove their stock into Stranahan & Love's through the front and rear doors, piling the hats, suits and all sorts of furnishings in heaps on the floor. Then the orders came from the firemen to vacate and about the same time torrents of water burst thru the ceiling and completely deluged the entire remaining stock. Shipman's 5 and 10-cent store also received a deluge and propbably a total loss of stock will result. Upstairs the firemen gradually got control of the fire but it was a stubborn battle. Dr. Orchard's office was still blazing, the flames, however, were being driven to the rear end of the building where the two lines of hose were gradually confining it into a small space from which there would be no further danger of spreading.

Streeter and VanSanford's office force tried to remove some of

CHAMBER BUSINESS WILL RUN OPENLY; CLEAR SAILING

The system of organization of the Chamber of Commerce activities, which is being put into effect through the question blanks mailed yesterday to each of the members, is unique in its simplicity. It avoids pitfalls which have led to the early decadence of many other organizations. It embodies a plan of action which is working out successfully in Olean, Des Moines, Williamsport, South Bend, Youngstown and in many other cities where strong, efficient Chambers of Commerce exist. Its fullest success here will depend on a general response from the Chamber of Commerce members. Members who have not already mailed their replies to the Chamber of Commerce office are urgently requested to do so at the earliest possible date.

The Chamber of Commerce that intends to do things must have not only the formal support of its town in the way of memberships, but the personal support in the form of active effort on the part of men who can accomplish results. The secretary cannot be expected to do it all. In most cases he can merely plan and lead, but he must have the backing of his members if he is to accomplish sure enough results. It is here that the need for the right sort of committee service is apparent.

Committee service in the old days meant the appointment of a group of men to a task that might, or might not interest them in the least. The personnel of the committees was generally a compound of "honorary members" who wouldn't under any conditions really think of working together, with a corporal's guard of indifferent ones and a single fanatic who was innocent of all balanced relation with the organization as a whole. Such committees could arrive nowhere.

The results that have attended such conditions as these have been far from satisfactory.

Nothing hurts a business organization more than an impression that it is being "run" by a small number of insiders; and nothing helps it so much as getting a large number of its members interested, taking part in committee work, helping the wheels to move, and in general playing the part of workers instead of onlookers.

It is to bring about this very result that the system of committee organization now being used by the Fulton Chamber of Commerce has been developed. Under this system the members of each committee are selected from the mn who in filling out the question blanks which were isshed today express an interest in the subject with which th committee is intended to deal. Behind each committee will be the intelligent support of the office force of the Chamber of Commerce and of the officers of the entire organization.

Each day suggestions are received by the Chamber of Commerce asto the methods which must be pursued in order that the Chamber may compete successfully with the Chambers of Commerce of other cities. These suggestions are in response to the question, "What, as a citizen, do you believe that the Chamber of Commerce should first undertake for the good of the city?"

These suggestions show a wide range of civic interest. They indicate the extent to which the public at large is doing constructive thinking relative to the tasks before the Chamber of Commerce.

This general public interest signifies much for the Chamber of Commerce. With the resultant broadening of its activities, the best business and professional men in Fulton, the men who have been a success in their own field of endeavor, are giving of their time and money to make Fulton, through the Chamber of Commerce, a bigger, better, busier city.

In the Chamber of Commerce of this scope, there is offered a more abundant field for the cultivation of business and professional acquaintance than by any other medium. When a member travels, his membership card gives him entree to the rooms and privileges of the leading business organizations of the country.

Particular attention is given in these replies to the need of securing more industries. The need for more intimate co-operation between the merchants of Fulton is also very strongly brought forward. The need of a general understanding among the merchants on such subjects as, cut price sales, giving of premiums, closing on holidays is strongly brought forward. These replies also evidence a desire to make Fulton a cleaner more attractive city to live in, keeping the streets cleaner, removing over-head wires. Establishing bter facilities for recreation, abolishing the soft coal smoke nuisance. Improving the character of some of the buildings. tI has also been suggested that we have a city bacterologist employed.

A number of members have urged very strongly the need for better and more generally circulated advertising for the city of Fulton, cultivating a desire among outsiders to visit Fulton. The replies indicate that a strong movement will develop to cultivate "Trade at Home" spirit. A desire to give the merchants of Fulton a chance to supply the wants of the people of Fulton, simply a fair chance to display their wares in competition with outsiders.

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

SLANG.

SOME highbrows draw the line on slang—they just can't stand the "vulgar" twang of unrefined chatter. They do not like the terms we use—the classic phrases we abuse; but, then, that doesn't matter. Why should we be so straight laced that we can't say "paste this in your hat" because it isn't proper? Why should we can such happy words as "feed that chatter to the birds," or draw the chalk on "copper"? I like to hear a fellow slang a little "phoney" talk and bring a smile to your smiler. Oh, partner, throw a little slang (there's snap and action to its twang) and be a gay worth-whiler. There's music to the slangy speech—it's not, the kind the schoolmarms teach)—but, heap la! we should worry? I can't see how it's such a sin to substitute "jay flush" for grin, or "alkali a lot" for happy. It grieves me when a fellow talks so carefully and proudly balks at phrases out of order. It gets my friend, so doggone mad I'd like to run the straight laced lid across the Southern border. It makes a fellow fail at home to gayly chirp, "nobody home!" to some dense friend, uncertain. It's good to say a thing or two to bring your real self into view, and draw aside the curtain. A little slang talk now and then is relished by the wisest men, and that does down for ages. That little proverb ought to be absorbed by all humanity, from hair into babes to sages. The man who slings a little slang will get in solid with the gang in tip, right off, the handle). 'Twill make your tongue as versatile—as easy rolling as a wheel—as lighting to a candle.

CONGRATULATIONS

I want to congratulate you on the success you have made in Fulton, and I can see no reason why The Fulton Evening Times should not have a great future. Fulton is bound to grow and certainly is a good field for an evening paper. I believe you are bound to meet with a large success.

With best wishes for your continued success, I remain

WHY HELP SYRACUSE GROW

The merchants of Fulton who have and are contributing their fifty cents per inch to cultivate an advertising field for their competitors in Syracuse surely have just cause to feel this week they have done themselves proud.

Put on your carpet slippers and spectacles, Mr. Businesss Man, draw your chair to the fireside, and there in its mellow glow, at peace with the world, spread out page by page the three mediums by which Miss Syracuse makes known to Fultonians her tempting array of Spring goods. If by chance you find among the many artistic advertisements a page with a portion devoted to Fulton news, and mixed therewith "business cards" from our local merchants who are brave enough to pool their chance against the many pages of their competitors in the bigger city, can you figure out the balance?

If advertising has any value can the past, present and future influx of advertising matter from Syracuse help but bear its fruit? Indeed, the merchants of Syracuse owe the merchants of this city a great big debt of gratitude for their everlasting contributions toward a medium which pulls down the roof upon the head of the local advertiser. Why fret about the mail order business and then not only invite, but actually contribute fifty cents per inch to aid Syracuse merchants in getting their advertising into Fulton? Why blame Fulton people for lack of loyalty when they buy in Syracuse? You, Mr. Merchant, are "paying the piper." Loyalty should be an example set first by you. The public is a keen observer.

The Evening Times is a home institution. Its employes eat, wear clothes and live in houses. Its prosperity is Fulton's gain. Many clear-sighted people in Fulton are giving the home paper unquestionable support. "We need a home paper," is the general sentiment of the local people who have analyzed their wants. In the recent campaign carried on by the Chamber of Commerce The Evening Times clearly pointed out the helpfulness of a home medium. The inefficiency of the Syracuse newspapers to serve as a Fulton medium was so clear that "all who ran might read."

To become a bigger and more prosperous Fulton our home institutions need our united support.

"United we stand, divided we fall."

Redfield Finds Another Scapegoat

Secretary Redfield is doing his very best to make the Department of the Interior an adjunct of one political party. His whole energy appears to be expended in a campaign to have it appear that a low Tariff is a good thing, and that where business is depressed it is due to incompetence, and not to reduced duties. Recently Secretary Redfield told New Jersey potters that they didn't know their own trade.

Now this apologist-in-chief for the Underwood Tariff law tells the Montgomery County manufacturers that their lax methods are responsible for their reduced sales. But does Secretary Redfield intend to indict the heads of all American industries?

Steel mills were last year operating only 40 per cent. of their capacity. Were all steel workers incompetent? Locomotive plants were working less than their capacity. Were the chiefs of that industry incompetent? More than half the coke ovens were out of blast. What fault has the Secretary to find with the coke producers? Coal mines, sawmills, leather factories, brickmakers, and virtually every industrial plant was in 1914 running at greatly reduced speed.

Has all America suddenly become incompetent? We have supposed that the United States has been right in the van with its industrial ingenuity, and that in a great many fields we led the world. But in order to make out a good case for his pet Tariff theories the secretary of the interior informs us that our methods are obsolete.—Mail and Express.

HEBREWS PLANNING FOR THE PASSOVER

Preparations are being made by the Hebrews for the Feast of Passover which will be observed for one week beginning noon March 30.

Passover dates back to the time the Jews were delivered from the bondage of the Pharoahs of Egypt. Since they made such hurried preparation to leave the dreaded, country they had not time to bake any leavened bread and being forced to prepare their bread in the desert were able to bake only unleavened food. In observance of this at the present time no leavened bread is eaten during the holiday by any Hebrew.

It is also the duty of the Jewish matron to see that there is no "Chomitz" left in the house when the feast arrives. "Chomitz" is any kind of food or material the presence of which in the house on Passover might constitute a conscious and unconscious violation of the Jewish law. If anything is leavened it must go and to that effect the Jewish matron begins cleaning her home from the front and sweeps and carefully cleans every nook and corner, shaking and dusting everything as she goes along making sure that no Chomitz is left. By the evening before Passover every thing in the house is cleaned and on the night the head of the family takes a feather and a bread board and sweeps a few crumbs of leavened bread or other Chomitz, making a prayer as he does so. The crumbs and the board are then tied up and hung away until the next morning when they are burned.

Although the actual work of making the house clean has been already performed this is the symbolical cleaning of the house of all "chomitz."

Even the dishes which have been used during the year are forbidden, and new fresh dishes are used in place of the old ones which have been stored away until the end of the feast.

QUARTERLY CONFERENCE

First M. E. Church Held Fourth and Last Quarterly Meeting Monday Evening

The fourth and last quarterly conference of the First M. E. church was held in the church parlors Monday evening, Rev. C. E. Miller presiding elder of Ontario conference was present and presided. Reports of all the societies and organizations were listened to with great interest and were most gratifying in that they showed the church to be in a very flourishing condition. A paper read by H. J. Wilson from the pastor, Rev. C. L. Peck, thanking his people for the many real acts of kindness and thoughtfulness rendered during his long illness. A paper was also read by Mrs. E. J. Robinson expressing the appreciation of every church member to the Deaconess, Mrs. L. Brown, for the noble and grand work which she has accomplished while in our midst, also their regret that she is soon to leave.

Mr. J. H. St. Louis presented a paper expressing the appreciation of the congregation to Rev. Dr. George Stockwell for his faithful untiring services while he has been their pastor and also asking if it were possible that he be returned to the First M. E. church the coming year.

Pursuit of Health and Rrecreation

At last the city is recognizing the claims of that great army of Buffalo boys who engage annually in the national pastime. In the budget this year an appropriation of $10,000 is made for the purpose of bringing into our municipal recreation schedule sufficient baseball grounds to meet this growing demand, not only of players but of people, for close to 500,000 fans witnessed the games played on the few park grounds opened up to baseball last year.

Cleveland appropriates upwards of $50,000 annually for its municipal base ball association, while St. Louis runs close to the $100,000 mark. Buffalo has made appropriations for the winter sports, for the opening and upkeep of golf links and for a locker house. The city has also taken care of the bowlers on the green, the equestrians as far as needed. It has opened play grounds for the smaller children, but greater in numbers than any, if not all, of these combined are the people who take part as spectators or participants in the national game, and until this year no provision whatever had been made for them. Buffalo has given none too much for the golfers or the bowlers or the tennis players or the equestrians or to the devotees of any other outdoor sport, and has long been too indifferent to the claims of the baseball men.

The appropriation this year for the opening and establishment of the municipal grounds and their upkeep will carry also an appropriation for the opening of some tennis courts, the appropriation being created by diverting from the baseball appropriation of $10,000 about $2,500 or $3,000 for the laying out of park tennis courts, and Buffalo will take its place with the other leading cities in the extent of its recreational facilities and the development of its youth.—Times, Buffalo.

Europe Leaning

Germany comes to Philadelphia and pays 6½ per cent. for the use of $10,000,000 for less than a year. Before the war started eight months ago the German Empire could borrow money for 3½ per cent. The credit of Europe's battling nations has suffered a decline rarely paralleled in history. At no time in the past has the Old World leaned so heavily upon the financial resources of the New as it is leaning today. More European bonds and notes have been placed in this country during the last six months than had been sold here in the previous decade. Since the beginning of our country our land has been a borrower and not a lender. We needed the money to develop new resources and Europe loaned the money because it had no longer any resources of its own to develop. The funds which Europe sent to the United States helped create our industries. The money which the United States lends now to Europe really remains here to pay for supplies which will speedily be destroyed by the war. England, France, Germany, Russia and Austria are growing poorer at a more terrific pace than has ever before been witnessed. They are destroying resources accumulated during many years, besides laying a back-breaking mortgage upon their future.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

AS IT SEEMS TO ME

WHEN I think of the time wasted and the dignity forgotten in business and between friends, debating with hate and anger things that really do not matter, I am impressed with the fact that in many respects we have not traveled so very far from our "chattering cousin," the monkey.

Of late, the thought of this matter of strife and hate, resentment and jealousy, has come to me many times, and it seems to me that they are never really worth while. We must have defined ideas as to the ability of men to do certain things—to occupy certain positions, but beyond this a tribute placed to the credit of someone is a thousand times prettier than criticism. And the beautiful part of it all is, such an attitude of mind distinguishes and becomes you and sets you aside, above the rest of men as fair, sincere, a man of courage, a man with sympathy for the rest of men.

When we come right down to actual truth, none of us knows but little about the things we are paid to do, and certainly in deciding questions of religion, conduct, morals and life's philosophies—ideas which are purely private and personal—no man has the key or the secret, because each of us to a very great extent, dilutes the ready-made, ready-to-wear religions, opinions, precedents and philosophies of the world that are passed along to us, with our own personalities and our own personal preferences, which are shaped this way or that by the conditions that surround us.

The man who expresses an idea fairly, deliberately, as simply as possible—overstating nothing and eliminating superlatives and exaggeration, has done his best, and usually convinces everyone that he is at least sincere and that he has stated the thing as it seems. But the most useless thing, the most conspicuous waste of time and energy, is the average heated discussion; and when a man says "I don't agree with you," remember this is a declaration of war—you are challenged, and usually the discussion which follows is entirely without rhyme, reason, sense or consideration.

Argument is never conducted with the idea of arriving at the truth, and the man who can argue the longest and the loudest is the man who knows the least, the man who has the least regard for the opinions of other men—the man who would narrow the rest of humanity down to his one-sided view of life.

Only a few men are sufficiently informed on any important subject that they are content to listen and go quietly on their way without expressing an opinion. Only a few men have learned from having lived that strife has no place in the scheme of life. Only a few men have the power to avoid the arguments and misunderstandings that bring about the petty regrets, petty strifes and petty sorrows with which our cups are much too full.

The Ideal is that place to which we are traveling and at which we never arrive. Yet, if men and women could weave into their lives all the golden threads from the beautiful things of the world, from the people we meet and from the things we read—from the little conception, ideas and philosophies we are unconsciously and unceasingly weaving in our minds—certainly there would be no place for strife, hate, worry and regret.

The other day I read a poem entitled, "The Silences of Life," a part of which read:

"Ah me, the silences of life are mightier far
And higher lessons teach, than all its noisy clamor;
So let us know the happiness of those Who keep themselves from strife."

PALM SUNDAY OBSERVANCE AT ZION P. E. CHURCH

Next Sunday, March 28th, is Palm Sunday in the church calendar. This is the day upon which the church commemorates the triumphant entry of Christ into Jerusalem to attend the last passover. It is the day upon which the enthusiastic multitudes joyfully conducted the King to the royal city of David singing sons of praise and triumph and scattering palm branches in the path before Him.

There will be special services appropriate to the occasion in Zion church, and the thought for the day will be emphasized in the music and sermons. At 10:45 a.m. there will be a high celebration of the Holy Eucharist with sermon and music appropriate to the occasion. The hymns will all bear upon the thought for the day, and the subject of the sermon will be the King's entrance into His temple.

The evensong service at 5 o'clock will also emphasize this event in the Savior's earthly ministry, and the sermon and music will answer to the particular thought of the day.

Besides these special services, there will be a low celebration of the Holy Communion at 8 o'clock a.m., and the usual session of the Sunday school at 9:30 a.m.

All the seats are free and visitors are invited and cordially welcomed at all the services.

How Red Herrings Came.

The first red herring was accidentally produced in England many years ago by a fisherman who, having a surplus of fresh herring, hung them up in a smoky shed to dry and then forgot all about them. When he looked at them some time after he found that they had changed in color. The king, to whom the fishes were presented, was so interested that he gave permission to the fisherman to exhibit them around the country as strange monsters.—London Express.

BENEFIT FOR THE WHOLE FAMILY

Easter Monday is the date set for a benefit performance in aid of Mrs. Edward Whorl, whose husband has been ill for many months. Manager Darleigh has arranged the date at the Quirk and he will see to it that special pictures and music are provided for the afternoon and evening.

Mrs. Whorl and children are deserving of aid and, without a doubt a handsome sum of money for her use will be the result of the entertainment.

Tickets for the show are now on sale at the stores of J. R. Sullivan, Roberts & Wood, W. C. Morgan, V. C. Lewis and A. L. Warner. Tickets call for the small investment of 10 cents. adv.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, March 24.—A legislative library where shall be kept all books, papers and records in both the Senate and Assembly libraries, is provided for in a bill introduced by Assemblyman Chace of Hudson. The bill will undoubtedly be passed.

Since the fire which destroyed a portion of the west wing of the capitol in 1911, there has been no legislative library. As a matter of fact, there never has been such a place of reference. Both the Senate and Assembly have a single room each where law books are stored, while the State Bill Drafting Commission has a third room where additional legal documents and works of reference are to be found. In the State library there is an extensive law reference library, but it is not necessarily a legislative library exclusively.

The former big reading room of the old State library in the Capitol, is to be devoted to the clerks, members and State officials who have occasion to visit the contemplated legislative library. Here will be placed all books, papers, records, papers and documents of both the senate and Assembly and it is possible that the volumes of the bill drafting commission will also be placed there. Heretofore if one desired to consult the legislative journals of the previous year or of the pears of the past, or to examine data upon a legislative topic, it was necessary to go from one library to the other and then oftimes the information desired was not accessible.

If the Chace bill becomes a law all this will be changed. A librarian will be on hand the year around to assist the public and legislators to secure the information they seek.

A valuable series of documents which will be immediately placed in the library will be the journals of both the Senate and Assembly. They will go back as many years as possible, although there will be a break in the chain of the Assembly journals The Capitol fire destroyed a number of them and there is no way by which they can be duplicated. The fire did not extend to the Senate side of the Capitol and thus the journals of the Senate were not harmed and they are intact.

According to the provisions of the Chace bill, within ten days after its enactment into law, the presiding officer of the Senate and the Speaker of the Assembly is to each name an assistant librarian. The legislative librarian is also to be selected by the two presiding officers of the lawmakers. The tenures of office of the librarian and his assistants are at the pleasure of the officials who appoint them. The librarian is to receive a salary of $3,600 a year and the assistants, $6 a day.

At the present time the Senate librarian is Rutherford Yocum of Peakskill, Westchester county. The librarian of the Assembly is Charles R. Skinner. For a number of years Mr. Skinner was state superintendent of schools.

The fact that the Senate and Assembly has each a library of its own makes it inconvenient for those who have occasion to look up a legislative record or who seeks data upon bills which have been either passed or lost in the past. Under the contemplated scheme this inconvenience will be eliminated.

The new library room has been entirely renovated and is finished in white marble. It is about fifty feet square and thirty feet high and there i splenty of room for tables, book racks and shelves for the valuable documents.

CLOSE WATCH ON BIRDS

Census of Last Summer Only the First of Many Planned

The much-talked-of "census of the United States Biological Survey undoubtedly led to popular misconceptions as to the purpose and scope. The first extensive undertaking of similar character in this country, but on a local, not a national, scale, was the "sectional bird census" taken at Berwyn, Penn., during the seasons of 1899, 1900 and 1901, by F. L. Burns, says "The Scientific American." In that case 588 pairs of native birds were found breeding on 640 acres. In the summer of 1907 the University of Illinois conducted a series of statistical bird studies in Southern Illinois. A bird census of a tract of land near Washington has been taken annually for some years by the Biological Survey.

As Congress has recently placed the Department of Agriculture in charge of migratory game and insectivorous birds, in connection with protective legislation it has become necessary to ascertain the abundance and distribution of the various species throughout the country as far as possible from year to year, so that the effectiveness of protective measures can be tested.

The census of 1914 was, therefore, but the first of a series. It was really of a very fragmentary character, embracing the reports of less than two hundred volunteer observers. Each of these selected a tract of farm land ranging from forty to eighty acres and conforming approximately to certain specifications; on this tract a daily early morning reconnoissance was made for several days at the height of the breeding season, and the number of male birds (at that season in full song) was counted; also the number of each species. Each male was assumed to represent a breeding pair.

In the first census only the Northeastern states were covered with some degree of completeness, though there were a few scattered observers in the West and the Southeast. The results were, however, decidedly interesting and significant. The densest bird population was found at Chevy Chase, Md. (a suburb of Washington), where 161 pairs of thirty-four species were found nesting on twenty-three acres. Here it was noticeable that the blocks most thickly inhabited by people were also most fully occupied by breeding birds. The census showed that the commonest bird in the Northern United States is the robin with the English sparrow a close second; while the catbird a brown thrasher, house wren, kingbird and bluebird follow in the order named.

The English sparrow ordinarily thought of as a city bird, is common on farms, averaging about five pairs to the farm in the Northeastern states. A few years ago a severe winter destroyed nearly the whole bluebird population of the Eastern states, but the census indicates that there are now several million of this popular species in the northeastern part of the country.

A much more thorough census will probably be taken this year.

In the Name of Eugenics

In Los Angeles there live two unfortunate babies who have won each a series of first prizes in baby shows. Neither sought the honors thrust upon it and neither takes any conscious interest in their possession. Their fond mammas, onthe other hand, are simply bursting with pride, and since one of the children is a boy and the other a girl, thus precluding jealous forces in their joy to insure the future misery of their offspring.

Their conspiracy exists in the name of eugenics. The innocent victims have been proclaimed prince and princess of physical perfection, and when the time comes they are to be mated, that they may perpetuate the which one mother has given the other. In the meantime, unless all signs fail, they are to continue as exhibits, carefully fed and guarded and groomed, as becomes prize winners. William, the boy, will probably have to wear his curls long after his imperfect contemporaries have shed theirs and taken to three-old-cat in the back lot. Rubbers and leggings and sanitation and supervision will complete the fence about his poor lonely little personality. And Alene, the little girl, will be dressed and trotted forth for the homage of all relatives and friends. She will have to have her hair brushed interminably and her face washed and her ribbons smoothed and her little ego cultivated to the point of complete self-consciousness.

These, at least appear to be among the details of the eugenic plot which is to have its fruition when, thoroughly spoiled, having survived their dreary childhood and adolescence, each is cast into the other's arms. But long before they enter upon this chapter of their destiny it is safe to say that William and Alene will have imbibed enough of the healthy Americanism of their environment to blow the fabric of the evil conspiracy full of big round holes. More power to them!—Tribune, N. Y.

TREE DOCTOR EXPLAINS WORK

J. Arthur Thompson Says Birds Are of Great Value to Tree Life. Trees Need Intelligent Treatment

Many of our fine old trees, our "wooden preachers" as they are often dubbed, are having their epidermis peeled off and the dermis cleared of the evil little bores, small worms or grubs, which seek the life of the stately old companions gracefully nodding their heads alike thru winter's stormy nights and the gentle sun and showers of springtime.

J. Arthur Thompson, the tree doctor, who is giving some of the fine old elms in the city treatment was busy this morning with his men in South 4th st., when he was asked by a lover of trees to explain the process of treatment given the trees. His statements ran in this wise:

"On inspection of the trees in the city of Fulton I find the elm trees are being destroyed by what is known as the elm bore. The elm bore is a small white worm or grub having a hard shelly head making it possible for it to easily destroy the bark of the tree. These worms average in size from a pin to a lead pencil in circumference and vary from a quarter of an inch to two and one-half inches in length.

Tell-Tales

"It is impossible to tell when these bores begin working on a tree and it is also some years before they show the effect of their work. It may be first detected by the appearance of dead branches on the tree and loosening and dropping off of the outer bark on the trunk of the tree. The average life of the tree after the bores begin to show their work is about seven years. The treatment of these trees requires the work of an expert, as it is a very difficult operation and, if improperly treated would cause the death of the tree."

According to other statements made by Mr. Thompson Fulton possesses some of the finest trees in this section of the state.

The trees could be made more beautiful if properly pruned and taken care of by any one understanding the nature of trees. Trees are a most valuable asset to any property, private or otherwise. We could scarcely picture a beautiful city as without trees. Then, too, trees do not grow over night, and when little saplings have grown to tree's estate we strive in every manner to preserve them.

Massachusetts has a law which provides that individuals must properly care for the trees. The work being done by experts under the state department, the individuals paying for treatment either directly or by tax.

Trees Sacrificed

Mr. Thompson stated a great many of the trees of Fulton have large holes and decayed places, which may come from a great many causes, such as different insects and bores, improper cutting of limbs by people who do not understand the work, by horses being allowed to gnaw at the bark of the tree, and by bruising the tree by thoughtless people and school children, which if treated at a proper time would save the owner great expense or the probable loss of the tree. Many people wait until the tree begins to die before having it treated, thereby making it much more difficult to preserve the life of the tree.

Mr. Thompson did considerable work on the Hunter estate at Sterling Valley on a very valuable apple orchard and has also treated a great many trees at private residences here in Fulton, among them being, the Elks' Home, O. C. Breed, B. W. Bennett, J. C. O'Brien, G. S. Piper, Jesse Morrill, W. S. Lovejoy, and is very highly recommended by all those who have had the opportunity of having him treat their trees.

Mr. Thompson states he will inspect any trees in the city of Fulton and will gladly give free any advice in regard to the treating and growing of trees or shrubs.

Birds, Mr. Thompson said are of wonderful value to a community where the people love their trees. The sparrow, the blue-bird and woodpecker destroy countless insects which work havoc with the trees. The destroying alone of one moth it is estimated would lessen the caterpillar family of from one hundred to one thousand members.

The protection of bird life in our city affords a splendid opportunity for some club or organization in this city. Even the boys in the manual training department could join the ranks and prove themselves efficient helpers by building bird houses for their favorite kind of birds.

DesMonies' greater Committee used a method of exercising effective control over each Committee.

As an illustration the following table was used there.

PROGRAM	ACCOMPLISHMENT
1.—The establishment of a traffic bureau.	Over $20,000 has been expended on the freight bureau in two years. E. G. Wyle, a freight expert, has been employed. An attorney, Mr. N. T. Guernsey, has been retained. Ten cases, involving the freight rates on practically every commodity in ordinary use, have been filed with the interstate Commerce Commission. Favorable decisions have been given Des Moines in the three cases thus far decided by the Commission. Originated agitation that has resulted in appropriation of $25,000 by Congress for survey of Des Moines river.
2.—The encouragement of steam and interurban railways.	The Greater Des Moines Committee gave to the last interurban project all the support a public organization could consistently offer.
3.—The promotion and encouragement of existing and prospective factories through money and personal effort.	The following factories have been located in Des Moines, either directly or indirectly as a result of the committee's efforts: R. O. Stutsman Co.; Iowa Portland Cement Co.; Des Moines Corn Milling Co.; The Sterling Box & Mfg. Co.; Iowa Glue Co.; Des Moines Casket Co.; American Fertilizer & Stock Food Co.; Langston Gunstock Co. Aid was given in selling the preferred stock in the Bentley and Olmstead Company's new shoe factory.
4.—The encouragement and promotion of public institutions.	Purchase of additional ground for state fair (made possible by the committee signing joint note for purchase price). Comprehensive information bureau during state fair. Assistance given Drake University Library. Assistance given Des Moines College, resulting in its enlargement. Guaranteeing 40 per cent. of cost of military tournament. Raising $1,000 for convention fund of Commercial Club. Raising $10,000 for the Coliseum. Organizing Des Moines Industrial Securities Company. Aiding Des Moines Club. Originating agitation for a good road to Fort DesMoines. Proposing the Chicago plan for the settlement of the street railway problem. Arranging public meetings to reinforce the New Spirit, such as the Hugh Chalmer's meeting, May 25th. Aid given greater Iowa Club.
5.—Influencing by all proper means the general public to appreciate their city and patronize home industries. 6.—Compiling and publishing industrial and commercial statistics of the city.	Organized and arranged factory day two years. Arranged Button Day. Arranged College Day. Entertainment of Traveling Men of Des Moines at Majestic Theatre, January 2, 1909, with special booster program.
7.—Compiling and publishing matter showing the city's attractions, as parks, public buildings, colleges, the army post, etc.	Published 10,000 Des Moines Opportunities (conceded to be the best booklet issued by any city in the United States). Published over 50,000 folders showing favorable consuming location of Des Moines. Publication of magazine "Wealth."
8.—Establishment of a news bureau to advertise the city abroad.	Stories of development of Des Moines; of Des Moines plan of government; of opportunities in Des Moines and Iowa are furnished regularly to over 200 daily newspapers.
9.—Procuring so far as is practicable, without expense, the publication by the local press of facts and figures showing the growth, industries and attractions of the city.	The committee has co-operated in getting out every booster edition attempted by any Des Moines paper during the past two years. Stories of successful extensive farming, manufacturing and merchandising, have been so emphasized that they have been repeatedly republished.
10.—Seeing that strangers and visitors to the city are properly entertained.	Over one hundred and twenty-five distinguished guests were entertained the first year the Committee was in existence. Over four hundred were entertained the second year. Among these were such men as the President of the Rock Island System; the General Manager and staff of the Burlington System; Dr. James M. Buckley, editor of the New York Christian Advocate; Commanding Officers from Fort Des Moines; President George Harris of Amherst College; the members of the Southwestern Editorial Association; the Iowa Associated Dailies, etc.

DR. DUNBAR MAY NOT BE RETAINED

At the next meeting of the board of managers of the County Tuberculosis hospital the appointment of a successor to Dr. Allen will be made. Dr. Dunbar of Richland has been deemed the logical candidate for the position, but the news develops that he has a large medical practice and, inasmuch as the hospital superintendent is required to live in the institution it is probable that the Richland man may not want to relinquish his practice.

Dr. Edward C. Boddy of Rochester heads the list of candidates and is active in his candidacy for the place. Dr. Joseph Leo of New York is second on the list and Dr. Dunbar third. Dr. Boddy has had several years' experience in tuberculosis work and is now attached to the staff of the Monroe county tuberculosis hospital. Dr. Boddy was in the Oswego recently. He may receive the appointment if Dr. Dunbar should eliminate himself.

RANCH OWNER SELLS PROPERTY INTERESTS

Hayes Lent, formerly residing at corner of 1st and Ontario sts., but now a ranch owner in the west, visited Fulton yesterday to attend the auction sale of his household goods which he had placed in the hands of John Youngs and Auctioneer Fred C. YACHT CLUB TO ELECT OFFICERS

Sunshiny Days Stir Boat-owners Into Renewed Activity; Clubhouse May Result

Members of Fulton's only yacht club feel the inspiration of these glorious days, and accordingly they think and think of what should be in store for them and of what it is believed is coming this season—a really clubhouse somewhere on old Oswego's picturesque river banks.

Prepaartory to the coming season's activity there will be held in the second floor of City Hall Friday night a meeting when officers will be elected for the ensuing year and plans presented for the summer season. The finances of the club are in good condition and there is no reason to doubt that by the time the season opens, on May 30, a club house will have been secured. About four race events will be arranged for the coming summer, but a number of cruises will be scheduled for runs, both north and south of Fulton.

Every member is urged to be present on Friday night and show his interest in the upbuilding of the yacht club.

ALLEN-HAMMOND

Miss Grace Hammond of New Haven, daughter of Mrs. L. Hammond, and George W. Allen of this city, were married Monday at the home of the bride's sister in New Haven.

Mr. Allen is one of Fulton's "fire laddies," and after a short trip the young couple will be at home to their friends at 513 Utica st.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

FRENCH

Paris, via London.—The War Office today made public the following official statement:—

"In Belgium in the region of Nieupotr our artillery has destroyed several observation points and points of support, from which we saw the occupants take flight.

"To the northwest of Arras, at Carency, we captured a German trench, which we destroyed, and also took some prisoners.

"At Soissons there was a fresh attempt at a bombardment, which was stopped immediately by our artillery.

"In Champagne the enemy bombarded the positions taken by us during the last few days, but did not attack.

"At Vauquois, near the church, the Gemans sprayed one of our trenches with an inflammable liquid. At this point our troops have retreated some fifteen metres.

"At Les Eparges the enemy made two attacks, which were completely stopped.

"At Hartmanns-Weilerkopf we captured a line of trenches and a blockhouse."

GERMAN

Berlin, by wireless—The following report was given out today at the War Office:—

"Two French night attacks near Carency, northwest of Arras, were repulsed.

"In the Champgane Gtrman troops successfully blew up mines and repulsed a night attack north of Beause jour. Minor French advances near Combres, Apremont and Flirey were without success. An attack against the German positions northeast of Badonville broke down under the German fire. The enemy sustained heavy losses.

"Hostile aviators again threw several bombs on Ostend. No damage was done to the military establishments, but several Belgians were killed or wounded. Northwest of Verdun a French aviator was shot down. A French air craft manied with two French non-commissioend officers was forced to land near Greiburg. The occupants of the aeroplane were captured.

"German troops rae pursuing the Russians who were driven from Menel, East Prussia. The Germans occupied the Russian town of Krottingen, across the border from Memel, and freed more than 3,000 Germans who had been dargged away from their homes by the Russians.

RUSSIAN

Petrograde, via London.—An official communication issued by the Russian War Office today says:—

"Our detachment which reconnitred Memel has retired to Russian territory.

"On the left bank of the Niemen, in the region of Mariampol, we have repulsed a German attack, inflicting upon the enemy heavy losses.

their valuable papers through the front windows and down ladders to the street, but were compelled to give up an account of the dense smoke drifting through the entire upper floor.

The firemen lost no time in geeting to work and, while some criticised them for not starting to fight the flames from the rear, that the laddies knew "the ropes" is demonstrated by the fact that the fire was out thirty-five minutes after the alarm was rung in.

A large crowd gathered to watch the blaze and many were the excited comments when the first burst of flame was seen, but all lent a willing hand to the shopkeepers and firemen in this tussle with wind and flame.

Almost the entire stock of the McKinstry store is ruined as is most of Shipman's stock in the 5 and 10 cent store. Dr. Orchard's office is completely burned out, while Dr. Halstead's and the Streeter-VanSanford rooms were merely damaged by smoke. All of the property damaged was adequately covered by insurance.

The origin of the fireis unknown but it is believed to have started in Dr. Orchard's office. Dr. Orchard was not near his office at the time of the fire but was notified by phone later.

About Sports Generally

By Frank G. Menke

Quakertown fans are wondering if some horrible catastrophe won't come as a result of Connie's Mack's advocacy of the tango as one of the training stunts for his athletes. Connie wants his men to dance, provided, of course, that they quit trotting in time to meet the milkman to the back porch. Connie is of the opinion that the new dances develop gracefulness, and speed, and that if his players do the tango it will increase their speed on the bases, and in the field.

The Quaker city fans, however, fear that if the players get the tango fever they will be inclined to bunny hug and hesitate every time that a strain of music is wafted to their ears. That condition would give the opposing teams a chance to inject a brass band into the stands, and order it to play fox trot during every critical moment during the game. "And then do you know what will happen?" asks one Philadelphia alarmist. "Why, this would happen: The Athletics immediately would forget all about baseball, and they would pair off and begin dancing around while the opposition runners would scoot across the plate."

Horrible thought, ain't it?

* * *

"Baseball and golf won't mix," says John McGraw, who recently took up golf after thinking for so many years that the game was a very silly one. John was opposed to golf as a means of recreation for golfers before he became a golfer himself. "And I'm still opposed to it," declares John. "The golfing game is very liable to act as a hindrance to a baseball batsman.

"The golfing swing and the baseball swing are entirely different. The golfer swings down and then up. Before the driving stroke is finished he has completed a full circle. A batter in a ball game swings straight out. He doesn't get under the ball and try to lift it. He aims to hit it squarely in the middle.

"A ball player who golfs during the fall and winter becomes accustomed to that golfing stroke, and when the baseball season opens he is very liable to bat poorly for the first month because he won't be able to shake off that golfing swing, and will try it on a baseball. And he won't connect."

* * *

Down in Havana, Cuba, where, this McGraw fellow learned the game of golf this winter, they voted him the most amazing golfer that ever landed on Cuban shores.

The real, regular golfer follows his drive at a dignified pace. But not so with John. The old baseball rule, of "hit-and-run-'em-out" guides John on a golf course.

The first time John got a good distance on his drive, he started away from the tee with the crack of the driver. He ran to the right—the usual direction of first base. Finding no base after speeding it up for 90 feet, John turned and shot far in the second base direction. Arriving there, and finding no cushion John kept on in a straight line, and soon over took his ball

Ever afterward, so the Cuban caddies say, John would race after his drives, and, portly though he is, John arrived at the halting place just a few seconds behind the ball.

* * *

Heinzie Zimmerman, of the Cubs, ranks as one of the most terrific drivers that ever clutched a golf club. Heinie puts his whole weight behind his golfing drive the same as he does behind his baseball war club. Few of Heinie's drives go less than 200 yards, and he has beaten the 300 mark on several occasions, which is considerable driving.

HOT LINERS

Tired of penny play, John Ganzel has discovered a new way to put thrills into the bridge game at Marlin, Tex. When he and McGraw meet as opponents now players are the stakes. Last night the final rubbers which the Rochester manager captured netted him two pitchers and a shortstop, and only the loss of the heart finesse in the second game deprived him of a pinch hitter.

* * *

Marlin is in the midst of a tango war. Two dancing teachers are in the training town and they're cutting prices so low that even the recruits are thinking about taking lessons.

The newest dancing teacher exploded a mine by sending announcements to all the ball players. The teacher allowed she could teach "the latest ballroom, aethetic and classic dances."

Nobody knows what an "aethetic" dance is, but it sounds as if it ought to be worth the price.

* * *

An umpire's job is a thankless one, according to most baseball fans, but there were 100 applications filed with President Farrell of the State League for berths on his staff during the 1915 season.

* * *

The baseball situation at the present time is peculiar. The minors can get all the players they want from the majors, but they can not get the players to sign contracts—just now—at the rates they are offering.

For years and years the players who are just breaking into the majors have been in the habit of demanding and receiving as much from the big minors as they were receiving in the majors.

Of course it was foolish for the minors to pay so much money but they did and the precedent was established. It is going to be a hard task to upset it, but there is every indication that the owners of minor league franchises will stick by their guns and go through with it toa finish.

It is a safe guess that the same quality of players will be seen in the big minors this year as ever. They may not want to come just now, but when it comes to choosing between playing in the big minors at $250 or $300 a month and taking a berth in the small minors at $100 a month, they will not be long choosing. There are not the players now than there are jobs, which is apt to have a depressing effect on the market, so far as the players are concerned.

A Decision From the Dead

By F. A. MITCHEL

When Donald Erskine was fourteen years of age his father bought a place on one of the principal roads leading from the city. The house stood in a large lot, and in the adjoining lot on one side stood another house of about the same size. There was no other house within half a mile.

Donald had long wished for a gun, but his father would not consent to his having one so long as he lived in the city, but when they moved to the country the boy was given a small rifle. The day after reaching the new residence Donald went to a wood back of the house with his gun. It was in the spring of the year, when shooting was not in order, but he wanted to see how it would feel to be in a wood with a gun.

Donald found something better than a bird in the wood—a girl about his own age gathering wild flowers. Children don't usually require an introduction, and a boy with a gun and a girl gathering wild flowers in a wood were not likely to forego an acquaintance from such a default.

Donald learned that the girl was Amy Stanford and that she lived in the next house to his own home. Since he did not feel at liberty to shoot the birds he leaned his gun against a tree and hunted with the girl for flowers. When they had gathered quite a number they looked about for a seat on which they might arrange them into a bouquet.

"Come with me," said Amy, and she led Donald to a tree from which a branch a few feet from the ground stood out horizontally far enough to make room for the two of them, then turned in a perpendicular direction. There the girl seated herself, spreading the flowers in her lap, and Donald sat down beside her.

Then followed the most delicious hour in Donald's life. Above were the birds, twittering, flying to and from the nests they were building, an occasional song, accompanied by the never ending music of a brook that bent about the tree underneath which the children were sitting, while at their feet trembled shadows of the half grown leaves. Donald passed other hours in the same position with the same girl beside him. But there is that in the first of anything which never comes again. On that branch he took the "first kiss of love." Nevertheless there was not again quite the same sweetness in the songs of the birds, the music of the running water, the flecked shadows of the young leaves.

Just when he took the first kiss of love may not be revealed. It was to him too sacred to be spoken. But we may be sure it was not long delayed. The love that sprung up and blossomed there when it bloomed bloomed forever. He felt that whether they were together or separated in this world or in the next they were one forever.

Three years later—Donald was seventeen—the Erskine family removed to a distant region. Their parting occurred at the trysting place where they had so often met, and neither doubted that they would meet again when they had passed from youth to manhood and womanhood. But they were never to meet again in mortality. Three years later Amy died.

Four years after their parting Donald, who had come to man's estate, one spring morning, sorrowful, with reluctant step passed from the road to the wood where he had been so happy with his lost love. There had been no change. Birds were twittering, the brook gave forth its music, the shadows of the leaves flecked the turf.

As Donald approached the branch seat he suddenly stopped and gazed as though he saw some ugly apparition. A man sat on the branch wearing a countenance of grief. Then Donald with quicker step approached the man and said to him:

"Why are you here?"

"I am mourning a lost love."

"A lost love! Who may that lost love be?"

"My Amy—Amy Stanford!"

"Your Amy?"

"My Amy! Mine in life; mine in death!"

There was a pause, during which the two men regarded each other with a strange emotion. Finally Donald spoke.

"Did Amy Stanford love you?"

"She did."

"You lie."

"I lie? You have strange confidence."

"Confidence, but not strange confidence. If you speak the truth she was not what she was, and that is impossible. But it is sacrilege for me to dispute with you on such a subject."

Advancing to the trunk of the tree where there was a cavity in the wood, Donald thrust in his hand nearly to the shoulder and drew forth a small metal box, took a key from his pocket, unlocked the box and took from it a paper. Without looking at it he handed it to the man who claimed to be his rival for one who had passed to another existence. The latter read it eagerly. Then suddenly it fell from his hands, and, rising, he stalked away.

Donald, before parting with Amy, had given her the box and had exacted a promise that from time to time she would write him on a slip of paper contained in it a message and place it in the cavity. Some day he would come and get it.

What had been written on the paper was known only to two living men and—the dead.

Cookery Points

English Hot Cross Buns.

The following, while claiming to possess absolutely no supernatural properties, nevertheless is guaranteed to turn out of the oven delicious hot cross buns. They not only will be the original sugar coated, hot and delicious cross bun, but will also contain "sugar and spice and everything nice." It is important, however, that the recipe be most carefully followed.

Scald one cupful of milk, add to it half a teaspoonful of salt and beat together until light one egg and one tablespoonful of sugar and add to the milk. When lukewarm add a quarter of a cupful of yeast or a quarter of a cake of compressed yeast. Beat thoroughly and set to rise until light. Then add enough flour to make a stiff dough. Knead with the hands for fifteen minutes. Set again to rise until light, then add a quarter of a cupful of butter softened, half a cupful of currants, a saltspoonful of nutmeg and a saltspoonful of cinnamon. Let rise again. Shape into small round cakes, put close together in a pan, cover and set to rise. When light bake in a moderate oven. Glaze with sugar and milk or white of egg beaten stiff with sugar. Just before placing in the oven take a sharp knife and cut two deep gashes like a cross on top of each.

Some Coffee Pointers.

Not long ago there was published a coffee making recipe which said, "Follow directions for making which accompany each style of coffeepot." This is good advice and necessary for all but boiled coffee, and people regardful of health do not make boiled coffee.

The aroma, the flavor, the cheer of coffee are very dear to thousands of people at the breakfast hour. From the true safety first standpoint, which means at the railroad crossing that you may cross nine times without injury, but the tenth you lose your life, perhaps no one should drink coffee. The strength of the habit of coffee drinking is an argument against it. No human being who prizes his self control will allow any habit to dominate him, and bad food habits often have as fatal results as real vices. But millions drink coffee all their lives, some of which are long.

It is easy now to get the circular coffee roasters, but not so easy as formerly to get the finest green coffee to roast in them and grind while hot. There is great economy of aroma and flavor by this method.

Cafe au Lait.

A large part of the cosmopolitan world drink the French "cafe au lait," or coffee made with milk. In lunch rooms this is called Boston coffee and in many cases is made probably with about half water and half milk and is often served with cream. The essential utensil outside of some good enameled vessel is the asbestos mat. Not for one minute must the milk and coffee be allowed over the straight fire—nay, not for a second. Take the usual allowance of coffee per cup—many people take a very large tablespoon, but some a small one—add a cup of cold milk for each person, putting in a little first and wetting the coffee thoroughly, then set over the asbestos with a small fire under and very slowly raise just to the boiling point, stirring once or twice if the coffee is all on top, as it should not be. Strain into a hot pot for serving. Add a little cream to each cup to give food value.

Delicious Potato Rolls.

Take one cupful of flour, one cupful of warm mashed potatoes, three-fourths cupful of lard, one cupful of scalded milk, two well beaten eggs, one-half cupful of sugar, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one cake of compressed yeast and one-half cupful of lukewarm water. Mix the lard with the potatoes, flour, sugar and salt. Add the eggs well beaten, and the milk and yeast cake dissolved in the water. Set to rise for two hours, then add six cupfuls of flour and let rise for one and one-half hours. Knead, roll out and cut with a biscuit cutter. Fold over like Parker house rolls. Lay on a buttered baking tin and let rise for one and one-half hours. Bake in a hot oven for twenty minutes.

Whole Wheat Bread.

Dissolve a yeast cake in two tablespoonfuls of tepid water. Add a pint of milk to a pint of boiling water and let stand until lukewarm; then add the dissolved yeast, a teaspoonful of salt and enough whole wheat flour to make a thick batter. Beat this batter for about fifteen minutes. It will become quite soft and liquid. Add enough flour to make a dough. Turn it on to a board and knead a few minutes. Return to the pan and let rise until it is light. About three hours is correct.

Scalloped Steak.

Cut the remains of the steak left from dinner into cubes, boil the bones for half an hour with very little water, add a little kitchen bouquet or a beef cube to this broth and season highly. Place a layer of rice remaining from boiled rice on the bottom of a greased dish, cover with a layer of beef, then another layer of rice, then beef, until the ingredients are used, pour the broth over all, cover with a thin layer of breadcrumbs and bake till brown.

Morocco's Commission City.

Credit not Oklahoma, but Morocco, with the latest commission government city. Tangier is not only that, but an international city to boot.

Tangier was long ruled in part by a sanitary commission of foreign consuls. Now it is in the Spanish sphere of belt of influence, and that again is surrounded by the paramount French power. The city itself is neutral and starts with a boom, France having written off part of its debt.

The assembly consists of twenty-four Moors and eleven representatives of the powers. The Moors are real Moors, not subjects of other nations. The military police is headed by a Spaniard, the civil police by a Frenchman. A mixed court sits for foreigners; Moslem cases are tried by the cadi. Political patronage is to be given 33 per cent to France, 29 per cent to Spain, 18 per cent to Great Britain, the rest at discretion.

Voters must be twenty-five years old, payers of $24 a year house rent and noncriminals.

This is tough. Tangier used to be the best behaved city of its kind known, because, not having any extradition treaty, it drew thousands of criminals from all regions, including New York. As there was nowhere to move on they had to behave, and did. Apparently these men cannot vote.

Dumdum Bullets

A working man, a little dum,
Made for his boss a little gun,
A cartridge and bullet,
With point filed off to dull it.

Another worker just as dum
Made for another boss a gun,
A cartridge and a bullet,
With point filed off to dull it.

[illegible] dum workers met,
[illegible] wooden head
And each one sent a bullet,
With point filed off to dull it.

Two bullets fled and said dumdum,
Two bullets hit two heads, dumdum,
Two dummies tumbled o'er stone dead
And ne'er knew what the bullets said.

BILLIONS OF GERMS AT GRATINGS OF SUBWAY.

Bacilli Shown as Ventilating System Is Urged For New Line.

Several billion disease germs collected at an opening of the present subway and stuck on plates were exhibited to the public service commission in New York city as a living argument for providing the new Broadway subway with an improved and sanitary ventilating system.

Members of the Broadway association, headed by Jesse I. Straus, poured into the commission's hearing room to protest against the plan to provide air for the underground road through sidewalk gratings, as in the present subway. Dr. North, a bacteriologist, submitted his collection of bacilli, which were captured near the gratings at Fourth avenue and Fourteenth street, as proof of the foulness that pours from the subway.

William R. Willcox reminded the commission that the gratings not only admit filth to the subway, but are also unpleasant for pedestrians on account of the polluted air that rises through them. Speaking of the dangers of using the same ventilating system for the new Broadway line, he said:

"The air so polluted would not only be projected into the faces and lungs of pedestrians, but would necessarily enter at the doors and windows of places of amusement or business."

George Hallett Cisler, an engineer, said it would be feasible to expel the subway air mechanically through ornamental kiosks in public squares and park spaces. Mr. Straus said more than $50,000,000 worth of property between Thirty-second and Fortieth streets would be affected in value by sidewalk gratings.

Alfred Craven, chief engineer of the commission, told the petitioners that no definite plans for a better system than gratings had been presented and that anything of the sort would be seriously considered.

Old Enough.

"I understand Miss Whatyoumaycall is going to have a birthday party this evening," the fat plumber observed.

"Yep," answered the thin carpenter. "I've been invited."

"Did she keep her last birthday?"

"Yes; and I'll tell you in confidence I don't believe she ever intends to let go of it"—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

It May Be So.

Airmen Drop Bombs On German Submarine Plant at Hoboken, Setting It Afire

City Must Raise Itself to a Higher Order of Things; What Have You to Suggest?

Allies Land Force to Co-operate With Fleet

London, March 25.—Dispatches from Athens indicate that the allied transports have reached the vicinity of the Dardanelles in sufficient numbers to permit the landing of the first troops on the Gallipoli Peninsula. It became known a fortnight ago that General d'Amade, one of General Joffre's most able lieutenants, was on his way to the straits to command the land forces designated to act against the Turks, and on Tuesday, according to reports, the first troops were set ashore on the Gulf of Saros side of the peninsula.

No intimation of the composition of this force has been permitted to escape from the war offices in London and Paris, but it is believed in miltary circles here that the British continpent is composed largely of territorials who have been training in Egypt, with a sprinkling of Indian and regular troops. It is not known at just what point on the gulf coast the transports discharged the men, but it is considered probable the disembarkation occurred to the west of Karnabikeui, where the country is comparatively flat and where there is opportunity for the development of operations either against Bulair or the forts at the Narrows.

Numerous reports have reached London that the Turks on Gallipoli Peninsula have been strongly reinforced. Some reports place the Ottoman forces in the region at 75,000. If this is a reasonably close estimate it is believed here the Allies have at least 100,000 men on board transports in the gulf or already disembarked.

A general attack on the fortifications of the straits is to be undertaken immediately on the arrival of further French and British war ships now on their way to join the attacking squadron.

The last concerted effort against the Dardanelles positions occurred on March 18. This day's action resulted in the loss of three battle ships. Reviewing the situation, military experts have expressed freely their belief that to penetrate the straits the marine forces must be well supported on land.

The Gallipoli Peninsula is the northern or European side of the Dardanelles. At its head it is not more than three or four miles wide, and it is said if this neck of land were effectively held by the Allies Turkish communication with the strong positions on the peninsula would be impossible.

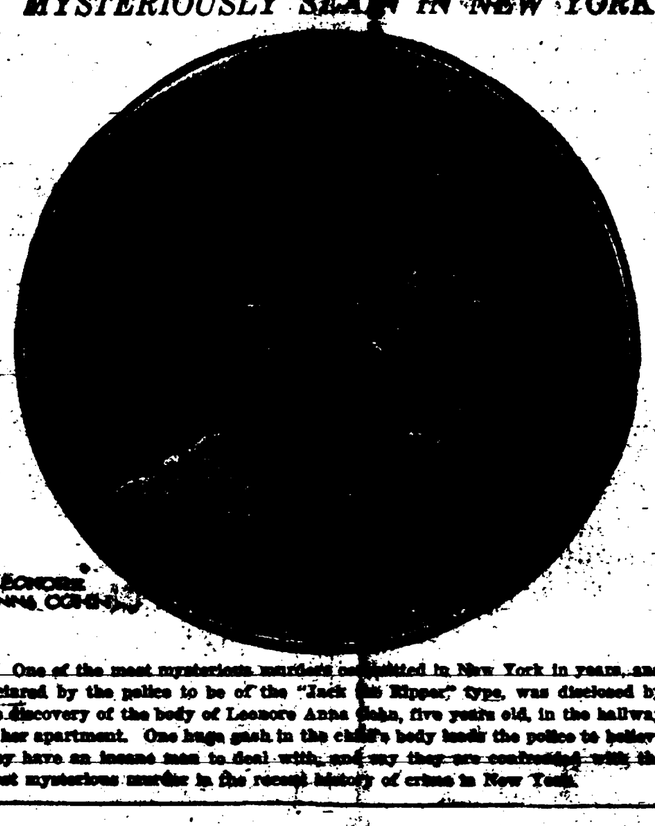
The Tenedos correspondent of the London Times in a dispatch dated Tuesday says:

"Mine sweepers are again at work in the Dardanelles, but the wind is still too high for other naval operations."

JAPS STIR UP BANDITS; FOREIGNERS IN DANGER

Peking, March 25.—Japanese military activity, according to reports, has been supplmented b yactivity of another kind that dangerously threatens peace. Japanese emissaries are reported to be stirring bands of Chinese bandits into action. While this is believed to be designed primarily to bring about a condition that would furnish excuse for the Japanese military commanders to override Chinese authority in those sections, it is feared one result of the condition created may be to endanger the lives and property of foreigners.

The Chinese government is concerned deeply over these reports. It is well known that many Japanese soldiers of fortune, of the type that were involved in the abortive revolution led by General Huang Hsing, are now in Manchuria and Shantung, and it is believed here they are being used by the Japanese government to make trouble between China and Japan.



The possibility of attacks on foreigners by these Japanese, acting either alone or in conjunction with Chinese bandits, gives deep concern to the Peking authorities. In official circles the fear is expressed that a situation may be created for which China is in no way responsible, but which may be used to her great disadvantage, especially in aiding the Japanese authorities in their efforts to create a world sentiment in support of Japan's demand that she receive the right toassume control of China's gendarmerie.

BELIEVE WAR WILL END BEFORE AUGUST FIRST

London, March 25.—The Daily Telegraph says in a dispatch from Copenhagen:

"According to a prominent American busness man, who was traveling last month in Germany, the commercial classes are very despondent regarding the issue of the war. German business men admitted to him that were convinced Germany certainly would be defeated and that it was generally believed the war would be over by August."

FIVE-YEAR-OLD GIRL WHO WAS MYSTERIOUSLY SLAIN IN NEW YORK

One of the most mysterious murders committed in New York in years, and declared by the police to be of the "Jack the Ripper" type, was disclosed by the discovery of the body of Leonore Anna Cohn, five years old, in the hallway of her apartment. One huge gash in the child's body leads the police to believe they have an insane man to deal with, and say they are confronted with the most mysterious murder in the recent history of crime in New York.

British Aviators Attack Builders of Undersea Craft Near Antwerp

London, March 25.—Five British aviators left the Dunkirk headquarters yesterday morning for an attack on Hoboken, outside Antwerp, where the Germans are building numerous submarines. Two of the airmen reached Hoboken and report that they severely damaged the submarine plant. In announcing the raid the Admiralty issued the following statement:

The following has been received from Wing Commander Longmore:

"I have to report that a successful air attack was carried out thism orning by five machines of the Dunkirk squadron on the German submarines being constructed at Hoboken, near Antwerp.

"Two of the pilots had to return owing to thick weather, but Squadron Commander Ivor T. Courtney and Flight Lieutenant H. Rosher reached their objective, and after planing down to 1,000 feet dropped four bombs each on the submarines.

"It is believed that considerable damage has been done to both the works and two submarines.

"The works were observed to be on fire. In all, five submarines were observed on the slip.

"Flight Lieutenant B. Crossley-Meates was obliged by engine trouble to descend in Holland. Owing to the mist the two pilots experienced considerable difficulty in finding their way, and they were subjected to a heavy gun fire while delivering their attacks."

"Flight Lieutenant B. Crossley-Meates of the British Aviation Service, in consequence of engine trouble while en route to make an attack on Antwerp, was obliged to land at Kruiningen," says a dispatch from The Hague to Reuter's Telegram Company. The airman was not injured. He will be interned.

GERMANY HOPES TO KEEP ITALY IN NEUTRAL ZONE

London, March 25.—The Times Rome correspondent telegraphs:

"The points of chief interest here shift with bewildering rapidity. Last week the negotiations with Austria, the Greek crisis and the operations in the Dardanelles disputed first place on the stage.

"This week the fall of Permysl and the reported change of attitude of Bulgaria seem to be the main subjects of preoccupation.

At the moment Rome is a very sensitive nerve center, sensitive almost equally to facts and rumors. It remains to be seen whether the surrender of Premysl will have any effect on the much discussed negotiations concerning the Trentino.

It seems that a renewed order for silence has been imposed on the Austrian press. Presumably therefore Germany still hopes for success, but reports from Austria are distinctly unfavorable.

Are You a Derelict? No? Then Why Not Answer the Questions?

The task of developing a program of work for the Chamber of Commerce is progressing as rapidly as the co-operation of the members will permit. There are many members who have not sent in their answers to the following questions:

(1). What, in your opinion, is the thing at first importance that should be undertaken by the Chamber of Commerce to improve the trade conditions and oportunities in your own line of business?

(2). What, as a citizen, do you believe that the Chamber of Commerce should first undertake for the good of the city at large, and what help in time, thought, or money will you render towards that end?

The spirit of the Chamber of Commerce must be hearty co-operation. The heart and soul of such an organization is co-operation. Each member that fails to send in his answer to the questions is failing to co-operate. If you favor action on any of the activities so far suggested by your fellow members, then go on record by answering the questions. If you have new ideas or ideals write them out and send them in. Join hands with three hundred of your fellow citizens in making the Chamber of Commerce a real instrument of service for Fulton.

Frank L. McVey, president of the University of North Dakota, speaking of the opportunities of cities says:

"As a matter of fact, the town offers an immense economic agency to stamp a new civilization upon the people who pass through its portals all the time. Put the town will prove itself an advance toward higher and better forms of social existence. It is not by decrying the town that progress is to be made, but by raising the town to a realization of its place as a maker of standards, the creator and experimenter with new things, and then in turn giving to the country the best the town has in improvements and opportunities."

If each member will express his views in writing it will enable the Chamber of Commerce to take the necessary steps to put new standards and new ideas in operation for the benefit of Fulton.

Fulton business men and all its citizens should become more closely woven together in industrial and social relationships; they should feel more keenly the call to co-operation effort; their imaginations should respond to the social vision; they should get a "sense of the city" as a place where, in the words of Aristotle: "Men live a common life for a noble end."

FULTON SETS THE PACE

Yesterday word was received that the front page of last Saturday's Evening Times is now on display in the front window of the offices of the Chamber of Commerce in Jamestown, N. Y. This page, it will be remembered, gave the results of last week's campaign.

An effort is now being made to develop the sort of an organization in Jamestown that Fulton possesses. Fulton is setting the pace.

Merchants Complain About Assessments

No wthat the City Assessors are about to commence their work of appraising city homes, factories, business places, vacant lots and other realty holdings, there is a considerable amount of comment made on the system used in appraising places of business. The question as to what is stock in trade and just how its value is determined perplex many men. A number of the city's grocers have been taxed in former years on their entire stock on hand at the time of the appraisers' visit, and they feel that they are being discriminated against in favor of the large mill, seed and lumber firms whose stock it is claimed is very seldom taken into consideration when assesment rools are made up. One merchant asks the question, "Is my stock in groceries any more of 'stock in trade' than thousands of dollars of lumber, grain or seeds? et it appears that most of the lumber, grain and seed men get very lightly when it comes to assessments upon thei rstock."

Many of the grocers would like to learn from the Board of Assessors just what the law is on this matter and what method is used in appraising property for assessments such as they speak of. A reply from the Board would probably clear up misunderstandings and avoid objections and changes when their rolls are completed.

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

CUPID.

DID you ever hear a wise guy clamor lustily and loud that he'll never fall for marriage to a wise and knowing crowd? And he'll chatter long and freely, until Cupid, on the wing, sends a dart into his bosom with a whizzing, whirring sing. Did you ever hear a maiden sling the chatter in your ear that she'd never let a parson interfere with her career? Oh, she jabbers like a parrot till a beady legged bloke whispers sonnets to her softly—the skirmer goes up in smoke. Yes, you've got to bow to Cupid, be you skinny, short or fat; handsome, shy on looks or stupid—paste this classic in your hat. For he does just as he pleases, gets us mated up somehow; and he conjures us like the breezes with his arrows and his bow. Now, he nails some mortals early and he hooks some others late; but he'll catch you when you're napping if your name is on his slate. You may think it soft to dodge him and decline his aid with thanks; you may feel securely anchored in the free, unmarried ranks. But he'll get you if he wants you, and a doughnut or a prune that he'll make you step quite lively to a mushy, spooning tune. Now, of course, some want him badly, but I guess that Cupid thinks that they'd be all right for bracelets, but they'd never do for links. Some folks think they've cheated Cupid, in their lonely singlehood; but it's soup to nuts that Cupid passed 'em by for better wood. Anyway, he's got us guessing, and a jitney to a dime, if the little rascal wakes you, that he'll git you ev'ry time.

CONGRATULATIONS

COUNTERFEIT MONEY APPEARS IN OSWEGO

A counterfiet half dollar made its appearance at the First National Bank, Oswego, yesterday. An investigation made by the bank resulted in showing that a number of spurious coins are moving around in Oswego.

The counterfeit is dated 1893 and is made of ssome alloy, not being the ordinary lead counterfeit.

A short time ago Central Neew York was flooded with counterfeit half dollars and a numbeer of arregts were made in Utica and Cyracuse.

AN EMPTY CUPBOARD

The Salvation Army after the long hard pull thru the trying winter months finds itself with an "empty cupboard." Exactly one hundred dollars will, according to Ensign Fitzgerald's statement, relieve the situation.

The little band of unselfish workers who so faithfully brave the elements nightly to spread the Master's message are deserving of the highest commendation. A great good task well done is the sum total written each year to the credit of the many faithful bands of workers thruout the entire world. In Fulton alone we would not for $100 undo the good the Salvation Army has achieved.

Monday, March 28, is the date when the $100 will be necessary to clear from the Army's books debts for that amount. The Ensign's appeal for aid should not go unanswered. Fulton usually responds promptly and proudly to the Army's call for assistance, and to again assist in placing at the Army's disposal the amount necessary would be a gracious thing to do.

ORNAMENTAL MEN

Somebody said, some time ago, "To remedy an evil, you must remove the cause." Basing his suggestions on this sound sense, Mr. Julius Janowitz gave me a few jolts the other day that set my mind working overtime.

Mr. Janowitz is a successful manufacturer, a practical farmer. He has no axe to grind, save the one great humanitarian idea of helping men up the hill. Mr. Janowitz maintains, and he is right, that this country has too many ornamental men—too many parasites and not enough producers. He says that this condition is getting no better very fast. He says there are certain laws of supply and demand that we cannot successfully ignore.

One of his punches reads like this: "No charity system in the world can ever remedy this evil. Charity is only applicable to children, to the sick, crippled, and very old; but for able-bodied men and women, there is only one thing to do—supply them with work, productive work. In time they will be not only self-supporting, but a further help to the community, and, what is more important, self-respecting."

The fundamental things that go to make up our prosperity are still with us, and always will be. Prosperity for Wall Street, for railroads, for manufacturers, for business men, for individuals, begins with the farmer.

It took Europe nearly fifty years to recover from the Napoleonic wars. In the present mad murder of men, they are tumbling them into trenches, and after scattering over the lifeless forms a thin coat of earth, so their rotting bodies may not endanger the living, they move to new ground and begin to butcher again—not the old men, the infirm men, but the young and the strong. To carry on this bitter mockery of human intelligence, they have borrowed twelve billions of dollars; and I repeat the question, What will they expect of us when it is all over?

Since the Old World war, prices have advanced on wheat to the tune of $500,000,000; on corn, $350,000,000; on oats, $300,000,000—three crops worth $1,000,000,000 more.—Silent Partner.

Publicity Did Not Make Billy Sunday

It is the newspapers that have made "Billy" Sunday, as they have given him so much publicity."—The Rev. Samuel A. Eliot, D.D., president of the American Unitarian Association,

All of the latter part of Doctor Eliot's statement is true, but only 50 per cent of the first part of it is correct. The newspapers have given "Billy" Sunday all the publicity that he deserved, because he has been the most interesting newsmaker in Philadelphia this winter. There is no doubt that many persons attended the tabernacle meetings because they read about them in the papers. But if the evangelist had not had something to give to the people after they got to the tabernacle they would not have gone there at the rate of 40,000 a day for eleven weeks. The newspapers are powerful, but they cannot make something out of nothing. If a man has anything to offer that the people want, or can be interested in, the newspapers, by a campaign of publicity, can send people to his tabernacle, his church, his store or his factory.

The Englishmen who have been crediting the British newspapers with the success of the recruiting movement have overrated the power ofthe press, just as it has been overrated by Doctor Eliot. The newspapers have given publicity to the need of the British Empire in this world crisis. that is all. They might call on the Britisher, to enlist until they filled all the space in their columns with appeals, but if the cause for which he was to fight were not worthy he would continue to drink his ale and eat his roast beef in comfort at home.

The significance of the comment in England and in America lies in the recognition of publicity as the most efficient result-getting agent now at work.—Evening Ledger.

SCARCITY OF ANILINE COLORS FAVORABLE

While the shutting off of the supply of German aniline dyes has its disadvantages, it also has a few advantages which have been overlooked, according to the statement made recently by an importer, who has been interested in the dye trade for more than thirty years.

A lack of aniline dyes, he said, will mean that more interest will be manifested in the production of vegetable dyes. The latter industry, in certain of its phases, has been almost entirely neglected since the advent of the cheaper dyes.

In the Malay States, Burma and India, where formerly the greatest quantity of vegetable dyes were produced,the production has now almost entirely died out, the natives themselves, when in need of dyes and with the natural and finer product right at their door, showing a preference for the artificial dyes.

The growing popularity of aniline dyes lyes in the remotest districts of the world has been a source of displeasures to the collector of Oriental rugs and other finely made fabrics. In using the artificial coloring their handiwork lacks the soft, alluring shades imparted by vegetable dyes, and the texture itself, said the importer, generally does not last as long when colored with artificial matter.

With the German product denied to them the gathering and mixture of vegetable dyes, which is practically a lost art in some districts, may now be revived and probably continued in the fact of the complaint which has been offered by the purchasers of rugs and other fabrics.

The Passing of the Fortress

This war has sounded the knell of the big fortress. It has exploded the tradition—already weakened in the Franco-Prussian and Russo-Japanese wars—that elabortely fortified bases are a great military asset. Instead of giving security to armies put on the defensive, they have proved to be merely traps for the garrisons imprisoned in them. Cut off from the support of mobile armies, they must inevitably yield either to bombardment or to the slower process of starvation.

The lesson of the fall of Metz in 1870 did not carry home at the time because it was felt that Marshal Bazaine did not avail himself of the advantages which Metz offered as a base. He had ample opportunity at Rezonville and Mars-la-Tour to prevent its investment, and after Sedan he fell out of touch with the government in Paris and simply sat down and waited for the end. France, Germany, Austria-Hungary and Russia went on building great fortresses as essentials in a first line of defence. As late as 1903 Port Arthur was considered impregnable. Yet the Japanese took it after a siege of less than six months.

In this war the fortress has had little chance against investing forces. Liege, Namur, Maubeuge and Antwerp were overwhelmed by the fire of the heavy Austrian and German howitzers. The detached forts of the new girdle system of defence offer fixed targets to guns hidden many miles away. They are pounded into submission, once the range is obtained, without being able to make an effective reply. Where no big siege guns are available, as was the case with the Russians before Przemysl, the unwieldly garrison is easily contained and eventually starved out.

The Austro-Hungarian General Staff made a great blunder when it did not order the evacuation of Przemysl after the first siege was raised in October. The garrison and stores were of more value than the fortress was. Misled by the ease with which the city was relieved as a result of the first German drive at Warsaw, the Austro-Hungarian military authorities decided to take another chance, relying on the fighting power of the garrison and on the possibility of another timely forward movement into Middle and Eastern Galicia.

Sorties of a besieged garrison are a poor reliance. A sortie party, even if successful, is tied to the fortress as a base. Investments are rarely broken that way. And the idea that the Teutonic armies would soon again cross the Carpathians and clear the whole west bank of the San River was based on a gross miscalculation of Russia's strength. Von Hindenburg's second campaign against Warsaw relieved Cracow, but it could not relieve Przemysl. Failure to evacuate in October, when there was a chance to do so, therefore, cost an army of 75,000 to 150,000 men, a loss poorly offset by the inconvenience to Russia of a continuance of the siege.

From now on we shall probably see few fortresses held after they cease to be of value in connection with the operations of mobile armies.—Tribune N. Y.

Farm Bureau Introduced

Orange county is enjoying the novelty and the first fruits of a brand new farm bureau. The county papers and people are talking about it with all the wonder and interest that any new and useful improvement receives anywhere. The bureau was established in January and, of course, has not had time to get thoroughly down to business. Nevertheless, the county paper announces with much enthusiaam that the county's farm doctor will give a pruning demonstration on Houghton Farm, Mountainville, an dthat any farmer who wants to know how to trim fruit trees ought to see this accurate illustration of how it should be done.

The paper adds that if any farmer has some problem which he would like solved he can obtain from the agent information on what is regarded as the best practice among the most successful farmers and what the agricultural sharps in the farm colleges have discovered by experimentation and otherwise about the subject.

The Orange county paper declares that the 4,000 farmers should get behind the bureau and help it and use it as much as possible. Thus the paper urges what the best judgment among farmers and others knows to be a good thing. It is what farmers do in a county the longer a bureau exists there. More and more farmers get acquainted with the farm agent and learn what they can out of him. Manufacturers and business men generally would be very glad if they could get their efficiency experts for nothing, but they have to pay high prices for such clearing house information. Farmers can have it for the asking.—Observer, Utica.

Why We Are Importing Gold

More than seven millions of gold was obtained at Ottawa recently for importation to this city, making more than thirty millions in all imported since the beginning of the year.

The gold from Canada is part of the sum which local bankers paid over to British account some months ago for the maturing New York city notes held in London. To avoid the expense and war risks of sending it across the ocean the Bank of England left it on deposit at the Canadian capital.

Why is it now coming back to us? There is no mystery in the matter. A dispatch from Washington which appears this morning notes that the exports of products and merchandise from this country last month were about one hundred millions greater in value than those of any other February on record. The excess of exports over imports for the month reached the stupendous sum of $173,000,000.

The accumulated balance in favor of this country is enormous, although large credits have been given to foreigners and a considerable amount of American securities returned by German and other foreign holders have been boughtand paid for here. Hence a fall in the foreign exchanges to figures so low that they no longer have any meaning, from an international banking viewpoint, and the imperative necessity of sending gold in payment.

Money is in such excessive supply here that the gold is not wanted, and it is likely that the needless efflux will be stopped by the opening of further credit accounts with our European friends and perhaps also with some of our South American neighbors. The United States does not need the cash and can well afford to dispose of foodstuffs and commodities "on tick" to customers with good credits.—Herald, New York.

THE TEXT-BOOKS OF MISTAKES

MISTAKES are text-books from which we receive our most lasting instructions. Our mistakes teach us to recognize the schemes and the theories that do not work. The fact that a man makes blunders does not deserve serious consideration, because we must make mistakes in order that we may know how to avoid them.

The vital thing to be studied in selecting men, is whether or not they are physically and mentally capable of continuous and indefinite growth. In other words, the real problem we have to solve in selecting a man for a certain position, is not whether he will earn his initial salary—but whether or not he will be able to earn a greater salary.

If a man is physically and mentally limited, it is poor business judgment to place him in a position that has any significance or importance. If we plant a seed in the soil, we do not go into the garden two or three days later to look for a full-grown plant bearing a ripened fruit. We simply place the seed in the right kind of soil, under the right kind of conditions.

In other words, we give the seed to grow—to give expression to that something we call Life—and life means expansion and evolution. The seed that grows into a plant takes advantage of the air, light and water—uses the minerals and the substance of the soil to produce fibre, strength and stability.

When the plant has come out of the ground a little way, it is a part of our scheme to see that it is properly fed, properly watered—that the weeds about it are cut down and destroyed. In other words, to see that it is properly protected and properly nourished.

We place a man in a certain position, under the right nevironment, under favorable conditions, and place in his hands the right tools. We give him encouragement; instructions about the pitfalls to avoid; point out the advantages of improving his mind; of laying out a systematic method of reading, and preparing a plan for training his mind. His attention is called to the advantage of developing traits that give him personality and force of character.

There are hundreds of positions in our great cities that pay ten thousand dollars a year, and there are hundreds of men employed by the firms where these ten thousand dollar opportunities exist who are resigning their positions —leaving their work—because there is "no opportunity."

There are more ten thousand dollar jobs than there are men to fill them, and these positions are to be found in the same business houses and in the same fields where hundreds of men are asking themselves in terms of doubt—"Is there any opportunity for me here."

Men approach us almost every day for positions, and we are compelled to "advise" that there is no opening—because these men do not measure up to our idea of what the opportunity, which in truth does exist, demands in the way of ability, decision, determination and enthusiasm.

We see men every day who have good minds,—men who can lay out a plan for "operating a railroad or conducting a department store"—men who devise, in conversation, "ingenious and far-seeing policies" for directing thousands of employes—men who in thought are like philosophers, and in action are like "peanut venders."

It is a part of the work of every manager of every business to conduct his work so well, that the firm can proceed without his assistance. This is, in the final accounting, the work of every man who has important work to do. He must employ people of capacity, people who can do all work so well that it will never be necessary to do the same work again.

MEMBERSHIP CONTEST COMING TO A CLOSE

The membership contest between teams in the Modern Woodmen of America comes to a close next Wednesday night. Captain Hyde leads at present by five points.

In the pool contest Captain Ives leads Captain Barker by about 30 points. ne game was played last night, Oliver Schoolcraft going down before the shooting of E. Tallman. Their score stood 50-30.

Active Chamber of Commerce.

The secretary of the Tiffin (O.) chamber of commerce calls on at least five members of the chamber daily, asking them for the following: First, attention to payment of dues; second, suggestions as to how the chamber can be of benefit to their business and to the community generally; third, names of additional prospective members. This gives every member the sense of personal attention, and gives him an opportunity to express himself freely, providing a constructive suggestion of worth for the chamber.

STATE NOW WILL HAVE BIRD DAY

Bird Having Most Beautiful Song In America Is Hermit Thrush

Inasmuch as the birds of the county stand between the people and destruction the State of New York will have a Bird day, just as it has an Arbor day. This year the Bird day will be Friday, April 2, when some part of the school day will be devoted to the study and enjoyment of birds. The University of the State of New York has sent to every elementary and secondary school in the State a copy of the portfolio containing 106 color plates of the birds of NewYork. These pictures are chiefly painted by Louis Agassiz Fuertes, whom Dr. C. Hart Merriam pronounces as the best bird artist in the United States. The pictures are valuable for the identification of birds. A bulletin telling what birds mean and their value to the people also has been sent to the schools.

One of the articles tells of the value of nature study in schools to stimulate the unfolding mind to activities which arithmetic and grammar are slow to do. Elon Howard Eaton, the author of the article, tells of finding one-half ounce of seeds of weeds in the stomach of a song sparrow in Ontario county last April. He declares that there were certainly 10,000 song sparrows in Ontario county and he estimates that in eight months they consumed 37 tons of weed seeds. When it is considered that the song sparrow is only one of 30 to 40 seed eating species, it is easy to see that they save some hoeing.

The bulletin gives directions of how persons can be of assistance to the State University by making certain observations on bird life.

The bulletin has an article written by Mr. Fuertes who tells about "The Voices of Birds." Mr. Fuertes can imitate the songs and calls of many of the birds, and he urges youngsters and others to learn to recognize these songs and calls.

Mr. Fuertes continues: "Walks cross-country take on a new significance and interest; summers in the mountains present rich new fields to conquer, with the tinkling, silvery, tinsel song of the winter wren as a background and the indescribably beautiful flute-playing of the hermit thrush as a rare treat for those who have a little patience. In all my travels in Mexico, Alaska, California, Florida or South America, where I have heard the songs of many distinguished and beautiful birds, I have never heard anything to surpass the serene and tender hymn of our hermit thrush, and after all the years of familiarity with it, I still experience the same thrill of wonder when, in some cool and quiet mountain glade, I hear this perfect, crystal song. And while our commoner wood thrush lacks the sustained tones and calm leisure of the hermit, its voice is no less beautiful, and its rich alto notes stir a chord closely akin to that struck by its shy, forest-haunting cousin. All our thrushes have this same beautiful quality of tone that, so far as I know, is shared by no other birds.

"So little have we noticed this wonderful thing that birds alone can do, that we have almost no words in our language with which to describe or talk about it. It is as intangible as the fragrance of flowers, and as mysterious. This, I think, is perhaps the principal reason why each person should make the slight and pleasant effort to solve for himself the little riddles that reach his ear on his summer walks in the woods and fields. Catch the notes if you can, see if you cannot whistle them; perhaps when once firmly in your brain, you can reproduce them on piano, flute or violin. They are intangible, waverous, evanescent things, and our musical notation is still too hard to lend itself to them, but if you can get them on record you will really help to enrich our musical language."

Cold Proposition.

"My bank is mean, I think."

ROUND ABOUT

The Unitel States Historical and Patriotic Societies and Associations of New York want a good history of the State of New York. In order to obtain such a history the associations offer three prizes, one for $1,000, a second one for $500 and a third prize of $250. When the competition is closed, the associations will have really three such histories, of greater or less merit. The history is to be about 100,000 words in length and its theme is to show the part that the State played in the establishment of the Uniteed States as an independent nation. That would cover the period down to 1790.

The money to pay the prizes is to be raised by subscription. One thousand dollars is probably more than a writer would receive for such a history, from a publisher, so the offer is an inducement. The offer should produce a history of some merit. But it is a peculiar fact that really great histories, poems, novels, or other literary pieces are seldom produced for a prize.

From the French trenches in Alsace comes a tale of a soldier who awoke one morning after a sound sleep, complained of a cramp in his thigh, and said that he could not get up. At first his superiors insisted that he do so, but as he steadfastly refused, they sent for a doctor. The latter found that a bullet had come through the roof of the soldier's shelter during the night and had lodged in his thigh. It had not even waked him up.

Early in the war it was announced that one German general, himself in active service, had 10 sons at the front. Something very close to this record is now reported from France, where 10 brothers from La Vendee region are with the colors. Another remarkable case is that of Francois Vouillon of Douzy-le-National, France, who has eight sons and two sons-in-law in the French army. Of these onee son and one son-in-law have already been killed in battle.

In a "leave-to-print" speech published in one of the Congressional Records that have been straggling along sincce the Sixty-third Congress came to an end is the following:

"When one is raised upon the farm and leaves it, he is most likely some day to return to the soil." True. And the soil to whichh he returns occupies a space about six feet by two by four in dimensions.

William B. Hurd, jr., ex-County Judge of Kings County, who died in New York yesterday, was graduated from Madison (now Colgate) University in 1872.

EASTER FLOWERS WILL NOT ADVANCE IN PRICE

There will be no advance in Easter flowers in Northern New York cities. European war conditions which have resulted in wholesale advances in foodstuffs and wearing apparel, will cause no upward trend in the modest violet or the blushing rose

Violets which are now selling at from $1.50 to $2 a hundred at the present time will take the usual Easter jump to about $2.50 per hundred. Easter lilies are to be exceedingly plentiful this year and will command the usual rate of 25 cents a blossom. Roses which are now selling around $3 a dozen will not have any great advance as they are generally a second or third choice for Easter wear. American Beauties wil l command from $6 to $12 a dozen according to the length of stem and freshness.

Sweetpeas are now selling at from 15 to 25 cents a bunch, but on Saturday before Easter they will have a uniform price of 25 cents a dozen. Carnations will probably run at about a dollar a dozen.

CAPTAIN T. O. BALL RESIGNS FROM OFFICE

Surrogate Miller has lost by resignation his chief clerk, Captain Torrey O. Ball who yesterday made known to Mr. Miller his intention to relinquish the official position and devote time and energy to the practice of law. The resignation takes effect immediately and comes after a service of fifteen years.

With his many duties in the Surrogate's Court he had found it impossible to give a proper amount of time and attention to his private business. So far as can be learned no successor has been appointed as yet.

FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE IN HAND

Dr. B. F. Wende, the Federal inspector, who is directing the campaign in Onondaga and Oswego counties against the foot and mouth disease, says that he believes that the last infected animal in this territory has been killed.

Fifteen cattle of the Wadsworth herd were killed and trenched and twenty infected animals on the Johnson-Kimberly property near Syracuse were killed. Two infected hogs were included in the Johnson-Kimberly killing.

Dr. Wende said, however, that there is a great deal more territory to be covered, including the fifty miles of farm land stretching from Pompey to Williamstown. It will be more than a month before the work is completed. Two new veterinarians arrived and six others are expected to reach Syracuse today. While the State and government veterinrians working there feel that they have almost succeeded in stamping out the disease, they are taking every precaution to guard against a recurrence of the epidemic.

The police authorities of every city and town in the State have received a notice from the State Department of Agriculture warning all citizens who own dogs or cats in any quarantined territory to keep their animals on their own premises.—Oswego Times.

MORA-CAMPBELL CASE DISCONTINUED

Orders of discontinuance were filed in Oswego yesterday in the action of Mora Joseph vs. Mary J. Rogers, Dora A. Campbell and John W. Campbell. These persons all live in this city and the actions were brought to set aside real estate transactions which were, it is claimed made with intent to defraud.

The original action was brought by Mrs. Joseph to recover damages for alleged alienation by the defendant, Mrs. Rogers, of her husband's affections. The case was tried in Pulaski in May, 1913, and a verdict for $8,000 was found in favor of the plaintiff. The parties are Armenians.

WATERTOWN PHONES PASS 4500 MARK

The Bell Telephone Company of Watertown this month passed the 4,500 mark in the number of subscribers and takes first rank with any city of its size in the state in the number of phones per 100 inhabitants. There are to be exact 4,517 telephones in the Watertown exchange area, the number including of course the rural patrons. With the increased business there are now no less than 45 young women being employed as operators in the Stone street building.

CLEANING UP AFTER FIRE

Water Did Great Damage In Three Stores. Repair Work In Full Swing

By the renovating work now being carried on at the scene of yesterday's costly blaze it is evident that Whitaker and Butts, owners of the damaged block, are loosing no time in getting things back to a semblance of order. A force of men under Superintendent Frank Gegoux and Foreman Vance Lawton are now rapidly tearing away all plaster, lath and woodwork in Dr. Orchard's office while Walter Drury has a force of carpenters strengthening the overhead rafters, tearing away old wainscoating and adding new doors and window sills in the rear end which were completely burned. The contract for repainting and papering has not yet been let by the owners. Underneath in the McKinstry store, very little is being done outside of cleaning up. The insurance adjuster has not yet arrived to appraise the damage. In Shipman's 5 and 10 cent store the clerks are slowly separating the water-soaked stock from that which is only slightly soiled—an immense task after such a deluge among small articles in showcase and on shelves.

In Butts' shoe store it was later discovered that the water from the floor above worked its way through the walls on the east side of the store settling on the shelves now piled high with shoes. Mr. Butts believes that $200 will barely cover his loss by this cause. In the front of the old post office block McKinstrys have a good portion of the stock of clothing and a few show cases which were taken out shortly after the fire started. Upon a thorough investigation it has been learned that all losses are completely covered by insurance and after the decision of the insurance adjuster, who is expected to arrive today, business will be quickly resumed, commencing with a quick sale of damaged stock.

SURVEYS READY

Myron Stranahan, superintendent of canals, Oswego division, announces that there is on hand at his office official surveys of the Oswego canal showing all buoys, lights, points, dams and locks between the city of Oswego and Three River Point which section will be open for navigation this summer. The charge for these surveys is nominal.

THE MODERN CHAMBER OF COMMERCE IDEA

Today it is the Embodiment of Organized Community Building; Its Outline Is Described by Secretary Stoddard

The principle of organized community effort, which has been so strongly emphasized by the organization during the past ten days of the Fulton Chamber of Commerce is a new one. It is so new that many people have little conception of its breadth and of the power it carries with it.

Years ago it was thought that the only functions of a Chamber of Commerce were to fight railroads and "grab" factories. This impression has been steadily dying a natural death, but there are still many who do not comprehend in the full the possibilities for constructive work that lie before a strong, efficiently organized Chamber of Commerce such as Fulton now has.

The following outline will suggest in some measure the scope of thhe activities of a modern Chamber of Commerce:

1.—Leadership.
Social; political survey; card index of citizens; publication of creed; know social unrest; enlightened selfishness; charity and misfits; agricultural developments.

2.—Educational Progress.
Vocational; manual; office training; local colleges; raising money; permanent residence co-operation of business men.

3.—Municipl Research.
Investigation of expenditure; classification of accounts; publication of facts; charter reform; taxation of improvements.

4.—City Planning.
Economic ends defined; ownership of real estate by city; parks; playgrounds; transportation; smoke prevention; grade crossings; boulevards; markets; beautification.

5.—Industrial Promotion.
Economic survey; trade territory; trained labor; kindred manufacturers; financial guarantees; bonus; remission of taxes; factory additions; "incubators"; developing home industries.

6.—Conventions.
Card index to follow up; selection; entertainment of officers; special funds.

7.—Transportation Regulation.
Survey to promote co-operation; rate adjustments; claim collections; over-charges; rating; route book-package car service; routing; transportation school; terminal service.

8.—Wholesale Trade.
Trade extension trips; salemen's school; reporting trade openings; rebating fares; merchants meetings.

9.—Retail Trade.
Style week; unprofitable advertising curtailed; trade territory development; credit; co-operative deliveries; street lighting; shop early; trading stamps; courtesy.

10.—Export Trade.
Packing advertising; translating; foreign trade trips.

These are the lines of work successfully pursued by more than one hundred enterprizing and efficient commercial organizations throughout the U. S. These heads are not intended to define the action of any specific body, but are cited as the general field of work that may be undertaken with the hope of ultimate success by active organizations.

A definite program of work representing those things which a majority of the citizens feel to be the first needs of Fulton is now being developed from the answers to the question blanks recently issued. This definite program will constitute the "platform" of the Chamber of Commerce and give to it a specific aim and purpose.

The "Platform" will become the yard stick by which the accomplishments of the Chamber of Commerce will be measured.

PREPAREDNESS IN COOKING

By T. L. TIERNEY

In taking up this division of the subject of cooking it will not be beside the mark to enlarge somewhat upon what is meant by "preparedness."

It is this: A boy who is about to enter upon the task of cooking a meal is not prepared to do so unless he has first seen to it that his fire is properly built; that he has sufficient wood, both as to kinds and quantity, to last entirely through the process; that all the utensils to be used are at hand, and that he either knows his recipes by heart or has them by him and has read them over, and, in turn, has all of the food and ingredients within reach which are to go into the making of the meal.

Perhaps more cooking has been spoiled, which otherwise might have been good, by the cook having to leave his food during the cooking to get some article which he had forgotten than through any other cause. For example, wood for the fire, salt, a spoon. Therefore, a cook who has to run after one thing or another after he has started the cooking process is not prepared.

It will only be necessary to refer to the subject of fires in this article in so far as to advise the cook to have at hand enough wood and of the proper kinds to complete the meal. The kinds is meant the most suitable for the different types of fires.

For Type 1 it is necessary to have small hard wood. A large piece split up finely is perhaps the best, as, with the exception of broiling, the cooking on this type of fire requires a steady heat of considerable intensity and by having the small wood at hand you can keep the fire burning evenly by constantly watching and adding wood as required. For broiling use a quantity of hard wood, but considerably large, and burn down to a bed of coals before attempting it.

For Type 2 fire almost any kind of small, dry wood will do, hard or soft.

For Type 3 fire use hard wood, but much larger sticks, three or four inches in diameter. The cooking on this type of fire requires a much longer time to complete, but at the same time requires a steady heat.

Therefore, to prevent having to stand over your fire and continually feed it, use larger wood and you will be able to leave the cooking for 10 and 20 minutes without much danger of finding it spoiled upon your return.

This latter statement does not apply to baking, however; it would be better to watch your bread or biscuits quite closely.

Don't forget the vegetables that have to be washed, scraped or pared; do it before you start to cook or you will have trouble.

Don't forget to mix your flour and water if you are making hunters' stew and want to thicken it.

Think ahead and anticipate your needs, for it is the only way you can be prepared.

To be prepared the cook must know his recipes and how to put the various ingredients together to get the best results. Here are a few I have found to be very good:

FLAP JACKS—For three persons, 2 cups flour, ½ cup cornmeal, 1½ tablespoonfuls baking powder, 1½ teaspoonfuls salt, 1-3 cup sugar, 1½ cups boiling water, 1¼ cups milk, 1 egg, 2 tablespoonfuls melted butter. Directions: Add cornmeal to boiling water and boil 5 minutes, turn into bowl, add milk and remaining dry ingredients, mixed thoroughly, sifted if possible, then the egg well beaten and butter.

HOE CAKE—For three persons, four cups white cornmeal, one teaspoon salt, mix. Add boiling water or hot milk to make stiff batter; moisten hands in cold water; take tablespoon of batter and press into thin round cakes. Make on plank or griddle—turn and bake on other side—about three-quarters of an hour. A little grease of crisco can be added if deesired; mix it into the boiling water. Incline the plank or griddle to the fire just so the cakes do not slide off.

BISCUITS—See page 174, "Boys" Hand Book." Same, but with a little more grease or crisco.

HUNTERS' STEW—(for three persons)—1 lb. meat cut into squares 1 inch to 2 inches. Cook slowly one hour with water enough to cover; add a little salt. Add 1 onion, 3 potatoes, 2 carrots (cuh up). When vegetables are done, 20 or 30 minutes, stir in flour and water to thicken (1 tablespoon of flour mixed thin with cold water.)

DUMPLINGS—3 heaping tablespoons flour, ¼ teaspoon salt, rounded teaspoon baking powder; mix dry stuffs break 1 egg into dry ingredients; add 2 tablespoons water; stir to hard and thoroughly; consistency to string a little; drop from spoon into stew; 10 minutes.

Note.—Hard to make enough for a large number of persons.

MISS HARRINGGTON NOT GOING WEST

Fortune doesn't often stalk abroad, yet that is about the substance of conditions surrounding Miss Milderd J. Harrington, heiress to a fortune estimated at from $30,000 to $40,000.

Upon receipt of the news that Chares Graham, ranch-owner of Idaho, had died, leaving in his will a clause that gave to Miss Harrington his total fortune, the young lady proceeded to make arrangements for a trip to Idaho to lay claim personally to the estate.

Since that decision was reached Miss Harrington has employed an Idaho lawyer to look after her interests, therefore the long trip is made unnecessary.

"CULLUD PUSSONS" MADE EVERYBODY LAUGH

A very pleasant farewell surprise was given Mrs. F. C. Ives last evening when the members of the West Side P. T. E. club presented themselves at the door of her home in Worth st. The visitation was unknown to Mrs. Ives until she met them face to face. The surprise was most overwhelming. Each lady present was dressed in quaint garb, the most pleasing perhaps being Rastus Robinson and his two girl friends (colored). The greetings were hearty and the evening was one of thorough enjoyment, leaving an impression on each one present that cannot soon be effaced. The guests carried material for excellent refreshments, which was greatly enjoyed by everybody.

HARDWARE DEALER BUYS FORD AUTO

A. M. Druse has bought from Geo. B. Palmer a Ford touring car, 1915 model. The macchine is equipped with the full complement of electrical accessories, and is a joy.

Mr. and Mrs. Druse yesterday afternoon obtained from their purchase a lot of joy that was unmixed with an incident to mar the exhilaration of actually making one of the durned things go.

Mr. Palmer is in receipt of six Fords, but before the season has become advanced very far he shall have received and sold from 40 to 50 cars.

THE QUIRK TODAY

The "Thumb Print," the feature provided for the patrons today continous 2 to 11:30 is one of the best and most thrilling detective photo-dramas yet produced. Not blood curdling but one that is instructive in showing the modern methods of handling the criminal element. The story and plot are interwoven in the proper manner to make this picture just right to please the masses. It is in four reels. Good comedy reels are added to make up a 6 reel program. Matinee 5c; Night, balcony, 5c; main Floor, 10c.

WILL LOCATE HERE

John D. Palmer, president of the Palmer Hope Hardware Co., will locate permanently in Fulton at the home of his son, L. A. Palmer, 301 Oneida st. He will bring his family with him from Auburn.

HONESTY.

If honesty is the best policy in business it is also the best policy when one has done wrong and is confronted with the question whether he shall confess everything frankly or make excuses. A transparent excuse is worse than none at all.

ACTIVITY AT ELKS HOME

Clubhouse Will Be Made One of the Most Attractive In State. Work Has Begun

A busy scene of progress on East 1st st., can be noted in front of the Elks home where about twenty mechanics are building the temporary staging for the erection of a wide veranda on the front of the clubhouse. The style will conform to the general style of the building; eight pillars will support the veranda roof which will cover the entire space which extends across the entire front of the building. At the south side there will be built another large addition in which bowling alleys will be installed; the plans for this part however have not yet been stated, but it is understood that within a few days a separate contract will be let for this portion.

With these improvements and additions the Elks home will be one of the most beautiful and well equipped of its kind in this state.

"LIFE OF OUR SAVIOUR"

"The Life of Our Saviour," in 7 reels, depicted in beautiful hand colored motion pictures will be presented at The Quirk, Saturday, March 27.

This passion play production was made by the Pathe Freres Company and represents an immense financial outlay as all of the scenes were filmed in the Holy Land and the services of multitudes of people utilized. But it was the aim and desire of the producers to reproduce with historical accuracy the greatest drama in the world's history.

The Saviour is shown in all His divine simplicity from the manger to the ascension. The beautiful part of the photochronology lies in its delicate yet historically accurate handling. It epitomizes the infinite art of scriptural visualization and graphically impresses on the intellect a great truth that has awed the universe since the advent of the little Christ Child two thousand years ago.

The scenic investiture together with the inspiring sacred music embellishments make The Life of Our Saviour an irresistible magnet of attraction which is sure to attract and electrify audiences for generations to come. Baycony, 5c; main floor, 10c.

SUNDAY ASSAILS EVOLUTION IDEA

Evangelist Made Attack Upon Cardinal Principle of Modern Science

Darwin's theory of evolution was assailed last week by "Billy" Sunday in a sermon before an audience of many thousands. The evangelist said the spiritual side of man "knocks that doctrine in the head." He added, however, that it was possible for man to fall back into the animal stage if he forsakes the realm of the spiritual and of religion.

"Billy" preached one of his most dramatic sermons on"The Man Without a Soul." While admitting that every man has a soul, no matter how low he might be, he declared his belief that many persons who continually neglect to embrace Christ as their personal Saviour and to live decent lives come very near to the animals who are without souls. He said that the spiritual side of man was the only thing that separated him from the brute.

In Dramatic "Trim"

Sunday took no Biblical text for the sermon, but painted a word picture of Philip Nolan, "the Man Without a Country."

The great throng held its breath as it heard the dramatic recital of the trial, conviction and sentence imposed by the old Colonial Court upon the man who damned the United States. With subdued breath and intense interest the audience followed Sunday as he took it on a tour with Nolan through the period during which he was kept away from his fellows, ignorant of the rise of thee nation that gave him birth and never permitted to hear the name of his country.

And then the thousands of faces, many of them covered with tears, brightened. Smiles played around the corner of hundreds of lips and there was a sigh of satisfaction as he took his listeners into the cabin of the old ship and let them listen to the evidence of love and devotion Nolan gave when he pleaded to hear all about the rise and glory of the United States. Vividly the audience saw the little American flag draped by the old man round the portrait of George Washington, and it seemed they could trace the crude lines of the rough map Nolan had sketched to keep in his mind some faint recollection of the country he had disowned.

Pleads for Spiritual

At the conclusion of the dramatic recital, "Billy" jumped into the lesson of his sermon. He compared the life of Nolan to that of a man or woman who refuses to acknowledge allegiance to the realm of the spiritual.

"The average man looks after his citizenship in the material world fairly well," he said, "as far as it applies to temporal, material, personal gratification. In the world of dust and dollars the average man lives most of his citizenship. This is all right. A man should look well after his citizenship in the world of the material—it is a good world. It is the best, I say it reverently, that even God could make. It is not to be despised and hurried through. But the man who never gets beyond his cook, his tailor, his barber, club or limousine is nothing but a refined animal.

"There is the greater world of the spiritual, just as real as the world of the material," continued Sunday."The man who ignores his citizenship in the world of the spiritual and spends his time and energy and his citizenship in the world of the material is the consummate idiot and fool of the centuries."

Sunday asserted that "a man may swear away his citizenship in the world of the spiritual, by one dramatic act, as Nolan did, by his love of money, by his love of lust, by his unbelief or by allowing his spiritual nature to lie dormant so long that all the best in him is paralyzed. so that he has no thoughts of God, no prayer, no religious duties to perform."

In closing the evangelist pleaded with his audience to consecrate themselves to Christ.

"Whenever you cancel your citizenship in the world of the spiritual you take the crown from your brow, you dash the scepter from your hand and slink back with thhe rest of the brutees," he yelled. "Christianity appeals to you to throttle the animal in you and give thee angel a chance. It is an appeal for you to pray, to recognize that you are a citizen of two worlds, to prepare you for your citizenship in the world of thhe eternal by accepting Jesus Christ as your Saviour."

ROOT ACCLAIMED TO LEAD IN 1916

Philadelhpia Meeting Roused by Introduction of Ex-Senator as First Citizen of U. S.

Philadelphia, March 24.—"The Republican party should inaugurate a national educational campaign to stamp out sectional controversy, suspicion and distrust, of business and the detrimental results of the policies of a hostile government, which knows nothing of business and discards the testimony of men who know and conduct business," declared ex-Senator Elihu Root at the climax of a sensational speech before three thousand members of the Union League here to-night.

Introduced by Senator Oliver, of Pennsylvania, as the "first citizen of the United States," he was loudly acclaimed by the gathering as the best man to lead the party in 1916.

Tracing the history and struggles and victories of the Republican party from the time of Lincoln, Mr. Root sounded a warning to the Union League and the country at large that again they must face the stress and storm of battle if they would see the union preserved from the designs of a party bent on the regulation of all business—a party which subjects men to suspicion and a policy which is responsible for the present hesitancy and unrest.

"The distinctive characteristic of recent years has been the conduct of the government by men who have little concern in business and distrust and suspect men of business," continued Mr. Root. "Everywhere suspicion of business is the characteristic of the day."

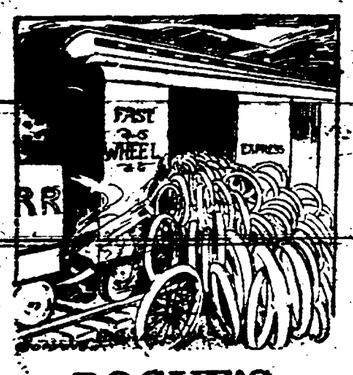
FEDERALS WANT TO GET GIANTS' PLAYERS

"Dick" Carroll, business manager of the Brookfeds, was in Dallas Yesterday to meet Bob Bescher and Davy Robertson of the Giants. Carroll wantsthose men in the event New York insists upon their going to St. Louis in exchange for Perdue.

Carroll will also endeavor to sign a number of the "rookie" infielders of the Giant squad, who will undoubtedly be turned back to the minors at the opening of the season, owing to the player limit rule of the National League.

If he is successful inn obtaining Robertson and Bescher, Magee will use "Davy" in a trade with "Joe" Tinker, of the Chicago Feds. Magee is eager to land Claude Hendrix and is willing to give Claude Cooper and Robertson for the twirler.

DODGERS DEFEAT CUBANS



Daytona, Fla., Mar. 25.—There was absolutely nothing to the game between the Superbas and the Cubans yesterday, but the National Leaguers, who won the game, 8 to 0. A base on balls to Daubert, after Shultz had been retired; Cutshaw's triple and Zach Wheat's single in the opening stanza was enough to win. "Tiny" Dell, who pitched the first five innings, held the Cubans to one hit and no runs. "Sherry" Smith, who relieved him, confined their mitting to a pair of singles.

The score by innings:

PRINCETON WINS FIRST GAME FROM GETTYSBURG

Princeton, N. J., Mar. 25.—The Princeton nine began the collegiate baseball season of the East here yesterday with Gettysburg, winning, 3 to 2. Cool weather and early season form prevailed, making the game uninteresting. Princeton collected nine hits from the delivery of Hoar, but Howard let them down without a suspicion of a safety in the last five innings.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

FRENCH

Paris, Wednesday, via London.—The following communication was issued today by the War Office:

"North of Arras the Germans attempted two attacks on the large spur of Notre Dame de Lorette during the night of March 23 and 24. Their defeat was complete.

"In Champagne, also during the night, an attack was attempted against the fortified position of Beausejour, which was repulsed."

"A division of the Belgian army has made progress on the right bank of the Yser. Another has captured a German trench on the left bank.

"At Hartmanns-Weilerkopf we captured the first line of trenches referred to in the preceding communication; likewise a second line. On this section of the front our troops are organizing themselves on the further side of this second line. Within a short distance of the summit we captured some prisoners, including officers."

GERMAN

Berlin, by wireless.—At Army Head quarters today the following statement was given out:

"In Champagne there were only artillery duels. In the forest of Le Pretre, northwest of Pont-a-Mousson, the enemy attempted to win back ground gained by the Germans, but was repulsed. New attacks by the enemy northwest of Badonvillers and on Reich Ackerkopf broke down under the German fire. Fighting is in progress at Hartmanns-Weilerkopf.

"German troops are pursuing the re treating Russians northward of Memel East Prussia. They captured near Polangen 500 Russians and took three guns and three rapid firers. Quantities of cattle, horses and goods were tsolen by the Russians. Near Laugszargen, southwest of Tauroggen and northeast of Mariampol, Russian attacks were repulsed with heavy losses for the enemy. Northwest of Ostrolenka several Russian attacks failed. Here we captured 20 officers, more than 2500 men and five machine guns. Eastward of Plock several charges of the enemy failed.

"The Germany army expresses cordial thanks to the gallant garrison at Przemysl, which after four months of defence full of sacrifices could be overpowered only by hunger."

A further official announcement was given out in Berlin today as follows:

"German sea forces haveassisted the land forces in the operations to the north of Memel, on the Baltic. They bombarded on Tuesday afternoon the village and castle of Polandgen and kept under fire the road from Polangen to Libau."

RUSSIAN

Petrograd, via London.—The following official communication from General Headquarters was issued today:

"On the right bank of the Narew River, on the Skwa-Orzye front, including the right bank of the River Orzye, the engagements for possession of isolated points of vantage are assuming a more general and extremely desperate character. The Germans who brought up strong reinforcements here, at the expense of their other fronts, are stubbornly defendinn their positions by a deadly fire and are opening new and vigorous counter attacks.

"Our troops, however, are making slow but sure progress, capturing trenches and heights. Among the noteworthy actions have been hand to hand engagements fought near Vakh-Karask and Jednoroziec, where our troops, who attacked with self-sacrificing valor, gained the day, taking about 300 prisoners, eight machine guns and two trench mortars.

"On the left bank of the Vistula there have been no important changes. The Germans have been forced to evacuate Domanevitze farm, on the Pilica, and we have consolidated the ground won. Counter attacks in this region have been repulsed.

"In the Carpathians our troops are advancing. They seized today several fortified heights on the front between the roads leading to Bartfeld and Uzok. Everywhere the counter attacks of the enemy were unsuccessful. We took during the course of the day more than 4,000 prisoners, one field gun and dozens of machine guns.

"On March 22 the Germans again attacked, without success, height No. 992, near Koziouwka."

AUSTRIAN

Vienna, via London.—The following official statement on the progress of the war was issued today by the Austrian War Office:

"In the Western Carpathians the battle has developed on a front as far as Uzsok Pass, and continues with great violence. Strong Russian forces are attacking, and positions on the heights are being bitterly fought for.

"In several engagements, between the Pruth and the Dniester, in the mots northerly part of Bukowina, the enemy was dislodged from some villages and compelled to retreat toward the frontier. North of Czernowitz the villages beyond the Pruth, which served the enemy as a basis for operations against the city, were cleared of Russians.

"In Poland and West Galicia there has been no change. We have destroyed a Russian pontoon bridge across the lower Dunajec."

CUNARD LINE MAN TO HEAD BRITISH FACTORIES

London, March 25.—Circumstantial statements were current in Liverpool last night that Mr. Lloyd-George had made final choice of the strong, pushful man he has been looking for. That choice has fallen on Mr. Alfred Allen Booth, chairman of the Cunard line.

Mr. Booth, it was further stated, will be assisted in his task by a number of other competent business men.

Mr. Booth's task will be to co-ordinate and direct the energies of the British factories taken over by the government for the manufacture of army and nav ysupplies.

KAISER HAS 120 SUBMARINES

Building Fleet for Great Attack, SSays American Traveler.

New York, Mar. 25.—Samuel Pearson, who formerly held a commission in the Boer army, has returned from Copenhagen, after making a tour thru Germany. He said that the German navy had 120 submarines ready for a raid on the English coast and were constructing others on the Scheldt.

He did not believe the Zeppelins could accomplish much, as they were too unwieldy. They were capable of carrying sixty-four men, besides a big quantity of explosives.

Before leaving Germany an officer told him that another 30,000 mines were being laid in the North Sea.

CITY OF 14,000 TO BE VACCINATED

Millville, N.J., March 25.—Thirty-five cases of smallpox have been discovered here, and the board of health at a meeting arranged for the vaccination of Millville's entire population, numbering nearly 14,000.

Mayor Geig urged the board to order the closing for two weeks of all motion picture theatres, churches, schools and other places where public gatherings are held. It was decided, however, to defer action on this proposal pending the arrival of an inspector from the State Board of Health, who is expected tomorrow.

All of the cases are in mild form. The Mayor has placed a ban on the holding of rummage sales, which he blames for the rapid spread of the disease.

ORCHID BRINGS $1,000

Moore's 'Queen of the Belgians' Sold at Auction to New York Man.

New York, Mar. 25.—A man, whose name was not revealed, paid $1,000 by certified check for a new orchid exhibited by Clement Moore at the International Flower Show, which closed at the Grand Central Palace on Tuesday. The flower was known as "the $500 orchid," that being the lowest estimate of its value, and it was one of the features of the show. It was sold at auction yesterday at the shop of G. E. M. Stump, florist, 761 Fifth avenue.

The orchid is a new hybrid of the variety of Cattleya Schroederae. It was grown by Mr. Moore, and is the only one of its kind. It has been kept under glass, securely locked, after the English fashion, in order. that no one could get its pollen. The proceeds of its sale go to the Belgian Relief Fund of the Red Cross. The orchid was named for the Queen of the Belgians.

ALBANY LETTER DAY BY DAY

Cardoze Tells Times Readers the Doings of Officials and Lawmakers

By FREDERIC T. CARDOZE

Albany, March 25.—A legal brief in the handwriting of the late Governor Cleveland, remarkable in its exactness and legal arguments, has just been presented to Dr. John H. Finley, State commissioner of education, as president of the Grover Cleveland Memorial Association. The brief came from Daniel H. Meegan, a Utica attorney.

The brief is that of the plaintiff offered before the Superior court of Buffalo in thhe case of Hadcock against O'Rourke and was prepared by Bass, Cleveland and Bissell, attorneys for Hadcock.

Dr. Finley says that the brief was written between October 1876 and 1881 in that the firm of Bass, Cleveland and Bissell was dissolved in the latter year.

"Mr. Cleveland's brief is a document which was unusual even at that time," says Dr. Finley in discussing the recent acquisition to the Cleveland papers. "Now it would be quite impossible and unheard of to receive a similar document from an attorney of standing. It is a document of one hundred and forty-three closely written legal cap pages, filling both sides of seventy-two sheets.

"Every word of it is in Mr. Cleveland's familiar handwriting,the astonishing part being that, so far as internal evidense shows, it was written at no more than two sittings. The uniformity of the handwritting is remarkable, that at the end of each section being as legible, as deliberate and neat as at the beginnings.

Attorney Meegan also regards the brief as a remarkable document. He says that it is convincing that Mr. Cleveland, as a practicing attorney, was quite willing to assume the exacting burden of careful preparation of his client's interests.

"I have read somewhere," says Attorney Meegan," that Mr. Cleveland as president and governor, had a fondness for the pen in committing statements requiring some care in the formulation. This hand-written brief demonstrates that such was the trait of his earlier years as well."

The brief in thhe possession of Dr. Finley was based upon an action for the payment of a sum of money. As counsel for the plaintiff Mr. Cleveland was successful in the trial court and obtained a verdict from the jury. The judgment entered on the verdict of the jury was affirmed by the general term of the Superior court of Buffalo.

Dr. Finley is having the brief prepared for preservation and will subsequeently send it to the Grover Cleveland Birthplacce Memorial Association at Caldwell, N. J.

The preparation of matter for the brief penned by the late president and governor envolved an enormous mass of figured in the calculation of a sum in partial paymeents, which as Dr. Finley put it, "would put to blush any of the typical problems in this knotty subject in arithmetics of twenty or thirty years ago.

Attorney Meegan has received from Dr. Finley a letter thanking him as the donor of the Cleveland brief. In the letter Dr. Finley says that he will see to it that he is credited with having made it possible for the Grover Cleveland Memorial Association to receive the document and thhus pass it over to the Cleveland Birthplace Memorial Assocciation.

BARROW DISPUTES FULTZ'S PLAN

By Frank G. Menke

"I am absolutely opposed to arbitration," vociferated Ed Barrow, president of the International League, when asked yesterday for his idea of Dave Fultz's proposition to end the war between Organized Baseball and the Federal League.

"The International League will become no party to any peace proposals that might involve territorial concessions by us. I am willing to give no quarter, and I am sure that all the club owners are strongly with me, for we would rather be kicked out of business than concede to the Feds. As for baseball in general, arbitration might be a good thing, and then again it might not.

"The International League came into the field first and it is going to stay. The Feds have no right to be in baseball, for they came into it from no love for the sport, but to advertise their business. They have utterly commercialized the game and done everything to it but actually kill it. However, their one hope now is to be taken into the fold of Organized Baseball, and if they are fought for a year more they will be ready to throw up the sponge.

"In a good many of their cities their men with capital have already stepped out and the clubs owe a lot of money. You mark my words the conditions in Kansas City and Indianapolis at present will be duplicated in Buffalo and Baltimore next year."

Minors Ought to Rest.

When asked what he thought of Ban Johnson's suggestion that minor leagues suspend for this season. Barrow continued:

"I have long advocated such action. Several months ago I told a good many heads of Class B and C leagues that they ought to give their territory a rest for a year. When they come back there will be a genuine demand for baseball and conditions will have been bettered. I suggested idleness for this year to the president of the Virginia League, and I believe it would do that circuit a world of good.

"Fultz's proposition, of course, might be a good thing for the minor league players and the majority of men in the majors, but where would the owners get off? The big players are getting it all, being overpaid by 50 per cent., and even a pennant winner cannot hope to make money. Why, Jim Gaffney came through the National League season last year with not one cent profit on his Braves! Raises in salaries, bad conditions, bonuses and what not ate up all the profits that were legitimately the owner's.

Carnival of Jumping.

"In 1913 conditions in baseball were ideal. Along came the Feds and started a carnival of contract jumping and dissatisfaction that has well-nigh killed the game. They have done nothing for the sport and yet they have the nerve to ask for concessions."

Barrow asserted that things were going along in fine shape with the Jersey City club. "Our newest stockholder is Colonel Auston Colgate, a member of one of the most prominent families in the State and a State Senator.

When asked about Newark, Barrow said the Ebbets-McKeever interests were ready to go through the season and if necessary drop $25,000 or $30,000 rather than give in, or let the club go for a song. It is understood that Barrow is very anxious to have a new ownership in Newark, but nobody seems to want to go into the magnate business in that town.

George Solomon, who owns some of the stock, had somebody fined up to buy out the Ebbets-McKeever stock, but the prospective purchaser got what is known in the vernacular as cold feet.

Hoofeds for Kansas City.

Newark is to keep the Kansas City outfit, after all. The schedule now calls for the transfer of the Indianapolis club to Kansas city, and the retention of Harry Sinclair and Pat Powers of Stovall's Peps.

The Federal League knows that Judge Baldwin's decision favors the Kansas City club, but Jim Gilmore has so arranged things that the Judge will not be called upon to hand down his decision. Were Judge Baldwin to record his decision making the injunction against the league a permanent one. It would, according to our legal authority, hold forever, and a shift of the Kansas City club next year might be blocked.

Gilmore and his associates figure on invading New York next season. Were they to give the champion Hoofeds to Newark, they would give the Jersey town the best aggregation in the league, and would have no real strong team to put into New York in 1916. In addition, the Kansas City players have gone on record with some uncomplimentary things about the Kayees, and might not be welcomed back. Newark is glad to get any Fed combination, and the Indianapolis outfit might be able to rouse the staid citizens of Kansas City to some baseball enthusiasm.

Regarding Yankee Grounds

While the Astor property at East 161st to 164th street and Cromwell and River avenues may be too narrow for a ball park, there is land adjacent that can be acquired, too, for the new Yankee stadium.

The proposition to build on Manhattan Field, next door to the Polo Grounds, is not likely to be considered by Colonel Ruppert and Captain Huston. For one thing, it would not give the club the individuality to be obtained by a stadium away from the Polo Grounds. They might as well remain at the Giants' home. Then again there might be more fans up on the viaduct than in the stands. The bridge would beat Coogan's Bluff all hollow.

Harry Hoch, ex-Bingo hurler, appears to be in line for a regular berth with the St. Louis Americans this season. He took part in 12 games, mostly as relief pitcher, last year, and in the inter-city series let the National Leaguers down with one hit in a closely contested argument.

BEACHEY ONCE QUIT AIR GAME

Declared That People Paid to See Him Die.

FATALITIES APPALLED HIM.

Aviator's Best Known Stunts Were the Death Dip or Vertical Glide, Spiral Glide and the Dutch Roll—Claimed to Have Flown Before 20,000,000 People in Spectacular Career.

Lincoln Beachey, who was called the most daring aviator of this country and who was killed making a flight from the Panama-Pacific exposition grounds, said on March 12, 1913, at the Olympic club in San Francisco:

"I am through with flying. You couldn't get me into an aeroplane again at the point of a revolver. I am convinced that the only thing that draws crowds to see me is the morbid desire to see something happen. They call me the master bird man, but they pay to see me die.

"Moreover, I am affected by the deaths of so many boys who were friends of pupils of mine. Gene Ely was killed in October, 1911, at Macon, Ga., trying to do my dip, and his widow told me that she would still have him with her if he had never seen me fly. In Chicago last September Horace Kearney's mother begged me not to teach her son any more aerial tricks, and he said to her, 'Mother, I must do what Beachey does if I want to be a top liner.' Three months later he was drowned while flying from Los Angeles to San Francisco. Charlie Walsh's wife begged him to cut out the spirals, and he said: 'Beachey does them. I have to do them too.' Last October he tried a spiral in Trenton, N. J., when a wire snapped, and 50,000 people saw him killed. I feel as if I had murdered him. Those boys were like brothers to me, and I am through."

Many Thrilling Escapes.

Four months later Beachey appeared at Glenn H. Curtiss' establishment at Hammondsport, N. Y., and joined the Curtiss staff of aviators.

"In a year," he said, "aviation has changed from a dangerous sport to a serious and useful profession. The development of the flying boat will mean much to the world. That Frenchman, Pegoud, has been doing some wonderful stunts looping the loop," he added. "I believe I can do everything he has done and go a little further."

Only a few weeks later, on Oct. 7, Beachey lost control of the aeroplane in which he was flying at Hammondsport and ran into a group of spectators on the roof of a shed, killing Miss Ruth Hildreth of New York and seriously injuring her sister Dorothy and two lieutenants of the navy flying corps.

In the following November, at San Diego, Cal., he not only duplicated Pegoud's loop the loop, but did a triple loop, surpassing the French flier. About a year ago, while looping the loop at Santa Barbara, Cal., he fell and was slightly injured.

Beachey was considered the most skillful and daring of American aviators and was bracketed with Lieutenant Milling by Orville Wright as one of the two "natural" fliers in the country. He was born in San Francisco in September, 1887. While still a boy he started to learn navigation of the air in dirigible balloons, at that time the only machines available. His preceptor was Captain Thomas Baldwin of San Francisco, under whose direction he made his first flight in a dirigible at Oakland in 1905. In the summer of 1906 he circled the capitol at Washington. In September of that year he met with his first accident—at Baltimore—when his balloon caught fire several hundred feet above ground. Beachey escaped with slight burns. In the following June, after he had been flying for some weeks at Happyland, New York, he flew to Manhattan, descending at Battery park, and when ordered on by the police flew away uptown and eventually was carried over Randall's island, where his balloon was wrecked and fell on a buoy in Little Hell Gate. Four months later he won a race at St. Louis from his old instructor, Captain Baldwin. In June, 1908, a balloon in which he was flying fell into a brier patch at Jamaica, N. Y.

Another Machine Wrecked.

Meanwhile the Wrights had found out how to fly, and when, after a year or two, the development of the sport had shown that it had come to stay, Beachey decided to become an aeroplanist. He began to take lessons in the winter of 1910-11. His first machine was wrecked at St. Paul.

In the following spring, however, he came out as one of the greatest stars of the game. On May 5 he circled the capitol at Washington. On June 27 he flew under the Niagara Horseshoe falls and under the steel arch of the upper bridge in the presence of 150,000 people. On Aug. 5 he won a $5,000 prize offered to the winner of a race from New York to Philadelphia, and two weeks later, at Chicago, he broke the height record for an aeroplane by rising 11,578 feet. At this meet Beachey was the star, making numerous sharp spirals such as never had been tried before.

Among Beachey's best known stunts were the death dip or vertical glide; the spiral glide, and the Dutch roll. He claimed to have flown before 20,000,000 people.

DRESDEN SISTER SHIP OF EMDEN

German Cruiser Averted Serious Outbreak in Mexico.

TOOK HUERTA TO JAMAICA.

British and Japanese Cruisers Had Been Hunting Her For Long Time Before She Was Overtaken and Sunk in South Pacific Ocean, Off the Coast of Chile.

The German light cruiser Dresden, which was sunk by British cruisers in the south Pacific off the coast of Chile, was a sister ship of the famous Emden, and was commissioned in October, 1907. She displaced 3,600 tons and had a speed exceeding twenty-five knots, but her armament was light, consisting of ten 4.1 inch guns, eight five pounders, four machine guns and two torpedo tubes. Her complement was 321 men.

Last spring the Dresden was on the Caribbean station, and was lying off Tampico when the American forces captured Vera Cruz. At that time there was serious rioting in Tampico and the lives of the American residents were threatened. The American ships off the mouth of the river had withdrawn, but Captain von Kohler of the Dresden notified the Mexican authorities that he would land marines if foreigners were menaced, and thus averted a serious outbreak.

Later on in the summer the Dresden was the vessel on which Victoriano Huerta, upon abandoning Mexico, traveled from Puerto Mexico to Jamaica. Upon the outbreak of the war the Dresden was still stationed in Central American waters and for a time was hunted by the British and French cruisers in the north Atlantic. She steamed south, however, and after sinking the British steamers Hyades and Holmwood, off the coast of Brazil, respectively on Aug. 16 and Aug. 26, went through the strait of Magellan and joined Admiral Count von Spee's fleet in the southern Pacific.

With Von Spee's Squadron.

She was present at the battle off Cornel on Nov. 1, but inasmuch as the action was decided by long range guns the Dresden had little part in it. Then, with Von Spee's squadron, the Dresden went to the south Atlantic a second time and was in the disastrous battle off the Falkland islands on Dec. 8. On this occasion Von Spee, realizing that he was hopelessly overmatched, tried to hold off the British fleet with his two armored cruisers, the Scharnhorst and Gneisenau, long enough for the three small and fast commerce destroyers, the Leipzig, Dresden and Nurnberg, to get away. The Leipzig, however, was sunk in the action and the Nurnberg was run down and destroyed a few hours afterward.

But the Dresden escaped, and on Dec. 13 arrived at Punta Arenas, in the strait of Magellan. She left that port on the following day and went on into the southern Pacific, since which time several British and Japanese cruisers had been hunting for her.

The end of the Dresden leaves only two German ships on the high seas outside of home waters—the cruiser Karlsruhe and the auxiliary cruiser Kronprinz Wilhelm.

Juan Fernandes island, near which the Dresden was caught by her pursuers, is about 400 miles west of the Chilean coast and is a Chilean dependency. It was alleged last fall that German ships were using it as a base for refitting and as a wireless station, and the Chilean government, after protesting to Germany, sent three destroyers to the island in December to maintain the neutrality of the colony.

In the seventeenth century Alexander Selkirk, a Scotchman, was shipwrecked on the island and lived there for four years. His account of his stay is generally believed to have suggested to Defoe the idea for Robinson Crusoe, although Crusoe's island, both in location and in its characteristics, was quite unlike Juan Fernandes.

RED CROSS COMPETITION.

Seven Cities and Towns Win Prizes in Sale of Holiday Stickers.

Prompt reports on the Red Cross seal sale during last year indicate that 57,000,000 or $570,000 worth of seals were sold last December, an increase of 7,000,000, or 15 per cent over 1913. Banners have been awarded to seven cities and towns selling the largest number of seals per capita in seven different population groups. Garden City, N. Y., won the prize in Class A with a sale of 20.49 per capita in a population of 1,400; Sewickley, Pa., in Class B, with a sale of 16.74 per capita in a population of 4,479; Charleston, W. Va., in Class C, with a sale of 6.63 per capita in a population of 22,996; New Rochelle, N. Y., in Class D, with a sale of 6.01 per capita in a population of 28,867; Troy, N. Y., in Class E, with a sale of 5.7 per capita in a population of 76,813; Rochester, N. Y., in Class F, with a sale of 4.76 per capita in a population of 218,149, and Pittsburgh in Class G, with a sale of 2.004 per capita in a population of 533,905. Brooklyn, N. Y., had the largest sale of any city in the country, its total being 2,800,000 seals. New York, Rochester, Buffalo and Pittsburgh were the only other cities that sold over 1,000,000 seals.

Great Britain Watching the Turbulent Republic

For the moment the public eye is turned again toward Mexico, as intervention pressure has been renewed, and the anarchic elements shatter the last remnants of law and order in the land. The sinister, "Mexican situation" once more has been forced upon the worn nerves of the officials of the State Department, who for a few months have been enabled to brush aside their perennial troubles with Villa and Carranza and Zapata while grappling with the problems created by the European War. The Mexican chieftains, however, have been insistent upon creating more trouble and anxiety for the harassed leaders of diplomacy in the capital.

Even in the midst of a world war, Great Britain never has taken her eye off Mexico. She could not afford to do so. Her interests there are too vast. Nearly all of her new battle cruisers and her dreadnoughts of the Queen Elizabeth type, now forcing her way through the Dardanelles, are oil burners, and England is dependent almost entirely on Mexico for her oil supply. For that reason the Cowdray interests in Mexico are in effect national British interests and it is essential that the Cowdray concessions be preserved.

The beginning of the present phase of the Mexican situation began when Carranza tried to abolish certain of the Cowdray concessions around Tampico. The objections of the United States and Great Britain to this action caused Carranza to rescind it, but with the threat that he might renew it at any time. Since that time other elements in Mexico have been waxing in strength, and economic conditions in the interior have grown so bad that famine prevails in much of the northern country.

The precarious conditions existing in Mexico City already have been sufficiently exploited in the past few weeks. They are an index to the real state of affairs in Mexico. So far as the protection of foreigners in Mexico is concerned, the United States Government has already taken formal steps in the way of "representations" to such authority as exists in Mexico, and have received satisfactory replies thereto. In the meantime, however, control of the capital has passed from one faction to another, and while the tension created by the evacuation of Obregon has been temporarily stayed, few officials doubt that the old trouble will manifest itself again in aggravated form.

The best opinion in Washington inclines to the belief that the United States is nearer intervention in Mexico today that at any time since Porfirio Diaz was forced out of the dictatorship. There is a great skepticism as to whether the Wilson administration will ever accept armed intervention as inevitable; but that the President will be compelled to interfere in some way, either by supporting one of the factions with all the power at his command, to the exclusion of the others, or by lending financial aid to one of the contending leaders, is regarded as certain.

There is every evidence that all the Mexican factions are being financed by American and European interests at the present time. An eminent lobbyist in Washington, who some months ago was Carranza's counsel and representative, is now aligned with the Villa element, and it is assumed that the most powerful American elements in Mexico have made the same jump. It is doubtless true that many sinister influences are having some share in promoting the present anarchy and chaos in Mexico, so as to bring the day of American intervention nearer, in their view.

No one in Washington assumes to forecast the future in Mexico, except those who proceed on the assumption that it is steadily growing worse. President Wilson has given no indication that the policy of "watching and waiting" is to be changed in any particular, and he is as strongly insistent as ever that Mexico's troubles are largely due to outside financial tinkering of which he is a sworn foe.

Beneath the surface, there is deep anxiety about Mexico in administration circles; far deeper than any officials will admit. Even the strain and tension which existed during the first days of the Vera Cruz occupation hardly excelled that of the present time.

When giving the check to Mike, according to a dispatch, President Lannin said it was a good barometer of the strength of organized baseball and that a ball player could bank that he would eventually get notice.

The tennis tournament for the New York State championship in men's singles and doubles which has for many years been held at the Crescent A. C. Bay Ridge, will be held at the Yahnundasis Golf Club, Utica, July 3-10.

* * *

Despite reports to the contrary George Pierce, speed king of the State League in 1912 when he was the Miners' pitching mainstay, is to be retained by the Chicago Cubs.

A professional tennis instructor by the name of White has been engaged by the officials of the Yahnundasis Golf Club, Utica.

For the Children

Esther Learns About the Rabbit and Easter.

On Easter morning Esther found more than her usual supply of eggs, chicks and bunnies and was pleased.

"Grandma," said Esther, taking a wee nibble of a chocolate egg, "grandma, will you please tell me how the rabbit came to be associated with Easter?"

"They are lovely gifts, indeed, my dear, for they are gifts of love!" answered the old lady, setting down her cup. "The rabbit is good because he is the expression of friends' love toward one another at this glad season, when all the earth rejoices at the meaning of Easter day. Hope has risen in every heart, and no one cherishes ill will or hatred toward his neighbor. And so the rabbit comes with gifts to children to remind them of the plenty and bounty of the earth."

Game of Acid Drops.

Let the company sit in two rows, facing each other, the ladies in one row and the gentlemen opposite them.

Two leaders must be nominated, of whom one, a lady, walks along behind the row of gentlemen, and whispers to each a serious question, which they must in turn address later to their vis-a-vis.

The gentleman leader walks behind the row of ladies and to each whispers something of a perfectly absurd, or very biting character, which each must repeat in answer to the question asked of her by her opposite. Neither leader must know anything of the questions or answers proposed.

The gentleman at the head of his row, then, at a given signal, asks with due gravity of the lady opposite to him the question that was given to him. She will reply, with equal gravity, in the exact words of the answer that has been given her. Question and answer must be repeated thrice without the shadow of a smile.

The next couple then take up the task, and so on until every couple has gone through the ordeal. Failure in any respect whatever puts the person out of the game.

This game is so popular that an encore is sometimes demanded. In that case the ladies will ask the questions given by the gentleman leader and the gentlemen give the answers prompted by the lady leader.

How to Test Silk.

Why did your last year's silk split and crack? Because it was weighted. You might have tested it easily before purchasing and saved both money and worry. A bit of the silk and a match are all you need for a sure test. Light the match and apply it to the fabric. If it holds its shape the silk is adulterated with some of the minerals so used. If it melts in burning and runs into a puffy mass the silk is pure.

Rust Stains.

To remove rust stains from steel cover the article with sweet oil, letting it stay on for a day, then rub it with a lump of fresh lime and polish in the ordinary way.

ORNAMENTAL PINS.

Useful For Holding Back Inconveniently Long Wrist Frills.

A new use has been found for the small ornamental pins which heretofore were employed to fasten the back of the high collar or complete the fastening of the waist front.

The other day, on a smartly dressed young woman attired in a blue gabardine suit remarkable for its correct, up to date lines, were observed deep wrist frills of plaited white linen with hemstitched edge.

To prevent the frills from inconveniently hanging over the hands they were held back against the coat sleeve by means of the aforesaid pins, one of each being placed on the upper side of the lingerie flounce.

The Easter Rabbit.

A symbol of Easter quite as familiar is the Easter hare, which is closely associated with the moon.

There have been all sorts of fancies concerning the moon, from the phases of which the time of Easter is fixed, and among many nations the hare is the symbol of the moon itself.

The Hindu and Japanese artists painted the hare across the moon itself, while the Chinese represent the moon as a rabbit pounding rice in a mortar. An old, old Hindu moon legend says that once when Indra, disguised as a famishing pilgrim, was praying for food the hare, having nothing else to offer, threw itself into the fire that it might be cooked for his benefit, and the grateful Indra transported the animal to the moon, where those who have good imaginations declare that it is still to be seen.

Boy Scouts Growing.

The ratio of increase of the Boy Scouts of America is indicated by a striking paragraph from the chief scout executive's report: From Oct. 1, 1914 to Feb. 5, 1915, 45,330 boys were enrolled, as compared with 32,929 for the same period of 1913 and 1914; 839 new troops were organized, as compared with 583 for the same period last year. Commissions were granted to 4,118 men to serve as scoutmasters and assistants as compared with 2,951 for the same period of last year.

Transposition.

What in winter you feel,
When the frost's on the ground
Transposed it will reveal
(And it is truth I'll be bound).
A name that to rustics we give,
Who in clownish simplicity live.

Answer—Cold, clod.

Remarks by One's Neighbors.

After nearly every marriage the neighbor women offer gratuitous insult to the groom by saying, "And her mother had such high ambitions for her daughter!"—Exchange.

The Cowboy Suit.

One of the made in America fashions is the cowboy costume which embodies American traditions, yet is so distinctly modish and up to date that young women are adopting it with enthusiasm.

One of these cowboy costumes worn at a southern resort has a short skirt of pussy willow silk in narrow red and white "peppermint" stripes. There are two groups of three rows of red velvet ribbon around the skirt, the velvet being the same width as the stripes. Little bowknots are placed on the skirt at intervals between the groups of ribbon trimming.

CARE OF NAILS.

Those who have not thought it worth while heretofore should begin now to care for their nails. The little time spent at this will show in good looking nails before very long. The outfit costs so little almost any one can afford it.

Be careful to get a good nail polish, as a rough, inferior one is apt to scratch the nails and in time thicken them.

Pantalettes Appear.

Pantalettes are with us—that is, a designer has dared to launch them for our approval. And really they are such fascinating, pretty little things, peeping out from the bottom of a very full skirt.

DAINTY FROCK.

Valenciennes Lace Profusely Trims Dress Made of Dotted Muslin.

LINGERIE CREATION.

The little kiddie has her inning in the little frock shown here. Nothing is ever more charming than dotted muslin and when combined with val is irresistible. The gown has a jacket effect bodice with an underlining of sheer batiste, to which the skirt is attached. The skirt is full, with insets of val insertion, outlined by ruffles of val edging.

A blue satin sash and a blue satin hair ribbon contribute the touch of color to the costume, with which are worn white silk stockings and white kid buttoned boots.

SASH CURTAINS.

Materials For Making Them and Their Fashioning.

Sash curtains should be measured from the top of the inside of the window casement to the sill, allowing two inches at the top and bottom. The top is turned and stitched through the center, which allows for a small heading and the casing for the brass rod. The hem is turned in at the bottom, so that the curtains just escape the sill.

The curtains may be perfectly plain or finished with a lace edging. A narrow gimp braid is sometimes used as a finish for sash curtains. The French striped net or brussels net is always nice.

Scrim and a quality of voile made for curtain purposes are also used, especially where a less transparent material than net is desired.

Is Meat a Fighting Diet?

Circumstances have brought to light again the question of man's need of red meat diet to make him a fighting warrior. An advocate of meat diet declared some time ago that the Belgians were losing their vital efficiency because they are a race of non-meat eaters. But, although they had done no fighting for a hundred years, they have given a good account of themselves of late.

Modern scientists assert that meat makes a dog or a man irritable, but gives neither courage nor endurance, both of which are essential fighting qualities. Attention is called to the fruit eating gorilla as the most dreaded fighter of the African forest. Not a lion is found in all the region where this great forest man reigns, untamed and untamable, a real king of beasts.

The lion, the traditional king of beasts, fights when brought to bay only because he is short winded and cannot run away. Every experienced hunter has borne testimony to the ability of the grass eating bison as a most courageous fighter when at bay.

Herbs For Many Purposes.

Mint—For meat sauces.

Angelica—For flavoring cakes.

Lavender—For oil and distilled water.

Sage—For sausage and meat dressings.

Sweet Fennel—Leaves used in fish sauces.

Dill—The seed used to flavor pickles.

Borage—Leaves boiled as dandelion or spinach.

Thyme—In gravies and dressings of stuffed meats.

Chives—Used for flavoring soups and salads.

Borage, balm and catnip—Useful where one has bees.

Tarragon—Leaves useful in giving flavor to vinegar and pickles.

Coriander, fennel and caraway seeds—Used for flavoring syrups and cakes.

Among those having medicinal value are arnica, hops, catnip, pennyroyal, belladonna, hops, etc. Medicinal marshmallow, wormwood, hyssop and peppermint.

Dainty New Creations For Dinner or Dance Wear

The useful black evening gown may have a girdle of gray.

Belts and girdle are worn at the natural waist line; also above and below it.

There is a fad for decorating the back of the corsage with artificial flowers.

One of the most useful evening costumes a woman can have is the black net over a white satin or taffeta foundation.

Silver and gold braid and silver and gold ornaments, especially roses, are desirable in the matter of style. Even fruits and some vegetables are made of silver and used in small bunches or clusters as decorations for costumes.

NEW FIREBALL PISTOLS.

British at Front Furnished With Them; Also With New Grenades.

A letter from an officer of the Hampshire regiment published in the Morning Post of London contains the following passages:

"I have been served out with a wonderful pistol that fires fireballs. The other night I fired several, and they showed up the ground in front in a wonderful manner. * * * We fired a new kind of bomb at the Germans a couple of days ago, and last night one of our patrols reported twenty or thirty bodies in the place where it fell. * * * The Germans, they say, have now got a land torpedo that burrows under the earth and catches one just about the knee when it explodes. I don't know if it's true, but they are a remarkably ingenious people.

"Two of our men who had gone out to repair barbed wire last night noticed a German sniper digging himself in. So they stalked him and suddenly jumped on him and brought him in praying for mercy. When asked why they did not bayonet him on the spot the captor explained that he thought it was too cold blooded a proceeding, but added that he 'plugged him one on the jaw,' as he was shouting 'Mercy, mercy!' too loud. * * *

"This is a most extraordinary war; fellows every day in the ordinary course of their duties do things that in any other war they would get V. C.'s for."

STOVE WRECKED BY BEANS.

Forgotten in Oven, They Explode and Bombard Kitchen Walls.

An explosion shook the Sixth ward in Auburn, N. Y., and brought scores of persons to the home of William E. Bills, 62 Lansing street. Members of the family were gathering up the scrap iron that represented the family range, and the walls and furnishings of the kitchen looked as if they had been the target for hundreds of small bullets.

Mrs. Bills explained that she had placed a quart can of beans in the oven and had forgotten them. She was reminded of it by the explosion and the bean bombardment that came with it.

Once Laborer, Now a President.

At a meeting of the directors of the Yale & Towne company, a large hardware manufacturing company of Stamford, Conn., Walter C. Allen, who has been employed by the company for the past twenty-three years and who has advanced himself by stages, was elected president in the place of Henry R. Towne, who retires after forty-six years in that position. Mr. Towne was made chairman of the board of directors.

NEW SPORTS CLOTHES.

What the Smart Set Dons For Outdoor Recreation.

With devotees of riding enjoying themselves in the country, clothes for day wear at the smart estates become of the riding type.

This brings into consideration a most attractive display of smart neckwear, sports hats, trim shirts and blouses, the most swagger article in boot styles and a corresponding array of good looking sports suits.

Both corduroys and tweeds have their admirers. It is about six of one and a half dozen of the other in point of preference, so honors are even.

It is of green cotton corduroy. The coat is made with a smart yoke with the skirt part showing inverted pleats, which are belted in such fashion at the waist line that but a small portion of the belt need hang when the coat is worn unbuttoned.

Among the Elite.

"Then they never have a family jar?"

"They occasionally have what might be termed a family jardiniere. As aristocratic people, they only quarrel in a very refined way."—Kansas City Journal.

The "Blue Foot."

Although not so prominent in Teutonic folklore as the hare, the fox is still looked upon as a mystic animal throughout Sweden and north Germany. In many districts reynard has long been regarded by the peasants as so sacred that his name must not be pronounced, and he is alluded to by some such euphemistic title as "blue foot" or "he who goes to the forest."

A Rapid Calculation Trick.

By means of a simple arrangement of numbers a calculation can be made which will easily puzzle any unsuspecting person. If the two numbers 41,096 and 83 be written out in multiplication form very few will endeavor to write down the answer directly, without first going through the regular work. By placing the 3 in front of the 4 and the 8 back of the 6 the answer is obtained at once, thus: 41,096x83 equals 3,410,968. A larger number which can be treated in the same way is the following: 4,109,589,041,096x83 equals 341,095,890,410,968.—Popular Mechanics.

BAGGING A HIPPO.

How It Is Done and How the Flesh of the Animal Tastes.

There are two ways of bagging a hippopotamus, says a writer in the Wide World Magazine, and neither is justified unless the sportsman is sorely in want of food, for its meat is very poor indeed and wants a good deal of preparation to be palatable to any one except the starving. It has a taste I can only describe as flaby, something what beef would taste like after being wrapped up for a couple of days with a Scotch haddock of doubtful freshness.

The hippo may be shot in water. When mortally wounded he will sink and will not reappear on the surface for several hours, consequently a tiring lookout has to be kept for the carcass. If he is only slightly wounded he may charge, but more often he will flee and die in the reeds to serve as food for scavenger birds or crocodiles.

The other and more sporting way is to shoot him on land. This is, as a rule, only possible at night or late in the evening and early in the morning. It would not be wise to find oneself between the river and the wounded hippo, for he at once makes for the water by the shortest route, and he goes so fast that getting out of his way requires pretty speedy feet and great coolness of nerve.

Old Newspapers.

Old newspapers form the basis of most of the boxes in which goods are kept in the furnishings stores. When ground into pulp and treated with certain chemicals they furnish an ideal material for the pasteboard used in the cheapest as well as the more expensive grades of boxes.—Argonaut.

Truth or Fiction?

"Ah, what a difference there is," remarked the cynic wearily, "between courtship and marriage! Courtship is made up of soft nothings—marriage of hard facts."

And he broke the world's record for a sigh.—New York Times.

Best For the Inner Man.

We are very fond of music, literature and art, but when all is said and done nothing makes a stronger appeal to us than something in the nature of a fritter.—Ohio State Journal.

The Anemone.

The anemone, according to mythology, sprang from the blood of Adonis, mingled with the tears which Venus shed over his body.

Seeds—Seeds—Seeds. We have the quality; the quantity and the variety. Gilbert & Nichols Co.—Adv. tf.

Inquiries Elicit Sentiment In Favor of Letting People Know City's Condition

BE ON HAND TONIGHT AT CHAMBER MEETING

At the City Hall tonight at 8.00 o'clock a meeting will be held of the entire membership of the Chamber of Commerce to pass on the new constitution and by-laws. At this meeting Wayne D. Heydecker, who is to be the secretary of the organization, will be introduced to the members. It is probable also that there will be an out of town speaker.

During the last few days a large number of replies have been received answering the questions—

First. What in your opinion is the thing of first importance that should be undertaken by the Chamber of Commerce to improve the trade conditions and opportunities in your own line of business?

Second. What as a citizen do you believe the Chamber of Commerce should first undertake for the good of the city at large.

The character and variety of replies received show that a great deal of very careful thought is being given at the present time to the work the Chamber of Commerce is to undertake.

Following are a few of these responses:

Make a thorough investigation of the financial condition of the city. Let the public know what that condition is, formulate a definite plan for the financial management of the city for the next ten years. See that an up-to-date method of bookkeeping is installed in the City Hall.

Take steps towards securing industries for Fulton, which shall give employment to many people.

Improve streets and parks.

Secure two forty-gallon chemical tanks for mounting on hose wagons. This will cost about $500, will better protect the city property and will help to reduce fire insurance rates.

Advertise Fulton in sueh a manner that the outside world will sit up and take notice that there is such a place on the map.

Instill the spirit of co-operation into the members of the Chamber of Commerce so that they can stop a knocker and show by their action that they have confidence in the enterprise into which they are putting their time, money and brains.

Have the people remember the name of the city in which they live, trade at home and get a Fulton product in preference to all others.

Encourage and assist the industries we already have.

Systematic cleaning of all paved streets.

Co-operate with the city department and public generally in promoting civic pride to the end that the citizen individually will undertake to clean up the city, beautify the parks, and make the city as attractive as possible.

Establish a bureau that will take care of the solicitors who are soliciting for benefits, fairs, etc.

Protect our homes as well as stores from fake advertisements. Premium givers, etc.

BROOKFEDS MAY GET CULLUP

Feds In Solemn Conclave Try to Settle Disputes; Trade Made

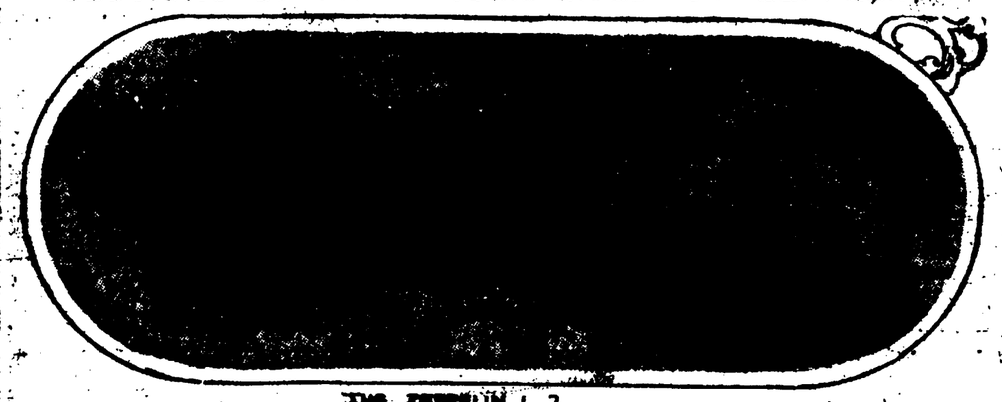
New York, Mar. 26.—Trouble in the Federal League family was smoothed out at the meeting of the club owners at the Bilmore hotel today.

In order to bring about internal peace some clubs had to drop certain trades of players they have been negotiating for, submitting to several unexpected changes in the line-ups of their teams, but the owners appeared to realize the necessity of harmony within the ranks, and the tangle devoleped by the sudden transferof the Indianapolis franchise to Newark probably will be adjusted.

Following the settlemeht of all disputes the league will tomorrow pass on the schedule for the season, a matter that has been held up for weeks by the uncertainty as to whether Kansas City or Indianapolis would be the club to step out and make room for the Newark Feds.

Chief interest appeared to center around the possibility of a hitch between the league and Harry Sinclair and P. T. Powers, owners of the new Newark franchise. The latter, although they had been expecting to take over the Kansas City team were not averse to accepting the Indianapolis club instead, provided the team comes to them intact. It has developed, however, that the Brookfeds, in return for a cancellation of an Indianapolis debt, have been promised two of the most valuable players on the Indianapolis team — "Benny" Kauff and "Cy" Falkenberg. That the Hoofed outfit would be weakened by the loss of these two players is unquestioned. Powers and Sinclair have announced that they intend to enter a strong protest, and it remains to be seen what sort of compromise will solve the difficulty.

The Brookfeds are also involved in a trade of "Nick" Cullop, the Kansas City pitcher, made at a time when Kansas City was expected to lose its franchise in the league. Robert B. Ward had agreed to give "A" Shaw, "Bert" Maxwell and "Bill" Bradley in excange for Cullop, but the Indianapolis shift, which keeps Kansas City in the league, may hold up the deal.



Definite announcement of the choice of managers for the Newark and Kansas City clubs was also expected. Rumor has "Germany" Schaefer replacing George Stovall as leader of the Kansas City team with Stovall slated to play first base for Newark and possibly manage the new club.

Kansas City, its was said, has put up a $40,000 bond to pay its obligations during the coming season, and has furthermore agreed to meet all its debts. The league is to get enough money out of Kansas City to cover the cost of taking over the Indianapolis franchise, and retains the $25,000 which Sinclair and Powers paid for the Newark franchise.

SECTIONS OF PARIS BOMBARDED BY ZEPPELINS.

THE ZEPPELIN L 2.

BOMB DROPS WERE PROVED BY PARIS GAS SEALS

Flying visibly from a point [illegible] Zeppelin dirigibles attacked the capital at half-past one o'clock this morning. The dirigibles cruised above the city and suburbs for forty minutes, dropping their missiles at half a dozen points, and then passed again toward the north after a counter attack by aeroplanes and anti-aircraft guns. In all about fifty bombs were accounted for.

Many fires followed the explosion of the bombs, but these were speedily checked by the firemen, who had been warned of the approach of the hostile dirigibles.

The American Ambassador Selected to Negotiate for Surrender of Constantinople.

VON SANDERS LEARNED OF PLOT; NIPPED IT

London, March 26.—A Bucharest dispatch to yesterday's Evening Chronicle asserts that only the threat by the German general, Liman von Sanders, to court-martial all the officials concerned prevented the Turks from surrendering the Dardanelles and Constantinople to the Allies last week. The dispatch says:—

"The peace party forced a vote at a recent cabinet meeting to send emissaries, one of whom was the American Ambassador, Mr. Menry Morgenthau, to the Dardanelles to negotiate with the commander of the allied fleet for the surrender of the straits and of general. Liman von Sanders, heard of the scheme and nipped it with the threat of court-martial for all concerned."

Reuter's correspondent at Tenedos Island forwarded the following yesterady:—

"According to reliable information from refugees from the Dardanelles, the Turks suffered enormous losses in the attack of the allied fleet on March 18. The greater part of the fortresses and powder magazines were reduced.

"The Turkish submarine defences are declared to have lost their military value, owing to the mines breaking adrift.

"Two British destroyers on Wednesday penetrated the Straits to a considerable distance."

Mr. Morganthau made a journey to the Dardanelles last week remaining there two days. If he was selected as a peace emissarry by the Turkish government to negotiate the surrender of Constantinopl, as reported in London, the State Department in Washington has not been advised of the fact. The Ambassador has sent several telegrams to Washington in the last few days and was reported on his journey to the Dardanelles, but made no reference to any negotiations for surrender.

X-Rays Needed to Disclose Reasons for Resignations

The resignation of Clinton Hulett from the Board of Assessors which was forwarded to Mayor F. E. Fox yesterday coupled with rumors coming from many reliable sources that William H. Merriam has also resigned, city officials as well as politicians in both parties are digging about trying to determine the reason why these two Republican assessors both appointees of Mayor Fox, so abruptly leave his official family. The ugly rumor which is about that the Mayor in the presence of the City Attorney directed that the assessors raise the assessments on all business places 25 per cent. seemes unbelievable, especially in view of the nature of the oath the assessors are compelled by law to take upon assuming the duties of their office.

That the Mayor should so far overreach the perogative of his office appears preposterous at first glance; but in his great eagerness to accomplish much in the line of public improvement with a weakened public treasury any mayor might naturally forget what the Board of Assessors had taken oath to perform justly, honestly using their best judgment, etc., in a hope that should this board act upon his orders the funds of the city treasury would be augmented to a considerable extent and then much needed public improvement could be accomplished.

That these two officials would send in their resignations to the Ma following so closely upon the resignation of F. G. Spencer from the Board of Public Works seems to convey to the public mind that all is not well in the city family.

The dissatisfaction, grumbling and wholesale resignation of able competent officials is an unpleasant circumstance and is to be deplored. Citizens would be interested in an X-Ray examination to disclose the reason for the personal papplication of the "hook" by the three resigning officials.

LATE WAR BULLETINS

FRENCH

Paris, via London.—The French War Office issueed the following official statement today:

"The day passed calmly, and there is nothing to report except a German attack at Notre Dame de Lorette, which was repulsed."

"In the Champagne district there was, yesterday a fairly lively artillery engagement. In the neighborhood of Hill No. 196 we repised three German attacks. In the Argonne, the German attack at Fontaine failed. At Les Eparges we repulsed three counter attacks.

"On the remainder of the front there was nothing to report."

RUSSIAN

Petrograd, via London.—The following official communication was issued today.

"On the front toward the west of the Middle Niemen we continue to make progress.

"On the right bank of the Narew and the left bank of the Vistula there has been no change of importance.

"In the Carpathians our offensive on the front in the direction between Bartfeld and Uzok is developing with complete uccess. Our troops, operating under extremely difficult conditions, gained a most decisive success in the region of Luppoff (Lupkow) Pass, where we carried by assault a very important Austrian position on the crest of the Beskid Mountains.

"Having forced a wood which was a perfect entanglement of barbed wires and surrounded by several layers of trenches, our infantry pushed forward to thep rincipal position of the enemy, the men hauling the guns. After bombarding it at a distance of 600 paces they crossed deep ditches fortified with palisades and carried the enemy's works, which were strongly

Berlin, via wireless.—The official communication given out today by the German General Army Headquarters says:

"With the exception of unimportant engagements on the heights of the Meuse, to the southeast of Verdun, and on Hartmans-Wilerkopf, which still continue, only artillery duels took place along the western front yesterday.

"In the eastern arena Russian attacks to the east and to the southeast of Augustowo, near Jedrzejewek and to the northeast of Przasnysz were repulsed."

FUN RAYS

By Ray I. Hoppman

FATHER.

OH! a father is a hero, worthy of the fame of Nero: he's a martyr and a lemon and a prince; he will spend his hard earned money, with a disposition sunny, and he'll shovel forth the coin without a wince. He will send his son to college, hoping that some useful knowledge will find lodgment in his hard and empty dome. And he will work until his knuckles shine and grease like brass buckles, just to keep things running smoothly in the home. He will dress his pretty daughter in a style that pampers "oughter," till she rivals both a princess and a queen; when, a dollar to a shilling, he will dig his pockets, drilling for a dime to fill his empty jeans, I ween. Now, his wife will spend his boodle till he's dizzy in the noddle—spend it till there's not a measly red to spare; yet he meekly accompanies, gladly smooths his grayish whiskers, and he never says a word—he hardly dare. He gets a calling that abrasion if he spills a little ashes on the hearthstone, the mantel or the floor. If he feels a little frisky, wants to take a nip of whiskey, why, it's apt to start a long domestic war. And they rage and yell and holler if he tries to spend a dollar for a little recreation unbeknown; it's no cinch to be a father, with a thousand woes that bother, and never have a penny of your own. But he's got to keep on working, there's no letting up or shirking, for it costs a mint of coin to run a home. And he's got to skin and hustle, pay the bills and keep and bustle—he must keep the cog wheels steady in his dome. Yes, the father is a martyr, he's the stopper and the starter, for the big expenses keep him on the run; paying bills and being chided is a lot of doggoned bother, with a bit of woe and very little fun.

Opinions

Sunday Not To Blame

The question concerning the Rev. "Billy" Sunday's use of the great sums that fall into his lap in every city where he holds meetings to save souls confuses that undertaking with the material side of his occupation, that is to say, with his human desire to lay up treasures on earth. What is his own he may hold fast to, and free will gifts from his audiences, on certain days set apart for the "hire" of the laborer in the vineyard, are indisputably his own. He may invest in gilt-edged securities, real estate, or precious stones. If the Rev. "Billy's" hearers think that he should employ his revenues in uplifting humanity and improving mankind, not to speak of making new converts by putting other evangelists in the field, such idealists should obtain a guaranty from Mr. Sunday before they swell the collection plate. With him evangelizing is a practical business as well as a service to his fellow man. He would not deny this himself, and it would be idle to equivocate about the matter. * * * Outsiders will divide upon the moral right of the Rev. "Billy" Sunday to reap a golden harvest from his organized activities for the salvation of great urban centers, as they will differ about his sincerity and singleness of purpose. But they will agree that a candid autobiography of the ex-baseball player from the old White Stocking days down to the prolific present would be a "best seller." Capt. Adrian Anson must sometimes reflect that he made a mistake when he went from the diamond into politics in Chicago.—New York Sun.

BAD POLICY AND BAD FAITH

There is pending in the Senate at Albany a bill amending the tax law in relation to the taxation of secured debts. It represents an effort to raise additional revenue, but it employs a method which not only defeats itself so far as helping the treasury is concerned, but also commits the State to a foolish exhibition of bad faith.

In 1911 the Legislature passed a law inviting holders of bonds, debentures and secured notes to pay a tax of one-half of 1 per cent. on the face value of their securities and receive in turn certificates exempting the securities from further state or municipal taxation. This offer was made because it had been found impracticable to collect annual taxes on these forms of personality. The state suggested the bargain solely because it thought that it would profit by it.

The pending bill undertakes to break the engagement entered into in 1911. It amends the law so as to limit the exemption from future taxation on securities reported to the controller to a single year. It withdraws absolutely the guarantee of indefinite exemption which the state has given. That the Legislature has power to do this is extremely doubtful. It is trying to invalidate a contract, and the United States Supreme Court has held in parallel cases that a state has no more right to abrogate contracts than an individual has.

If, as is likely, this breach of faith is frustrated by the Supreme Court, the state will be left just where it is, so far as concerns owners who have taken out exemptions. Its raid will have failed. Moreover, it will have discouraged the certification of any further indebtedness of this sort, and the only machinery left for collecting a tax on securities will be the broken down of local assessment.

There is absolutely no promise in the pending bill of increased revenue from secured debts, unless that increase is to be purchased—as it ought never to be—by sacrificing the honor of the state.—N. Y. Tribune.

WHO WILL THEY BE?

The measure of Fulton's engineers will tonight be summed up in the names of the ten directors chosen by the three hundred and ten members of the Chamber of Commerce. Each members in preparing his ballot could well experience a glow of pride that we are not only living in an age but in a place where things are being done. Should our city stop in its onward movement at the present day who would deny that the effort had been in vain.

However, the unabated enthusiasm of scores of Fultonians is proof conclusive that better things are yet to come. The local man who during the week's campaign said in speaking of the movement, "It is bound to win; a thing based upon an unselfish motive always goes," did indeed strike the keynote.

The ten men who will be chosen as the directors in this big unselfish task should receive the unstinted helpfulness of each and every resident of our city. Interest, sympathy and co-operation are the watch words of success.

BACK YARDS

Something was said the other day in these columns about keeping our public streets neat. The subject is not complete unless something is also said about back yards.

Most people need little advice as to keeping up their front yards. The weary householder will spend hours worrying over his grass or shrubs in front of the house that bear the brunt of neighborhood inspection. Yet the same man will often permit the most unsightly collections of ashes, chicken coops and general household refuse in the back yard. This waste material may be nearly as conspicuous as in the front yard, yet people have a lazy and complacent feeling that no one ever notices it.

American towns have a distinct beauty of their own, in that they tend to develop along park lines. Few people erect high fences, and such boundary lines as are used are rather open, allowing the eye to wander freely over the lawns and gardens. This is lovely where people look out that the back of their home is as well kept as the front. In most cases it is not.

Usually it takes comparatively little time to keep a home place orderly. A few hours' work in the lengthening spring evenings ought to carry off worthless litter, and place good material where it belongs. The result does you good every time you look out of the window. Also it spurs on your neighbor to go and do likewise. The spirit of civic neatness spreads about the neighborhood and in a few weeks the general appearance of the dwellings and character of the street have been elevated 50 per cent.

A choice section is not created by costly dwellings. A street of plain, homely or even ugly houses is transformed, becomes a smart suburban residence district, if scrupulous paint is taken to keep out disorder. And a street of handsome and expensive houses looks dowdy, decadent, and run down, if the back yards are allowed to become slatternly.

Wherefore, after picking up all the litter in the streets, let us next tackle the back yards!—Times, Oswego.

A Real Leader

When a man in any legislative body acquires a position of particular prominence and exceptional influence he is pretty sure to be referred to as the czar. Speaker Reid was called that first, perhaps, and afterward "Uncle Joe" Cannon rejoiced in the same distinction. There is a disposition at Albany to look upon Senator Brown in much the same light. He is the leader of the majority in the upper house and it has come to be believed that he is the man to see, provided there is anything which needs doing, in the way of legislation or any favors to be extended. Whoever can get his permission and his influence is liable to succeed and those who fail in attracting his favorable attention are liable also to fail in their undertaking. There are advantages and disadvantages in this sort of thing in a way it is a distinction, it is attended by difficulties.—Press Utica.

The Happy Farmer

The Agricultural Department reports that the prices "paid to producers" of farm products rose 2.5 per cent. during last month. That is in addition to an increase of about a billion dollars previously reported, and is an increase of about one-half more than the usual increase at this time of approaching exhaustion of stocks and preparation for a new crop.

That the next crop will be enormous is indicated by everything that is known, and is emphasized by the distribution of the planting. The planters of cotton who in other years have been unable to limit their production by agreement with each other have this year planted grain on acres which cannot raise cotton for the next crop unless they are replanted. This gives the planter this year a double chance. He can let his grain grow while he watches the cotton market, and can harvest the grain or deplant to cotton if the price is an inducement.

The demand for guncotton and khaki has created a demand for cotton such as there was no ground in experience for expecting, and the largest crop ever grown will be sold at not the lowest prices known. It is almost like finding money for the South, which has wailed amid an abundance which it persisted in considering a calamity. To fill the cup of the farmer to overflowing it must be added that his labor costs are about as much cheaper as his crops are dearer to the buyer, and that there is the abundance of help which the cheapness implies. Who would not be a farmer in these days?

WITH THE SUFFRAGISTS

Ladies First:—The salaries of all the English Red Cross nurses now going to the front have been cut in two. In France also the nurses have received a six month's notice of a 50 per cent. reduction. The soldiers' pay remains the same.

A letter from a Berlin doctor in the Journal of the American Medical Association gives data in support of the theory that segregating the men in trenches and even using them as food for cannon has improved moral conditions in the cities. He even goes so far as to suggest that the next generation may thus be compensated for the loss of males in this.

The most ardent suffragists only ask to co-operate with men. Their minds never dwell for a moment on the advantages made possible by eliminating them. Man seems to be not only his own worst enemy, but his sternest judge.

Many bills to protect health and morals, the sort called social legislation as distinct from financial, were introduced into the 63d Congress.

According to "The Survey" with a few exceptions these finished the last session with "one foot in the grave of a House or Senate Committee." Even so do men represent women's special interests in government.

"The suffrage movement is an expression of the mother instinct," said Mrs. Marion Craig Wentworth in an interview about her play "War Brides," the play that New York has talked about their "rights" it was unpopular. Now that women the world over are thinking about other women's children, woman suffrage is inevitable."

"Remain charming and domestic," is the advice United States Senator Saulsbury of Delaware gave the delegation of women sent by the Congressional Union to ask him to endorse woman suffrage in his state.

The hundreds of thousands of women who take in washing to support children and even husbands may be domestic but how can they be charming? The millions of women who are in the ranks of the wage earners in this country may be charming but how can they be domestic?

Most women yearn to be "domestic and charming." Our industrial system that prevents it is not the achievement of women. Women are its victims. To grudge them the vote under the circumstances is more than unjust, it is stupid.

"Women have not been petrified by the conduct of affairs as men have," said George Creel in an interview on child labor in the New York Tribune. "They apply the mother heart to social questions instead of the business head. I believe that woman suffrage would help a good deal in bettering conditions.

VAST COST OF WORLD'S WARS SHOWN BY OFFICIAL'S FIGURES.

Edward Ewing Pratt, chief of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce of the United States department of commerce, in an address before the Detroit board of commerce presented the following figures on the cost of wars:

	Total cost.	Cost per day.
Crimean war	$1,059,400,000	$3,036,700
U. S. civil war	5,000,000,000	3,392,130
Franco-Prussian	2,534,400,000	11,577,608
Russian-Japanese	2,075,000,000	4,972,119
First Balkan	940,000,000	4,331,797
Second Balkan	450,000,000	15,000,000

In the present European war the loans thus far have been as follows:

	War debt.
Great Britain	$1,500,000,000
France	1,515,000,000
Germany	2,000,000,000
Belgium	130,000,000
Austria-Hungary	1,515,000,000
Russia	2,000,000,000
Servia	200,000,000

Grand total: Debt, $10,000,000,000; cost each day, $20,000,000; per capita debt, $25.

OH, WHY?

BY
I. E. HYDE
FULTON
N. Y.

Why should we reek first thing this week with snow, and frost and zero? I can't tell why 'cept by and by, he'll please us—weather hero. Now, weatherman, please put the ban on winter kinks in springtime. Oh, cold grey sky, you make us sigh, a pressing down on wingtime. Our neighbor sees us sow our peas for blossoms in the summer, we hear him say, "Don't get too gay, this warm snap is a bummer." We think we know, so on we go and plant our seeds serenely. Alas! Alack! Old Frosty Jack has cut them out so queenly. We put on sleeves of lighter weaves, because the sun is shining. It's no swell lark to sneeze and bark behind that silvery lining. We should get wise and study skies, the route to temp' and zero. So then we'd know which way to go to jump the weather hero. Don't think this pun is all for fun; we're full of creaks and shivers. We feel all pinched, we feel quite scinched, the symptoms reach our livers. But we may sing and make it ring along this chilly byroad—a winter time. Perhaps in June we'll voice another cry-ode.

ROUND ABOUT

By the way, a despatch by the way of various byways says that at —— (name deleted by the censor) the Steenth Army Corps has captured, by a brilliant coup, one man, three-and-one half feet of trench, by jingo.

Through the kind offices of the American Minister at Brussels, Brand Whitlock, the British Foreign Office announces that permission has been obtained from the German authorities for British women and children to leave Belgium.

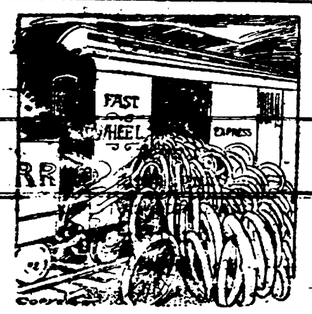
The proceedings at the hearing granted by Governor Whitman to the accused Public Service Commissioners of the first district very deservedly strengthen the conviction that the removal of the commissioners is a needed measure.

A commission for of city government for Saratoga was carried yesterday at a referendum by more than 500 votes. A bill authorizing the change is now pending in the Legislature.

The French line cargo vessel Champlain, inbound from Bordeaux, sent a wireless to the company's office in New York, stating that she was passing the Fire Island lightship. "Lightship" in French, the language in which the message was sent, is "bateau-feu," meaning literally, "ship of fire." Some one whose knowledge of French was attained in six easy lessons, got hold of the marconigram and translated it to mean that the Champlain was passing a "ship on fire." The mistake caused excitement in shipping circles, but was rectified before the Champlain reached her pier.

By drinking a glass of buttermilk James Robinson, inmate of the county infirmary at Warsaw, Ind., ended a fast that stands as a world's record. The buttermilk was the first nourishment taken y him in 57 days. During his fast Robinson lost about 100 pounds. Although he is weak, his physical condition is good.

Mrs. Bridget C. Peixotto, a teacher-mother of New York, has received $4.450 from Comptroller Prendergast, being her salary with interest since October, 1913, when she was dismissed by the Board of Education. She made a further claim for $256.37 for costs in fighting her suit for reinstatement, but payment on this was denied by the Finance Department. The case was a test. There are about 16 other teachers, to whom the city will have to pay some $40,000 for similar reasons.



Postmaster General Burleson has made a unique discovery. He finds that the Government made a small profit on the 80,000,000 parcels handled in the mails last year, but that a reduction of rates is prevented by the cold-blooded attitude of the railroads, which refuse to haul the parcel post for nothing. If only the roads would carry these 80,000,000 packages for the mere fun of filling up their cars and wearing out their tracks and burning up coal in their locomotives and without expecting any pay, why everybody could soon ship everything from a thimble to a load of hay by mail. That seems to be the halcyon day Mr. Burleson dreams about. However, the Postmaster General asserts that the railroads were paid $4,300,000 extra for carrying the parcel post, which was $1,600,000 more than the service cost them, * * * If Mr. Burleson knows that the railroads make more than a 50 per cent. profit by carrying the parcel post why does he not invoke the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Supreme Court? There is no such profit made on any other traffic so that Uncle Sam has a clear case of discrimination upon which to base his case. The Postmaster General should be glad of a chance to prove his contention.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

In the description of a case given before the French Academy of Science it was stated that a soldier was taken to a military hospital with a penetrating wound in the occipital region of his cranium. Splinters of bone caused abscesses to form in the left cerebral hemisphere. These were cured, but fresh ones formed, and a surgeon was obliged on two occasions to remove portions of the brain from the wound. Thus the patient lost at least a third of the left cerebral hemisphere, but he shows no particular signs either of mental or physical trouble.

It has just been learned at Washington that last January four 15-inch coast defense guns were shipped from this country—two consigned to Ireland and two to Scotland. A few days ago another shipment of big guns went forward, and more are to follow. During November, December and January arms to the value of $1,687,402 were shipped to England and $241,013 to France. In the same period England took $1,931,592 and France $2,649,019 worth of ammunition. These figures are only for exports through the port of New York, and do not take into account arms and ammunition shipments handled by other customs ports. The January summary of foreign commerce shows that explosives valued at $2,610,066 and firearms valued at $4,766,823 were shipped out of the United States.

BATTLE OF YPRES

Published by Permission

By WILL IRWIN

Although the battle of Ypres has already been briefly sketched in Field-Marshal Sir John French's dispatches, this is the first time taht the story of the Germans' vast and unsuccessful attempt to break through to Calais has been told in the form of a graphic narrative intelligible to others than military students. From the pen of Mr. Will Irwin, a well-known American journalist who is now in this country, we are able to give to the public the first complete account of a battle which will live as one of the greatest in history. Mr. Irwin is exceptionally well informed concerning the events which he describes below. He is well known as a contributor to "Collier's Weekly" and the "Saturday Evening Post," and will be remembered as the author of the charming article on "British Calm" published in "The Daily Mail" of January 25.

IN a parliamentary debate held during February the Opposition expressed a strong hope that members of the Press might have access to the British lines in order that the public might know about the "Battle of Ypres" and the glorious feats of British arms thereat performed. To many, to most, of the English this was the first news that any part of the great, continuous battle along the French border had been divided by anyone into battles or minor engagements. They knew, this British public, that there had been great feats of arms in and about the old capital of French Flanders; they knew that England had become dark with mourning for the men lost in those trying days; they know that somehow since November Germany was a nation besieged by land and water, a nation fighting a defensive battle; they did not know the cause. The confused immensity of this war; the veil drawn by military censorship; the very novelty of military science brought about by new servants of death, such as the aeroplane, have so confused the situation, so muddled the public mind, that even the military experts at home have only begun to realise that a great, decisive action, separate from the rest of the war in its character and consequences, occurred on the line between between La Bassee and the sea in October and November of 1914.

A decisive action—perhaps the really decisive action of the war. Indeed, when history runs a thread through the confusions and obscurities of Armageddon, historians may call it the most vital battle in the annals of the island people. Not Crecy nor Blenheim nor Waterloo seems now more important. For it closed the last gap in the combined defensive-offensive operations of the western Allies. It made impossible—short of an utter collapse of the Allied armies—any further German move on Paris or any move to take the French in the rear. Most importantly to England, it sealed the road to Calais, that vital, critical port within eyesight of the English coast. Further, more English troops were engaged here than in any previous battle of the Empire, more Germans than in the whole Franco-Prussian war—a hundred and twenty thousand English against six hundred thousand Germans. Yet one thinks of the English force, and rightly, as a "little" army in this war of unprecedented numbers; it seems, in its relation to the whole picture, like one of thos ebrigades which won immortal glory in old wars by holding a crucial point on a battle-line.

THE ONLY VETERAN ARMY

Up to that brief breathing-spell when the British army shifted from its position on the Aisne to its new fighting-ground on the western front, it had been engaged every day for seven weeks. There had been the attack at Mons, when its force, equivalent in numbers to two army corps, found themselves attacked by four German corps and out flanked on the left by another. There followed four days of a backward fight which every surviving Tommy of the British expeditionary force remembers only as a confused kind of Hell. By night they dropped on their faces to wake to the sound of guns, to the bursting of shells, to more marching, more action. By day the massed German lines poured in on them four deep. Rank after rank the British mowed them down until the riflemen and machine-gun men retreated from very weariness of arm and horror of more killing.

There came after four days a little respite, during which the English, for strategic reasons, continued their retreat, fighting only rearguard actions. There came, too, a change in the spirit of Tommy Atkins. This was a professional army and a veteran army—the only one on the line, else the history of September, 1914, might have to be written in other terms. Though splendidly equipped, trained to the minute, educated to the last frill in military science, the others—except for a few divisions of the French—knew only the theoretical warfare of blank cartridges. The greater part of the English had faced ball cartridges in India or South Africa.

They had the spirit of veterans. And like veterans they resented a runaway fight. They began to murmur—not over the dead left for the Germans to bury nor the wounded which choked the hospitals of Paris, nor their own prospect of annihilation; but against this kind of warfare which never let them stand and fight. Here it was that Field-Marshal Sir John French went among his troops, refusing to let them rise and salute; as they rested by the roadside he sat down with them, told them that if they would keep it up just a little longer he would promise them a fight. The muttering died down, the Army went on—backward. Again the Germans pressed them; again there was the ruthless, mechanical slaughter of charging, tight-locked lines, the ghastly mowing of machine-guns, the tragedies of bursting shells.

THE MIDNIGHT COUNCIL

It was the night of September 6 now; the British army in its southward retreat had passed inside of Paris, it halted to the southeast of the French capital and made another stand. The blackness of despair lay that night over the leaders of the British army. Some of the staff officers have admitted since that they saw no way out; they hoped only to find a good position tfor a last stand, and to make the massarce cost the Germans as dearly as possible.

Sir John French and his corps commanders, clean fagged out, turned in for a little sleep. At midnight a courier from the line wakened them. He was pale and shaken. The German force to the north had got in touch with a new German force which had appeared from the east. They were cut off from the French army; the jig was up. Sir John French and his two corps commanders in summery attire, just as they were roused from their beds, held a council by the light of a smoking country lam. French invented a way to meet the new movement, ordered dispositions accordingly, and went back to bed. That council of war on the eve of September 7, 1914, one of the great days in the history of the world, will furnish no theme for the battle painter of the future who loves to trick out his historic figures in gilt and gold lace!

And in the morning French, who, it is said, has an uncanny sense for the mind of his enemy, felt a slackening of the attack on his front. Before the sun was high his aeroplanes had reported that Von Kluck, at his front, had faced east and was moving away from Paris. French struck with all his force. The French army of Paris made their famous taxicab movement and struck also. By night the German movement was not a shift but a full retreat.

VON KLUCK'S MISTAKE

We know now the German plan of campaign and have a better understanding of this whole action at the Marne. That great western army of von Kluck which had swept through Belgium, broken across the unfortified French frontier, and thrust forward its cavalry outposts until the Parisian fire department buried Uhlans within the city limits—it was never intended that this army should take Paris. That honor was for the Crown Prince, who was coming through Rheims from the northeast. Von Kluck was to dispose thoroughly of the French and English at his front, to shift to the left and join the Prince's army at a point between Rheims and Paris. Then, down the excellent Rheims-Paris roads, they would march together to the investment of the French capital.

Somewhere along the line von Kluck made his mistake. Either he followed too closely the machine-made plan of the general staff—this is said to be the common German weakness in this war—or he underrated his enemy. The British army, I understand, leans to the latter theory; and, indeed, he would have been insane to make such a move at this, even in pursuance of a plan, had he believed that he was leaving a really strong army on his flank.

Sir John French struck; the Army of Paris struck; more importantly, the whole French line from Switzerland to Paris pivoted on the Vosges, moved up its reserve line and initiated a general attack. The new attack took the Crown Prince on his front and his left flank. Von Kluck fell back faster and faster; it was all but annihilation for him. The Crown Prince and his supporting armies to right and left fell back. The withdrawal became a retreat.

That was the great day for France—that September 7. England's greatest day was yet to come. That day, from the Vosges to Paris, northern France was a heaven of glory and a hell of slaughter. That day regiments and battalions did the heroically impossible in such numbers that no special mentions, no war report, no decorations, can ever recognise or name them. That day a whole population of France's fairest provinces cowered and ran or stood and died. That day the transports of wounded choked every back trail, the dead sprinkled every forest in northern France. No one will ever tell the full story. It would be like trying to write the history of a nation by telling the full life-story of every individual in the nation. But this war, whatever account it holds against the future, can never hold another day so significant to France. Its infinite agonies were the birthpains of a new France. From it emerged the transformed French warrior, not emotional but stolid, not murcurial but determined; above all, a warrior recovered from his old backthought, his old, hidden fear of the Prussian superman.

This, however, is the story of the English army; it must ignore that series of actions from the Vosges to Soissons wherein the French locked the line for four hundred miles against the German coutner-attacks and fenced the enemy off from the fortress of Verdun—"ten Waterloos a week" someone has called it. After two days of uninterrupted rearguard fighting the Germans made their stand at the Aisne. A series of actions more or less severe proved that neither the English nor the French to right and left could make present headway against the strong German entrenchments. From the Vosges to Lille the line locked tight; it was no longer open warfare; it was a siege. As Sir John French's dispatches show, the English felt the German resistance settling down to defensive tactics. The part of the line running to right and left of Soissons becamse no longer important.

EFFECT OF ANTWERP'S FALL

But there was fighting of sorts to do far to the left, and early in October the whole English Army yielded its trenches to the French reserves and moved over toward Calais. It was their first relief from continuous battle. The army, I believe, has discovered a genius in Major-General Robertson, who had charge of transportation and commissary. So expeditiously did he work, and yet so quietly, that the first German officers whom the English took prisoners expressed surprise not so much at their capture as at the fact that they were captured by the English. "We thought we were fighting the French Territorials," they said.

To understand why the subsequent operations became vital to the whole campaign, you must understand the situation on October 11, when the British re-established touch with the enemy; it is a matter of recapitulating old history in a new light. The Allied line reached to Lille, fifty miles from the sea, and near the Belgian border. On this end of the line French and Germans alike, first one and then the other, had been outflanking—ringing each other with artillery and earthworks like one of those representations of mountain chains which we used to draw in our school maps. That line was lengthening northward and westward day by day. But the fifty miles from Lille to the sea lay open. This gap commanded the routes to Dunkirk, to Calais, to Boulogne—to all the important French Channel ports. It commanded also an easy and most accommodating route to Paris. If the Germans left open that gap, it was because the fortress of Antwerp still menaced their western line of communications. But on October 8 Antwerp fell—fell so suddenly that a division of British troops under General Rawlinson, sent to assist the Belgians in holding the outer defences, did not arrive until the Germans had gained ground to emplace their 42-centimetre siege howitzers and had made further defence of the fortress a mere technicality. Rawlinson's division joined what remained of the Belgian Army and retreated with them down the coast past Brugge, past Ostend. The Belgians took up a final position at the River Yser, where they stood to defend the last sliver of their territory. Rawlinson, roughly joining forces with them on their right extended his lines towards Ypser.

BULGING TERRIBLY

At about this pertod French communique lifted for a moment the veil over these serious operations, so vital to the whole war; and the glimpse sent a chill through Paris. "Dense masses of cavalry," it reported, "have appeared on the Tourcoing-Armentieres road, screening an important new force of the enemy." This was the immediate bid of Germany to pour through that gap. The French, outflanked, retired the left of their line from before Lille to the town of La Bassee. The Germans took La Bassee; on the heights before that hamlet, grown suddenly important in history, the French made a stand and dug in.

The gap between La Bassee and the sea remained, to all military intents and purposes, open and dangerous. The Allies pluoghed it by various devices, as an engineer builds a dam of earth before he prepares his steel locks. They overstretched the line of the Belgians. They threw in the French territorials—men in their forties, and therefore by mental and physical condition inferior as soldier to the young, perfectly trained first-line troops. The heavier masses of the German advance were not yet upon the Allied line; so it did not break, but it bulged terribly; the campaign at this point became a backward fight. The long battle on the western front was now like a rubber bladder with a weak-spot. Blow it a little further and the bladder breaks at that spot.

HEALTH MAY BE BOUGHT BY CITY

The Declaration of J. B. Smalley in Last Night's Address; He Advocates Open Air Schools for All Pupils

Tuberculosis, its prevention, treatment and the recent legislation regarding the dread disease, were the topics of an interesting discourse delivered last night by John E. Smalley, representative of the Field Department of the State Charities Aid Association before the local State Charities Aid Committee at the Citizens club. Mr. Smalley cited the slogan of the State Board of Health—"Public health is purchasable—and community can, within natural limitations, determine its own death rate.

After expressing his approval at the stand taken by the local committee in regard to the bills before the Legislature at the present time, one that the State Department of Health request an appropriation of $24,000 this year for work against tuberculosis, be granted, and the other favoring a referendum vote in those counties where the supervisors had voted in favor of, but had done nothing farther toward its establishment. Both of these bills having met with the approval of the local committee. Mr. Smalley urged his hearers to oppose vigorously the bill before the Senate, introduced by Senator Thompson of Niagara county. This bill would make it compulsory for every applicant for admission to a county hospital when suffering from tuberculosis, to apply to the overseer of the poor or the commissioner of charities for admittance.

Mr. Smalley stated that the State Charities Aid Association will do all in its power to prevent the anti-tubercular work from becoming identified with charity. In many cases the patient might have sufficient means to pay for any treatment he might receive and that the fact that many are unable to pay does not necessarily constitute them paupers. In the event that the bill passes, many patients who would otherwise seek treatment would hesitate to undergo the red-tape contingent to seeking aid as a pauper. A patient should not be led to believe that in seeking aid he is publicly pleading poverty, said Mr. Smalley, but on the contrary, in the interests of the community at large and in the interest of public health, he should be given every encouragement and no obstacles that would offend should be placed in his way.

At the conclusion of Mr. Smalley's address the local committee by a unanimous vote decided to oppose the bill and personal letters will be written to Speaker Sweet and Senator Brown regarding the bill. Mr. Smalley made it very clear that many people will not accept hospital treatment for tuberculosis if they must get it through charity channels.

Mr. Smalley then took up the new registration law, which makes it compulsory for a physician to notify the health officer of any death from tuberculosis within twenty-four hours The majority of people throughout the State, said the speaker are not will informed regarding this law. He stated that the number of deaths in this state last year were 2000 less than in 1913. The State Charities Aid Association and State Department of Health wishes to make the decrease this year surpass that of last year and it is only by co-operation on the part of the public that it will be accomplished. Open air schools, education of the people in regard to fresh air, quarantining and the prevention of epidemics have all helped to lower the death rate in this state.

Begin Right

The only way to fight tuberculosis is to get the disease in its incipent stages. This brought the speaker upon the subject of a visiting nurse, one competent in her work, who can at least devote part of her time to seeking out tubercular sufferers. Many people are ignorant of the symptoms of the disease and in many instances they only turn to a doctor when it is too late, not realizing that the sufferer is a victim of tuberculosis. It is in just these cases that the nurse does the best work. Mr. Smalley told of a nurse who made it part of her work to find out where cases of tuberculosis had been reported even as far back as five years. Then going to the house in question she would investigate the family then living there. It is an established fact that homes become infected with the disease and after the infected family leaves the new tenants sometimes contract the disease. Ignorance on the part of many people make it hard for these cases to be discovered unless some one is in close touch with conditions at all times, and even if a nurse could only find it possible to visit homes occasionally a great deal of good could be done.

The Fulton open air school came in for favorable comment from the speaker. He stated that the Germans were the first to establish an open air school when, in 1904, twenty-five sickly and backward children were taken into the woods and allowed to study and live in the open air. At the end of a trial period the improvement was so marked that the open air school became an establishment institution. Providence, R. I., was the first American city to establish a school in the open air in 1908. There are now sixty open air schools in the United States alone and there has not been a single case where a school, once established, has been discontinued. Mr. Smalley described various schools he has visited both in New York city and elsewhere and he said he found the inexpensively fitted schools doing just as much good work as those that had been started at a great expense. The sum of $10 will furnish all the necessary equipment for one child. In Mr. Smalley's opinion, it will not be long before the open air school will supplant the indoor school entirely, as people will see the need of preserving the health of the robust pupilss as well as improving the health of the weaker ones. Pupils of open air schools carry a love for fresh air into their homes and they are able to tell instantly whether the air in the room is good or not and they acquire habits of cleanliness.

In answer to a question, Dr. Gladman, the secretary of the local committee, said that although the local school board had not been established long enough to produce very startling results, there was a marked improvement in the work, as well as the health, of all the pupils. The parents are enthusiastic at the change in their children since they have begun studying in the open air, and although there is only one teacher for fifteen pupils, of various grades of work, each pupil gets individual attention and their school work benefits thereby.

Dr. Gladman stated that the open air school is not a hospital and that no pupil will be admitted who can transmit tubercular or other germs to any other pupil. Each pupil in the local school is examined before being admitted to the class and no pupil who is so far advanced in any disease as to infect others will be admitted.

COUNTY PAYS LOWEST SALARY IN THE STATE

It is learned since the resignation of Capt. T. A. Ball, who resigned the position of clerk to Surrogate Miller, that Oswego county pays for the position the lowest salary of any county in the State. Until Jan. 1, 1915, when the Board of Supervisors increased the pay Captain Ball received $600 a year and fees, but since the first of the year he has been getting $800 and fees.

Capt. Ball succeeded W. J. Pentelow who is the mayor of Corona, Calif.

INDOOR CIRCUS

What is perhaps one of the best exhibitions by trained animals seen in years is by the N. Y. Hippodrome winter or indoor circus that comes to The Quirk matinee and night one day only Monday, March 29th.

Included in the program is the star act given by Captain Andy Pryer's six trained bears. The animal go roller skating, indulge in an amusing drinking bout and perform many clever tricks. The animal act given in a large cage in which three lions, a bear, panther and leopard perform at the direction of Madame Evelyn, is a big feature; the trick dogs and ponies of Professor Bertinie are a show in themselves; while the riding act by the Seabert sisters, the Powell family in their wonderful feats on the wire, are features in the summer with the Barnum & Bailey circus. Comedy features are not overlooked, for Wilson & Lewis in their revolving ladder act offer a very clever stunt, while George Fasig makes good as a clown. The contortion act of Ed. McIntire is exceptionally good. There are 26 people in the company and the show is one well worth seeing.

AUTHOR OF SEA STORIES DEAD

Morgan Robertson, Born in Oswego, Died Wednesday in Atlantic City, N. J.

Concerning the death, Wednesday, of Morgan Robertson, author, The Oswego Times of yesterday says:

"Morgan Robertson, author of sea stories and native Oswegonian, was found dead late yesterday afternoon standing in his room in the Alamac Hotel, Atlantic City, his head resting on a shelf. A physician stated that death was due to an overdose of paraldehyde, which he had been taking for heart trouble, Mr. Robertson had gone to the seashore to recuperate from a nervous collapse and seemed to be improving.

"The announcement was first received here today by United Press wire to the Times and was heard with sincere regret by his many old associates and relatives here. It was known that Mr. Robertson had not been in good health, but there was no intimation that he was in a serious condition. He had made his home in New York for the past twenty years or more.

Born in Oswego

"Mr. Robertson was the son of the late Captain Andrew Robertson and Mrs. Ruth Glassford Robertson and was born in this city, September 30, 1861. He was educated in the Oswego public schools and Cooper Union, New York. Morg was not an apt pupil as he cared more for the great out of doors than for conning over books and problems. He loved the water and in his early youth aspired to be a sailor. His first experience in this line was as a child when he sailed on the lakes. His father was master of many well-known vessels, including the Samana and the Nevada, and was for several years harbormaster at this port.

"At sixteen Morgan ran away from home and shipped from New York on a square-rigged vessel that sailed around the world. 'It was on this voyage,' he wrote in a sketch of his life, 'that I learned my first lesson in brutality, that I saw for the first time the abuses the common sailor suffers, the wrongs I am now making it my business to expose in my sea stories.'

"At the age of twenty-one Robertson was a mate and a pilot. In 1886 he quit the sea and came back to Oswego to learn the watchmaker's trade. With the late Alexander Rhodes he took up the repair of marine clocks and compasses. A short time later he went to New York and opened a small jewelry shop. He was also a diamond cutter and setter. Owing to weakened eyesight, Morgan was obliged to give up his business and he worked at many different things even carrying a pack and peddling through the city and country.

His First Story

"Almost discouraged and about to give up, Robertson bethought himself of the sea and his many experiences on shipboard. He wrote his first story on the backs of circulars with the inverted kitchen washtub in his flat as a desk. His stories soon found favor and were especially popular with the officers and men of the United States navy. He became recognized as one of the foremost writers of sea stories of his time. Most of the characters of Mr. Robertson's stories were of well-known sailors and longshoremen of Oswego In some cases he took the real names and actual incidents from his life in this city.

"In his autobiography, published recently in the Saturday Evening Post, Robertson appeared to have given up the fight. He said that he had written himself out and that he had nothing in his lifetime of work. He seemed to be particularly downcast over the [illegible] to a Frenchman credit for inventing the periscope for submarines. The idea was Robertson's, but, before he could get it legally determined the Frenchman announced the discovery and got the credit.

"It is said that while running his jewelry shop Robertson learned that a friend of his was making $60 a week setting gems. He took up the work and was soon making big wages.

"Robertson was an omnivorous reader and was especially fond of Kipling, Dickens and Thackeray. He got the idea that he could write and first tried poetry. Failing in this he turned to prose and made an immediate success. As related above he wrote his first story in the kitchen sink. His wife was Miss Alice M. Doyle of New York, whom he married in 1894. In the autobiography he attributed his failure to secure a competence against old age to the fact that he was a sailor—a rolling stone, and congentially unable to retain what he had won.

"His best known stories are "A Tale of a Halo," "Spun Yarn," "Futility," "Where Angels Fear to Tread," "Masters of Men," "Shipmates," "Sinful Peck," "Down to the Sea," and "Finnegan."

"In his later years Mr. Robertson took a great interest in devices for increasing safety at sea and in submarines and appliances for their improvement. He invented a new type of periscope, and also an under-water searchlight.

"Mr. Robertson visited Oswego quite frequently early in his literary career but has not been home in at last twelve or fifteen years. One parents died many years ago. One summer he and his wife took a cottage at Beach Oswego and is said to have done considerable work on a novel there.

"Mrs. Morgan M. Wheeler of this city is a maternal aunt of Mr. Robertson. Mrs. Elliott B. Mott and M. P. Neal are among his cousins. His immediately survivors are his brothers William J. Robertson of Cleveland O. and Mrs. George Sheldon of Ashtabula, O. Nothing is known here as to the funeral arrangements.

BLAZE AT KNIFE WORKS

Fire was discovered at the Foster Knife Works at 10.50 this morning. The alarm was sounded from fire headquarters and the apparatus was hurried to the plant in West 1st st. The fire started in the tempering tank filled with oil and was probably caused by the steel not being cool enough to plung into its oil bath which almost always causes the oil to ignite.

The fire department aided by employes from the factory soon had the flames smothered by a quick application of chemicals, ashes and clay.

FULTON'S ORANGE CROP

Little Tree But Two Feet High Bears a Crop of Twenty Oranges.

Think of great golden oranges growing on a real orange tree in Fulton in March!

Mrs. Mortimer Rust of 217 Buffalo st. has in her proud possession this very tree. Twenty oranges, rich in color and of average size is the extent of the crop which the tree scarcely more than two feet in height has produced.

Four of the oranges still cling to the little tree, which is now, as is the custom, gradually shedding its leaves.

THOMAS ADAMS TELLS ABOUT TOWN PLANNING PRINCIPLES

Mr. Adams is adviser to the Commission of Conservation, Canada.

Town or city planning is the application of scientific principles to all matters connected with the town or city. The factors which constitute a city and the order in which they do so are:

1. Industry and external transportation.
2. Healthy living condition for the citizens.
3. Internal transportation.
4. Markets and food supply.
5. Education.
6. Recreation.
7. Civic center and monumental buildings.

The first object of the town plan should be to conserve and provide for the extension of its business interests, and to apply healthy conditions to both these objects, it is desirable to secure effeiency in transportation and in the supply and distribution of food, etc., and lastly it is needful to give expression to those communal and social interests which are represented in universities, schools, parks playgrounds, town halls, museums, churches, etc. In this matter we are considering not the ethical importance of these institutions, but their logical order in the planning and building up of the city.

The Object of the Town Plan.

The three things to be aimed at in city planning are convenience, amenity and proper sanitary conditions. Under convenience we include everything that pertains to the efficient discharge of business, its protection and extension, the width and construction of streets, the disposition of railway tracks and economic distribution generally. Under amenity we include light and air both in factory and home, proper regard for environment, the preservation of valuable physical features which cannot be recreated, such as forest trees, separation of factory from residential areas, regulations of heights of buildings, etc. In regard to proper sanitary provisions, the first essential in any city is its water supply, and complementary to that is an efficient system of sewage disposal. That matter affects the city life as a whole, but there are also those methods which can only be secured by proper action on the part of the individual citizen. In that respect we have to regulate the collection of the garbage and the cleaning up of backyards, etc. There is, of course, a certain overlapping in regard to these three objects, but they may be roughly classified as above. The heights of buildings, for instance, require to be regulated in relation to the traffic of the city—i. e., for convenience and economy—as well as for the purpose of amenity.

Convenience and Sanitation.

The functions of the engineer and his architect have to be more carefully considered than hitherto in regard to the town plan. In connection with convenience, we require the engineer to consider highways from the point of view of their planning and direction, as well as from the point of view of their construction. The lines, widths and direction of the main arterial roads are among the most important things to be considered in the planning of a city. The relation of these to the secondary streets of the town and the relation of both to the system of sewerage and water supply distribution are matters in regard to which he is the proper adviser. He it is, also, who has to consider questions of transportation by rail and waterway, and the location and planning of factory areas in relation to the railway and waterway system. It is obvious, of course, that he is the man to deal with the sewerage and water supply systems as a whole, so far as planning and construction are concerned.

The architect comes in in regard to these matters, to deal with the hygienic conditions in the factory and the home, the grouping and setting out of buildings in relation to the street, and necessarily in regard to all matters of architectural design as far as these affect convenience and sanitation. The architect should co-operate with the engineer in the planning which relates to these matters. The medical officer has his function to perform in criticising and correcting the work of the engineer so as to secure adequate protection for public health. All these professions have their interest in the part of the city plan which relates to convenience and sanitation, but the proper order in which they should advise is engineer, architect and medical officer. Mistakes are being made every day because we do not recognize this order.

Amenity

In regard to amenity we include the matters which almost entirely come within the domain of the architect, including the landscape architect, although in this regard it is the duty of the engineer to co-operate with the architect. The architect has to consider the height and character of buildings, the preservation of natural features, the position and layout of parks and play-grounds, the open spaces around dwellings and factories, the disposition and grouping of civic centers and public buildings.

Co-operation and Finance

I have referred to the necessity for co-operation between the architect and engineer. It is also necessary in connection with town planning to have co-operation between different municipalities and between different muncipalities and between municipalities and owners. Here comes in the work of administrator. We have to look to him for considerations of finance. For instance, there is the important question of spreading the cost of a scheme over a period of time so as to secure that the present generation will not pay for the benefits which will accrue to posterity, but that there shall be an even distribution of cost in proportion to benefit received. Secondly, there is the question of adjusting the cost and method of devolpment to the character of buildings to be erected. Street serving industrial areas should be of different construction from the streets serving residential areas and the latter streets should be of less width than the main thoroughfares.

The lawyer has also an important part to play in the preparation of town planning schemes, although his position is frequently disregarded until the effect of his advice is that the propositions of the architect and engineer are impracticable. As a matter of fact, the framing of the provisions of the scheme, their adjustment to legal conditions, the extent to which they are practical under existing law, etc., are vital considerations in connection with the preparation of town plans. That is why, in proper town planning, legislation is necessary as a preliminary to the preparation of town planning schemes. An engineer and an architect may visualize a fine scheme for laying out a city; it may be based on sound principles; it may be perfect from the public point of view; but what value is it if there is no machinery for carrying it out, and no means of giving its principles effect unless at prohibitive cost to the community? Before we can get effective town planning, therefore, we have to have the co-operation of the best skill which can be brought to bear upon it by the engineer, the architect and the lawyer, and each has an important function to perform throughout all stages of its preparation.

What a Town Planning Scheme Is.

This will be realized all the more with regard to the fact that a town planning scheme does not deal alone with the beautification of a city, but enters into the root questions of its economic and engineering development. Town planning schemes in Britain, such as those of Birmingham and Ruisip, include provisions with regard to the laying out of new streets, widening evisting streets, adjusting street boundaries, relaxing local by-laws, submission of estate subdivisions for municipal approval, modification of plan as circumstances change appropriation of land for specific purposes, fixing of building lines, determination of proportion of building land which should be covered with buildings, limitation of heights of buildings, fixing a maximum number of buildings to each acre, fixing of zones for industrial and residential purposes, prevention of nuisances, etc., and including the important questions of compensation for injury caused to property and of recovery of betterment caused by the scheme.

We see at once how necessary it is to have proper power to initiate and carry out a scheme both for the protection of the municipality and for the purpose of securing equity to the owners of land It has been suggested that in these matters land owners in Britain are willing to submit to restrictions which would not be acceptable to landowners in America. I think that is because we do not understand the extent to which land owners as a whole in a city will cooperate in securing right conditions when the restrictions affect them as a whole and not individually. Moreover, in America many of the larger owners of real estate have themselves begun to voluntarily apply restrictions and to carry out what we call private town plannning schemes. Much of what is suggested is to the effect that principles which owners of real estate fine beneficial to their own interest when applied to their estates should be made of general application, and should be extended to areas which are used for housing the poor as well as to those which are used for housing the well-to-do.

While the importance of legislation has to be emphasized, there is much that can be done by municipalities while waiting for it. Topographical maps of all cities require to be prepared. These maps

NEW YORKERS PLAY IN MIDSUMMER HEAT

Marlin, Tex., Mar. 26.—"Bob" Bescher yesterday accepted the terms offered him by the St. Louis National League club in the deal for Perritt, pitcher, and "Bob" will join the Cardinals at once. He receives an increase of salary over what the New York club was paying him and gets a long term contract also. He left with the Giants' second team and was with them in Sherman today.

McGraw will take his regulars to Dallas tonight for Saturday and Sunday games. Returning to the camp a game will be played with the Houston team Monday at Corsicana. Breaking camp on April 1, exhibition games will be played at Houston April 2 and at eBaumont April 3 and 4. The next game will be at New Orleans April 5 and the homeward march then taken up.

Hickory Johnson, catcher, and Foster Kinsella have left for Fort Smith to report to the St. Paul Club, and it was announced that "Mike" Flangan, pitcher, had been turned back to the Muscatine club, of the Central Association.

MILEAGE BOOK CASES TAKE INTO COURT

Whether or not the New York Central has the right to compel a passenger who procures a mileage exchange ticket to produce both the ticket and the mileage book upon which it was obtained to the conductor on the train will probably be delivered in an action which has been brought against the railroad company by a traveling man. The raveling man further seeks to recover damages for ejectment from the train because he did not have the mileage book.

Some time ago two traveling salesmen boarded a train at Theresa, both securing mileage exchange tickets on the same mileage book, owned by one of the men. One of them was bound for Utica and the other for Syracuse.

When they reached Philadelphia the man for Utica changed cars, taking the mileage book with him. The other man took his mileage exchange ticket and continued on his way to Syracuse, but had gone but a short distance from Philadelphia, when it is reported that he was ejected for nto having the mileage book.

BROOKFEDS SLAUGHTER SOUTHERN NINE, 25 to 1

McComb City, Miss., March. 26.—Lee Magee, manager of the Brookfeds confirmed the rumor emanating from Federals are training, that Cy Falkenberg and Benny Kauff would become members of his team. Magee declared that the transfer of these players was only the first move by him to give the baseball fans of Brooklyn the best kind of baseball they have had since the days of Ned Halon.

"The trade was made known before I wished," he said, "but this is not the only one I am to make. R. B. Ward told me to go ahead regardless of the cost and get him a real ball team, and I am going to do it. In Evans, Kauff and Anderson I have a fast outfield. These three hit .355, .306 and .310 respectivel ylast season."

The news of Kauff and Falkenburg's joining the Brookfeds had its effects on the players, in that it kept every one who participated in the exhibition game here today against the McComb City team upon his toes, with the result that the Brokfeds slaughtered the locals by a score of 25 to 1.

HARD-PRESSED TRUST

When J. Pierpont Morgan created the International Mercantile Marine Company, it was heralded as an ocean trust that would devour all competitors. It was predicted that steamship rates would soar skyward as the trust levied toll upon the commerce of the whole world.

The company did none of the things foretold of its career, and today its financial straits are such that its actual reorganization is being discussed. It has crumbled from its own excessive weight. It paid far too big a price for some of the underlying companies it absorbed. The result has been that it has never been able to earn a dividend on its water-logged stocks, and it is hard put to it to meet even the interest on its bonds. So long as men can build ships there never can be an ocean trust. The sea is an open highway for all. Let any company unduly increase rates and other ships will come to take the places of its ships. In reality, trusts which raise prices excessively immediately encourage new competitors, and trusts which can neither effect economies nor control competition are either harmless or soon suffer a financial paralysis. —Herald, Utica.

JEWISH PASSOVER BEGINS NEXT MONDAY

Pesach, the Jewish feast of Passover, begins next Monday evening. Services will be held in all synagogues that night; and Tuesday morning in most of them there will be a public sedan following the public devotions. During the evening sermons will be preached in keeping with the thoughts of the festival. Excerpts from, or in some cases the whole of the book, tre Song of Songs will be read.

The Passover is the seven-day festival observed by the Jew in the early spring in commemoration of the exodus from Egypt. In ancient Jewish life it was the first of the three pilgrom festivals upon which every male Jew was required to present himself in person at the central sanctuary in Jerusalem. Although the Passover has certain features in common with the universal Spring festival, it is its historical significance which gives it lasting vitality.

About Sports Generally

Some idea of the colossal task confronting Mike O'Nel, new pilot of the Syracuse Stars, may be obtained by a cursory glance at the talent now available. With but five players around which to build a winning aggregation in fulfilment of a recent promise to the fans. O'Neil faces a more or less serious problem.

At present the Stars boast of two outfielders in Manager O'Neil and Jimmie Riley; a first baseman, "Lefty" Russell, who will be retained; a pitcher, Fred Rawley, who worked the latter part of last season for Worcester, and two catchers. Snell and Soper. Thus it will be seen that, including himself, the new manager has but an even half dozen men to start the season.

O'Neil must secure a full pitching staff, for while Rawley pitched good ball for Worcester he has not yet attained the dignity of a veteran moundman. A shortstop, second baseman and third baseman, also must be locaed to fill the glaring vacancies on the infield and least one more outfielder must be obtained from some source.

Manager O'Neil is now at his home in Scranton, Pa., where he is quietly engaged in the task of weeding out a big list of candidates for the various positions on the club. That the failure of several minor leagues and the restrictions on the number of players to be carried by other clubs should prove a big factor in the work of the Star pilot is obvious.

With the close of the spring training period during the next few days the major leagues will cast an army of recruits adrift to be picked up by the minor leagues. Some of these man find their way to Syracuse.

Nathan Robbins of Syracuse Wednesday took over the advertising concession and program and cushion privileges at Star Park for the coming season. Robbins, whose home is in Syracuse, also has the privileges at the Utica baseball park.

HOT LINERS

When you hear the links-a-callin'
On the pleasant springtime days,
Like a siren cadence falling—
Why one naturally obeys.
And though business might be pullin'
You to go the other way—
Why you glance out of the window,
And then hasten out to play.

Fake interviews:

"I never claimed a pennant in my life.—Clark Griffith.

You're right, Clark, you never claimed it after there was no show of winning.

Listen to this: On behalf of a number of Utica fans who will organize themselves into a stock company. Infielder Dick Breen, who played second for the Uticas last season, has secured a 10-day option on the Utica franchise. Breen's friends are now trying to raise sufficient money to make the purchase. It is understood the present owners ask $20,000 for the franchise, but the prospective purchasers are willing to give them but $18,000.

Ralph Works, who pitched for the Syracuse Stars several years ago, has been given his unconditional release by the Kansas City American Association team. Works was drafted by Detroit from Syracuse and released to Providence of the International League two years ago. Since that time he has pitched for the Cincinnati Nationals, Indianapolis and Kansas City of the American Association.
